Mr. BURNES. The tellers were standing here making the count, and had progressed with it to a certain point when the demand for a quorum was withdrawn. I submit, therefore, that by the withdrawal of the demand the result of the vote should be announced.

The CHAIRMAN. The demand for a quorum was renewed instantly, before the result of the vote could be announced, by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. Is it in order to ask that the call of the roll be dispensed with by unanimous consent, so that we can make a motion that the committee rise and go home?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. CANNON. My object is, if the motion that the committee rise is agreed to, to follow it up by a further motion that the House adjourn.

Mr. SOWDEN. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the call of the roll.

Mr. EVERHART. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing is in order but the call of the roll.

Mr. VAN EATON. I make the point of order that no gentleman rose to call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. That point comes too late.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Adams, J. J.	Dingley,	Laird,	Reese,
Aiken,	Dockery,	Landes,	Robertson,

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having found itself without a quorum, the chairman had caused the roll to be called and now reported the names of the absentees.

The SPEAKER. It appears from the call of the roll that there are 144 absentees, and that a quorum is present. Under the rule the names of the absentees will be entered on the Journal, and the committee will resume its session.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SWINBURNE] desired me to ask that he be excused on account of sickness for to-day.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I rise to a question of information. When the roll was called in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to determine the question of a quorum the tellers were taking a vote. Will the count by tellers be the order of business when the House goes into committee on Monday?

The SPEAKER. The pending proposition will be the first one before the committee when it resumes its session on Monday, or at whatever time it shall do so.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent that to-night's session from 8 to 10 o'clock be devoted to the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill; and in view of the fact that if this be agreed to the evening session of to-night for pensions is interrupted, I ask that the Pension Committees have Monday night instead of to-night. This is Saturday, and I ask that there should be a session of only two hours to-night.

Mr. CONGER. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman from Iowa tell me the reason why he objects to the proposition?

Mr. CONGER. Will it do away with the evening session for pension bills?

The SPEAKER. Part of the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was that there should be a session on Monday evening to consider pension bills.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand the gentleman to have withdrawn his objection.

Mr. CONGER. No, sir.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. BAYNE. I move that the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn has precedence.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to inquire of the Chair what will be the result of that motion being adopted?

The SPEAKER. The House will adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MILLS, there were—ayes 30, noes 40.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House took a recess until 8 o'clock for the transaction of business under the special order.

EVENING SESSION.

The House at 8 o'clock was called to order by Mr. MATSON, as Speaker pro tempore, who directed the Clerk to read the following communication from the Speaker:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 12, 1886.

SIR: I hereby designate Hon. COURTLAND C. MATSON to preside at the session of the House this evening as Speaker pro tempore.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WINANS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar under the special order for this evening's session.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the special order. The Clerk will report the first bill.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentlemen present may be allowed to call up bills out of their regular order.

Mr. BRADY. I call for the regular order. All the cases as they stand on this Calendar are worthy and meritorious, so far as I am advised, and I think it best that they should be called up and considered in their regular order.

Mr. MATSON. Then I will make another request. I make it for the benefit of a gentleman here who is laboring under severe illness and excruciating pain, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANDES]. I ask that he may be allowed to call up two bills out of their order.

Mr. BRADY. I offer no objection to that. I may say my reason for not consenting to the first request of the gentleman is that members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions and of the Committee on Pensions have attended here night after night—I have been absent but one night during the entire session—and we have been unable to receive recognition to have our bills called up. I shall insist on the regular order, but not against the request made on behalf of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANDES].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANDES] may be permitted to call up two bills out of their regular order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JONATHAN S. LENTS.

Mr. LANDES. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6425) granting a pension to Jonathan S. Lents.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jonathan S. Lents, late a private in Company K, One hundred and forty-third Regiment of Indiana Infantry Volunteers, at the rate of $8 per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 8, strike out the words "at the rate of $8 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

Th bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CATHERINE REISINGER.

Mr. LANDES. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 5950) granting a pension to Catherine Reisinger.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catherine Reisinger, widow of Martin Reisinger, late a private in Company B, Twenty-fifth Regiment Indiana Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar falling within the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4097) for the relief of William J. Owings.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that that bill be passed over informally. It is a bill as to which there is some question.

There was no objection, and the bill was passed over informally.

WILLIAM P. SHELTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3851) granting a pension to William P. Shelton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William P. Shelton, late of Company A, First Alabama Cavalry Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES N. SEBASTIAN.

Mr. HAYNES. The bill before that upon the Calendar was passed over informally at the last meeting in order that we might have a fuller report. I ask to have it taken up at this time. I have papers here, which will enable me to give whatever explanation may be required.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection the bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles N. Sebastian, late of Company A, Second New Hampshire Volunteers.

Mr. HAYNES. Mr. Chairman, as I have stated, this bill was passed over informally at the last meeting upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE]. The report read at that time was the report of the Senate committee, which was adopted by the House committee. It was incomplete to this extent, that it stated the general conclusions of the committee without giving any of the evidence upon which they were based. I have obtained papers from the Pension Office which will enable me to make a statement of the material part of the evidence, and I will make it as brief as I can.

On the question of prior soundness there are three affidavits of neighbors of Sebastian who had known him from early childhood and who testify to his soundness prior to entering the Army. There are also affidavits of two of his prison associates, who testify to his having been afflicted with the troubles for which he claims—gastritis and pericarditis—while he was a prisoner of war. He has a hospital record, the report from the Surgeon-General's Office showing that he was treated at various times in various hospitals for chills and fever and also for other troubles. The surgeons' certificates as to his present condition are two in number and are conflicting. The first is by Dr. Kittringe, who is a reputable physician—in fact, his being an examining surgeon of the Pension Office would attest his professional standing.

This report is dated July 30, 1881. The doctor says:

I find tenderness over the pit of the stomach. He says his food distresses him; stomach becomes sour and painful; bowels constipated; obliged to take physic very constantly to move the bowels; also percussion or pressure over the region of the heart produces acute pain. Pulse irregular; easily put out of breath; can not move or act quick; is obliged to lie on right side; put in pain if on the left side or back.

This physician gives him a half rating in each of these disabilities.

As against that, there is the report of the examining board of surgeons at Keene, N. H., two years later (March 7, 1883), who say:

We find no evidence of the above disease and find the claimant in good physical condition.

The practice of the committee has been where all the reports of examining surgeons are unfavorable to discard the claim, but where there is a disagreement of doctrines, as there is in this instance, and the case is well established, I think the general rule has been to report the claim favorably and give the claimant the benefit of another examination. Of course if this bill passes this claimant will be ordered before a board for examination, and if the finding of that board is the same as the finding of the Keene examining board he will get no rating and no pension. This, in brief, is a statement of the evidence in the case. It is sufficient to my mind to induce me to vote for the bill. Every member will, of course, act on his own judgment.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JACOB NIX.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8334) for the relief of Jacob Nix.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Jacob Nix, who served as a captain in the Brown County (Minnesota) militia during the attack of Indians upon New Ulm, Minn., August, 1862, and grant him the pension as a captain, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM HICKS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1681) for the relief of William Hicks.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of William Hicks, late of Company D, Fifth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CASSIUS H. ROBINSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4624) for the relief of Cassius H. Robinson:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Cassius H. Robinson, late of Company E, Ninety-second New York Volunteers, a pension at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension now paid to him, from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WINANS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear the report in that case.

Mr. PARKER. The report is quite long. I think I can state the facts in briefer form, and then if the gentleman still wishes to hear the whole report, of course I shall have no objection.

Mr. WINANS. I will be satisfied with a statement.

Mr. PARKER. The case is this: Cassius H. Robinson was first lieutenant of Company E, Ninety-second New York Volunteers. His war service was very creditable. At the battle of Fair Oaks he was run over by an artillery horse, throwing him against a log and injuring him severely. In 1882 he had a stroke of paralysis, and, though afterward recovering a little, soon began to fail in body and mind. The injuries he suffered are distinctly proved by several witnesses. It also appears that in his present condition he is obliged to have the constant service of an attendant; has to be dressed and undressed, and have his food prepared for him; he is confined to his house most of the time, and can not raise his left foot from the ground without using an elastic fastened from the toe of the boot and going around his neck.

He is now receiving $30 a month. The last examining board, under date of September 30, 1885, made this report on his case:

We find the arm and leg atrophied, the fingers of left hand contracted; the left foot drags, and he can not raise it without help; he wears a strap from around his neck and attached to the left foot to raise it; he is obliged to use a crutch and cane; the claimant has no piles; can not now say that he had tenderness of the spine. From his appearance and statements it is our opinion that he requires the constant attendance and regular aid of another person. From the existing condition and the history of this claimant, as stated by himself, it is, in our judgment, probable that the disability was incurred in the service, as he claims, and that it has not been prolonged or aggravated by vicious habits. He is, in our opinion, entitled to a total first-grade $50 rating for the disability caused by injury to spine and resulting paralysis.

On this last certificate of the surgeons, dated September, 1885, this additional pension is asked, the evidence showing, as I have said, that he needs constant help.

Mr. WINANS. Why could he not get at the Pension Office the pension which this bill proposes to grant him.

Mr. PARKER. Because the Pension Office saw fit to rate him at $30 a month instead of $50. This was done for no reason of which I am aware, and in the face of the certificate I have read, which is not controverted in any way. I have recited what the report states, and I know the facts to be substantially as stated. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. CATHARINE SATTLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6832) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine Sattler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catharine Sattler, surviving widow of Julius Sattler, late a private soldier in Company A, Seventh Regiment of New York State Volunteers.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. PINDAR) was read, as follows:

Claimant is the widow of Julius Sattler, a private in Company A, Seventh New York Volunteers. He enlisted March 16, 1864, and was discharged March 22, 1865; was pensioned at $8 per month, commencing March 22, 1865, for gunshot wound of left fore-arm, requiring amputation August 11, 1866; increased to $15 per month, commencing June 6, 1866, for same; soldier was drowned on or about October 31, 1867, in North River; widow filed her declaration for pension July 8, 1884, which was rejected upon the ground that death was caused from drowning.

The testimony of Albert Seeman and George Bruder, comrades, shows that they served in the same regiment with soldier. That they were well acquainted with him, and had free intercourse with him up until time of his death; that soldier was employed as a night watchman in the United States bonded warehouse, Washington street, New York, and his monthly pay was $50—that he had drawn same day of his disappearance; that his body was found November 13, 1867, in North River, at the foot of West Thirteenth street, New York city, without hat, coat, watch, or money; that they knew said soldier to be a strong, healthy man, of regular habits, until loss of arm, who could have well defended himself against attack from murderers, or save himself from drowning but for loss of his left arm; and that the claimant is poor, and no one to care for her.

The committee, in consideration of this case, believe that, as the soldier at the time of his death was a pensioner, having lost an arm in the service of his country, that by his death the widow is deprived of his support, and, being poor and needy, is entitled to the relief asked; and while there is no doubt that soldier's death was caused by drowning, we are unable to say that he may not have saved himself therefrom had he not lost his arm in the service. We deem it safe to conclude that the loss of soldier's arm contributed to his death.

Your committee do therefore recommend that the widow be granted the relief sought, and that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE H. LAURENCE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1617) for the relief of George H. Laurence.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and required to increase the pension of George H. Laurence, now a pensioner of the United States, late a first lieutenant and brevet major of Company C, Second Regiment New York Mounted Rifles Volunteers, United States Army, and who has become almost blind from causes due to the service of the United States; that such increase pension shall be at the rate of $100 per month, and shall begin from the 1st day of December, 1883, and shall be paid at the same time and in the same manner as other pensions are now paid.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the words "United States Army" in line 7, and insert "to $30 per month."

Mr. BLANCHARD. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. PINDAR) was read, as follows:

The claimant is now receiving a pension of $17 per month for gunshot wound of spine, blindness, and kidney disease. He asks that his pension be increased to $100 per month.

The certificate of the examining board, made May 20, 1885, is as follows:

"We find a cicatrix of wound located over the right upper angle of the sacrum one-half inch long, one-quarter inch wide, not depressed, adherent, or tender, and no loss of tissue. Examination of urine shows no disease of kidneys. Measurement of limbs shows no muscular atrophy or other evidence of paralysis at present. Applicant has suffered extirpation of right eye and has had iridectomy performed on left eye. But we fail to connect this disability with his Army service, or as a result of an injury to his spine, occurring twenty years prior, inasmuch as there is no existing paralysis to connect the two, and the board think that paralysis, resulting from spinal injury, sufficient to cause blindness would leave some evidence of itself, and would not be entirely outgrown or overcome in two years. Therefore we fail to rate for the blindness. In regard to applicant's claim of deafness, the symptoms are largely subjective.

"With the exception of a slight retraction of the left ear-drum, there are no positive physical evidences of deafness. Total loss of bone conduction on both sides. He hears the watch faintly when pressed close against the left ear. But while the evidences of deafness in this case are largely subjective, he could not be caught by any of our efforts to try his hearing, and he has the characteristic actions of a deaf man. Therefore we believe his statements, and rate him for total deafness of the right ear and severe deafness of the left ear. He is, in our opinion, entitled to one-half total ratings for disability, caused by gunshot wound of lower part back and one-half total for that caused by deafness."

The official examing surgeon, Horatio Loomis, M. D., of Buffalo, N. Y., in 1866, says:

"In my opinion the said George H. Laurence's disabilities from the cause aforesaid is a total. A ball passed across the loins at the junction of the lumbar vertebræ with sacrum; wound healed. He had also a concussion of the head from a passing shell or cannon-ball, producing partial deafness in both ears. He has pain and weakness in the back, with scanty, high-colored urine, which is highly detrimental. General health bad. Is weak and emaciated. He is wholly unfit for manual labor."

H. N. Loomis, United States examining surgeon, in 1867, certifies to a continuous total disability, as stated in 1866.

R. H. Tuft, United States examining surgeon, in 1869, says:

"A ball penetrated the back at the junction of the lower third of the after lower vertebræ with sacrum, and in my belief the ball has become encysted. The above-named pensioner has partial deafness, the result of concussion of the head."

In 1870 R. H. Tuft, United States examining surgon, certifies to increased disabilities:

"The increased disabilities originate entirely from the injuries or disease on account of which said Laurence was originally pensioned, as follows: The ball, which penetrated the back at the lower third of the vertebræ, has become encased, and produces a partial paralysis of the inferior extremities. He suffers much pain in the lumbar regions, and in urinating passes quantities of blood. He had also a concussion of the head, causing partial deafness in both ears. The disabilities increase, and he is at this time totally unfit and unable to gain a livelihood from manual labor, and unfit for business, owing to the said excessive disabilities caused by the injury."

The United States examining surgeon at Elkton, Md., in 1871, certified that—

"The ball, which penetrated the back at the lower third of the vertebræ, has become encased, and produces a partial paralysis of the inferior extremeties. He suffers much pain in the lumbar regions, and in urinating passes quantities of blood. He had also a concussion of the head from a passing shell or ball. Health bad; weak, and emaciated, caused by exposure in confederate prisons. He is at this time totally unfit for manual labor, owing to the disabilities caused by the aforesaid injuries."

The Brooklyn board of United States examining surgeons, Drs. McCollum, Leighton, and Atwood, in 1873, certify as follows:

"A gunshot wound across the back at supreme border of sacrum; spinal nerves and lower limbs have suffered in consequence of said injury to spine; he alleges pain in the back, pain in the left side, weakness of lower extrimities; occasionally bloody urine, and impaired hearing."

In 1875 the Brooklyn board of United States examining surgeons certified to the following facts:

"Missile entered at top of sacrum on right side, and is supposed to be lodged somewhere in left side of pelvis or hip. The muscles of the left limb are much emaciated and the back is weak; hearing of both ears impaired from concussion."

In 1884 the following evidence was forwarded to the Pension Department by your petitioner's family physician, A. A. Wemmell, M. D., of East New York, Long Island:

"This certifies that George H. Laurence is now and has been confined to his house and under medical treatment since November 30, 1883, for paralysis, embolism of central artery of retina of the right eye, organic disease of heart and kidneys, spinal irritation, anæmia, deafness, &c. On November 18, 1883, he was suddenly seized with vertigo and paralysis; shortly after he noticed that the right eye was dim, and about twenty minutes from the outset of the attack the sight was entirely gone, causing partial blindness of the other eye. He now suffers from acute pains in head, heart, kidneys, and spine. The remote cause—gunshot wound which penetrated junction of lumbar vertebra with the sacrum, concussion of head from shell or cannon-ball, producing deafness, anæmia, &c. In my opinion the above enumerated disabilities were contracted while in the military service of the United States of America."

This evidence is sworn to and on file in the Pension Office at Washington, D. C. Pensioned for gunshot wounds of back, kidney disease, deafness, the result of concussion of head. Total: first lieutenant's pension, $17; certificate No. 81644, dated May 23, 1867.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all therein after line 7, and inserting the words "thirty dollars per month," and that the bill as amended do pass.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

SOPHIA BEELER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7869) to increase the pension of Sophia Beeler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in consideration of the gallant services of Maj. Abram Beeler, of Illinois, deceased, a paymaster in the United States Army, who lost his life in preventing the capture of the steamer Belle Saint Louis, on the Mississippi River, in the month of October, 1864, and by which a great amount of public money was prevented from falling into the hands of the enemy, the sum of $15 per month be added to the pension of his widow, Sophia Beeler, of Carroll County, Illinois.

Mr. BRADY. There is an adverse report in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The report in this case being adverse, the question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it lie on the table?

The question was decided in the affirmative.

JAMES ROBINSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7169) to grant a pension to James Robinson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Robinson, late of Company F, Fortieth Regiment United States Infantry.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. O'HARA) was read, as follows:

The claimant enlisted in the service of the United States on the 4th day of May, 1867, and was discharged April 2, 1869. Certificate of discharge shows soldier suffering from inguinal hernia on the left side; can not wear a truss with comfort.

Soldier contracted hernia while in the line of duty and in the service of the United States, at Castle Pinckney, S. C., February, 1868, caused by lifting a barrel of flour while serving as a baker. The evidence in this case is abundant, and ought to have been conclusive in the Pension Office, showing that soldier was detailed as a baker, and that while lifting a barrel of flour he received a strain resulting in hernia, on account of the barrel slipping from the dough-trough; that he has suffered from said hernia to the present. Medical examiners rate him one-half total on account of said inguinal hernia.

"The testimony in the case tends to show that claimant's allegations are correct. It also appears from an examination of the certificate of disability that the captain's indorsement is not corroborated by the surgeon, which would undoubtedly have been done provided said indorsement was correct. That the question as to whether the injury was incurred in the line of duty was not answered by the surgeon leads one to the belief that he did not desire to take direct issue with Captain Welch, and so made no comments upon said subject-matter. A ground of belief that claimant was sound at date of enlistment exists by reason of the fact that in 1867 no exigencies of the service existed whereby unsound men would be deemed suitable for the service. The claim is submitted for admission. The claim was rejected on the ground that it is shown by the records of the War Department that the disability was not incurred in the line of duty. The evidence furnished by the claimant and that obtained by the special examiner is not, in my opinion, sufficient to controvert that record."

This finding for rejection is made by the legal reviewer, one Dalton, who appeared to have decided the case against the soldier solely because the record made by the captain on soldier's certificate of discharge was not in favor of the soldier, ignoring, however, the disagreement between the captain and surgeon in making the record as found and stated by the special examiner. That a soldier should be denied a right upon evidence he did not make, was not a party to, nor had any control over, and his (soldier's) testimony with other corroborating testimony in his behalf not considered worthy of credence upon the mere dictum of one officer, we are not prepared to admit.

Your committee are of the opinion that soldier incurred the disability complained of in the line of duty while in the service of the United States; that he is entitled to a pension; therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANNA A. PROBERT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3610) granting a pension to Anna A. Probert.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Anna A. Probert, widow of George C. Probert, late a first lieutenant in the Third Ohio Cavalry, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it be laid on the table. Two weeks ago we passed a similar bill for the relief of the same person.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Do I understand that the committee has made two favorable reports in favor of the same person?

Mr. MORRILL. There were two bills introduced granting a pension to this lady, one being introduced by some member from Ohio, the other by a member from Kansas. I reported favorably the latter bill; my colleague on the committee [Mr. ELLSBERRY] reported the former. The bill reported by me has passed, rendering the passage of this bill unnecessary.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then it is a fact that the Committee on Invalid Pensions reported two bills in favor of the same person?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir. It was an oversight, of course.

The motion of Mr. MORRILL that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid on the table was agreed to.

ANN KINNEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5389) granting a pension to Ann Kinney.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ann Kinney, widow of Edward Kinney, late a private in Company E, Seventy-seventh Ohio Infantry Volunteers, to date from the death of said Kinney.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the reading of the report in that case.

The report (by Mr. ELLSBERRY) was read, as follows:

Ann Kinney is the widow of Edward Kinney, who was a private in Company E, Seventy-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, who was upon the pension-rolls at $18 per month from 1862 until the time of his death, which occurred September 5, 1875. Mrs. Kinney filed her claim November 28, 1877, alleging that her husband died from the effects of his wounds received at the battle of Shiloh. The Pension Office disputed this fact and alleged that death ensued from the result of a drunken spree, as Kinney was said to have been addicted to the intemperate use of liquors, and for this reason the widow's claim was rejected. Only two witnesses are brought up to sustain this allegation—one of them the postmaster of Bellaire, Ohio, and the other the city marshal of the same place. These two persons were not even sworn when giving this testimony, and as both were persons who disliked Kinney, it is not probable they would say anything in his favor. On the other hand, a large amount of testimony, sworn to, was adduced by Mrs. Kinney to the effect that her husband was subject to epileptic fits, and that death ensued from congestion of the brain while in one of those fits. In view of these facts, and that the unsworn testimony of the persons stated seems to be all upon which the rejection of the claim was based, your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. WINANS. I move to amend by strking out at the end of the bill the words "to date from the death of said Kinney."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ERASTUS W. KENNEDY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8046) granting a pension to Erastus W. Kennedy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Erastus W. Kennedy, late a private in Company K, Ninth Regiment Michigan Infantry Volunteers.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

After the words "pension-roll," in line 4, insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Mr. BLANCHARD. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

Your committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8046) granting a pension to Erastus W. Kennedy, have carefully examined the same, and find that said soldier enlisted in Company K, Ninth Michigan Infantry, February 24, 1864, and was discharged July 3, 1865. His claim for pension was not allowed because of his inability to furnish the testimony of commissioned officers or comrades of the origin of his disability in the service.

He states that he was taken suddenly sick at or near Goldsborough, N. C., and sent away to hospital from the camp of the Thirty-eighth Indiana Infantry, in which regiment he was a comparative stranger; that he never returned to that regiment, and knows nothing of members thereof. The records of the Surgeon-General show that Erastus W. Kennedy, private, company unassigned, Ninth Michigan Volunteers, entered general hospital, New Berne, N. C., April 5, 1865, from quarters with typhoid fever, and was transferred to Beaufort April 7, 1865, and May 10 sent by steamer to Portsmouth Grove, R. I. His military history, as given by the Adjutant-General, shows that he was absent from his regiment on detached duty, and the claimant says he with others from different regiments was employed in guarding a bridge over Chickamauga Creek, under command of Lieutenant Callahan, of Indiana; also in guarding trains in various places. When Sherman started for Atlanta he was put in with the Thirty-eighth Indiana Infantry, and was taken sick as stated above.

His examination by the board of surgeons at Ann Arbor reveals the following facts in support of his statement:

"His tongue coated, and skin cold, clammy, and moist with venous congestion. Abdomen somewhat constricted in upper portion; tenderness in region of liver and over stomach and right iliac region. Liver not materially enlarged. Examination of rectum reveals numerous ulcers on the posterior portion, with several small internal hemorrhoidal tumors; also several small tumors on lateral and anterior sides. Heart irregular in action, and feeble, with marked bellows murmur. A short walk sent action of heart to 136 and breathing to 36. We think the disease of the heart may be fairly attributed to the result of diarrhea. He is, in our opinion, entitled to a total rating, caused by stomach disease, chronic diarrhea, and heart disease.

Dr. C. W. Haze, of Pinckney, Mich., testifies:

"I have known Erastus W. Kennedy from a boy from twelve to seventeen years old; never knew him to be sick; he was in good health up to that age. Have prescribed for him since he came out of the Army for chronic diarrhea and occasionally alarming symptoms of neuralgia of the heart."

Dr. Sigler says:

"I have been his family physician for the past ten years; have treated him frequently for gastralgia, accompanied by severe pain in the region of the heart. I have noticed a blowing sound with first sound of heart, indicating a lesion of mitral valve. He can not perform more than one-half day's labor."

The professional standing of the above physicians is first class, and there is no doubt as to the present disability of claimant or his soundness prior to enlistment, and that his habits and character are good. The hospital record shows long and severe illness while in service, contracted in the Atlanta campaign. His detached service, covering nearly the whole term, prevents his furnishing the evidence of officers or comrades of his regiment or company, and seems to be the only reason his claim is not allowed by the Commissioner of Pensions.

We think this is clearly a case for Congressional relief, and therefore recommend an amendment. After "pension-roll" insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and that the bill do pass.

The amendment reported by the committee was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EDWARD CORNING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1666) granting a pension to Edward Corning.

The bill was read at length.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the Committee to the fact that the engrossed Senate bill appears to have been amended by the House Committee, and it is difficult to determine exactly what its status is.

Mr. NEECE. I think that we ought to consider the bill as originally engrossed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair directed the Clerk in the first instance to read the bill as originally engrossed; but there appears to have been an amendment added to the Senate engrossed bill by some error.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The amendment, as I understand it, makes the bill subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks on reading the bill that that provision is incorporated in the body of the bill; but there is another amendment appended to the end of it which appears to have been added by a mistake. The Chair is not informed how the amendment is appended to the bill, but perhaps the Committee on Invalid Pensions or the gentleman who reported it can explain the change proposed.

Mr. SWOPE. The form in which it was read at the desk seems to be the form in which it came from the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. But there is an erasure of a line of the engrossed bill of the Senate and an amendment appended by the committee.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. It is possibly an amendment of the House to the Senate bill, and of course if adopted in that form will necessitate sending the bill back to the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposes that the words which have been appended to the bill were intended by the committee of the House as an amendment; but it is an amendment which has been inserted in the engrossed bill, which is a mistake.

Mr. BRADY. I understand the gentleman who reported the bill to say that it was read exactly as it came from the Senate.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. We should be certain of that, because if this is a Senate amendment the bill would not have to go back.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that the better way to ascertain that fact would be to recommit the bill to the committee.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. With the understanding that it will retain its place on the Calendar when again reported.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then I move that it be recommitted.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I would prefer that should not be done if an explanation can be made here. I know the parties interested in the bill and I hope that it will pass promptly.

The CHAIRMAN. But no gentleman present has stated the exact facts in regard to the bill; and if an amendment is recommended it should be acted upon.

Mr. MATSON. I think I can explain the matter to the satisfaction of the committee. The bill as passed by the Senate provided a pension of $20. The Committee on Invalid Pensions thought that was not right, and that he should be pensioned according to his disability, leaving the rating to the Pension Office. The amendment upon the bill I am satisfied was placed there through a misapprehension, and most probably by one of the clerks of the committee. When it was suggested in the committee that such an amendment was agreed to, doubtless he placed it there through inadvertence in place of putting it in the usual form for action by the House.

Mr. PARKER. Why not pass the bill as it appears to have been amended?

Mr. MATSON. I was going to say that the manifest purpose of the committee is that the words "at the rate of twenty dollars a month" should be stricken out.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman's statement exactly comports with the report of the Senate committee.

The CHAIRMAN. But there seems to be a different amendment written on the engrossed copy of the bill.

Mr. NEECE. I make the point of order that the proper way is to pass the bill, if we pass it at all, in the shape it came from the Senate, and then offer the amendment voted by the House committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the difficulty of the plan suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is that as the bill now stands it appears as a Senate bill with a line erased and an amendment made to it, all of which is certified to by the Secretary of the Senate. Evidently this is a misapprehension, and it would probably create confusion if the bill was amended in the shape proposed and returned to the Senate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I insist upon the motion to recommit the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is in order; and the gentleman from Indiana requests that when the bill be again reported it be entitled to its present place upon the Calendar.

The motion of Mr. BLANCHARD was then agreed to.

SETH M. BARTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8278) for the relief of Seth M. Barton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. (two thirds of each House concurring therein), That all political disabilities imposed upon Seth M. Barton, a citizen of Virginia, by the fourteenth article of amendments to the Constitution of the United States, be, and the same are hereby, removed.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

J. R. EGGLESTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8192) to remove the political disabilities of J. R. Eggleston, of Mississippi.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That J. R. Eggleston, of the State of Mississippi, is hereby relieved of all political disabilities imposed upon him by the third section of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and the same are hereby removed.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SUSAN HAWES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7234) granting a pension to Susan Hawes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Susan Hawes on the pension-roll of the United States, subject to the rules and limitations of the pension laws, she being the mother of Jeremiah H. Hawes, late a private in Howe's battery, Company G, Fourth Artillery, United States Army.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would inquire if the reading of the report has been called for?

I want to say just at this point, we have in the last two minutes passed two bills to remove political disabilities of men who fought against our Government and attempted to destroy it. The reports in these cases were not called for. Now we have a bill before us to pension some poor woman whose husband or brother or son suffered in the war of the rebellion and very likely died as a result of fighting for the country. Now I understand a demand is made for the reading of the report, which will necessarily consume considerable time, and if persisted in in all cases will leave many on the Calendar for the reading of the report when Congress finally adjourns. I wish to say further that I presume we have had fifty or possibly a hundred reports read in the meetings of this House on bills of this character, and in not one single instance has a bill been rejected because of any fact developed by the reading of the report.

Now, I submit to the gentlemen present to-night that we ought to be generous to these poor soldiers, and that we ought not to consume the time unnecessarily in reading reports that amount to nothing.

I may state that when I went home a short time ago I was called to go to a poor-house in my State and see a soldier who fought all through the war, who suffered untold agonies in rebel prisons, a man who is completely broken down because of his loyal devotion to the flag of his country. That man to-day is in the poor-house in my State; and, as I understand, a bill is to be presented to this House, if it has not already been presented, to give him some degree of relief. I trust when it comes up for consideration it may not be unnecessarily delayed, as he needs the pension now, and will be dead before it is granted if these dilatory methods prevail.

Again, I was called to see the widow of a poor soldier. I saw her in a field picking stones and lifting them into a cart to gain a subsistence for herself and her children. That woman's application may very likely come to Congress. It is now before the Pension Office, and is hung up there on a technicality. I submit on behalf these poor men, on behalf of these poor women, it is not right that we should consume the time of these sessions in reading reports that amount to nothing, every bill being passed after the reports are read. If we can afford to sit here and have bills passed to remove political disabilities of men who fought against our flag without reading reports, I submit the time should not be consumed in reading reports on bills to pension soldiers or their widows.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If the gentleman who has just addressed the committee had not consumed so much time in his remarks this bill would probably have been passed before now.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a right to call attention to the way in which time is being consumed.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And I have a right to call for the reading of the reports.

Mr. GALLINGER. All right.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And I propose to do it.

Mr. GALLINGER. The gentleman can keep right on doing so.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And I do not propose that the gentleman from New Hampshire shall lecture me in the exercise of my right. There are but a handful in this House of the three hundred and twenty-five members who constitute the Forty-ninth Congress. There is not one-sixth of a quorum here to-night.

None of us here who represent ex-confederate constituencies have stood here and called a quorum on any of these bills.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why do you not do it?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I submit it comes with very bad grace from my friend from New Hampshire to find fault with us because we ask for the reading of the reports in order that we may be informed as to the merits of these bills that we are called to vote upon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would ask the gentleman, did he understand all the facts as to those bills to remove political disabilities?

Mr. BLANCHARD. We all know political disabilities are removed as a matter of course when the party who asks it petitions Congress to do it.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is in the discretion of Congress, however, to pass these bills or not, and the gentleman from Louisiana seemed very willing to let them pass without inquiring into the facts.

Mr. BLANCHARD. We are asked by the gentleman from New Hampshire to allow these pension bills to be simply read and then put on their passage, voting entirely in the dark as to the merits of the bills, not knowing whether the case be a deserving one or not.

This very matter has been called to the attention of the American people by the President of the United States recently, and he has told them that much of this pension legislation is crude and ill-considered. And once at least during this Congress a number of these bills—so report says—were passed at the other end of this Capitol without the bills being read.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit we are not responsible for what is done at the other end of the Capitol. Nor is it proper or parliamentary to allude to that.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That may be. It is nevertheless a fact that these bills have been passed at the other end of this Capitol without being read, and if that course is pursued there there is the greater reason why those of us who come to these evening sessions——

Mr. JACKSON. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman from Louisiana has no right to comment on how bills are passed in the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I was going to say because that practice has been indulged in by the other Chamber there is the greater reason why we, in this Chamber, should insist on these reports being read, that we may be informed on the merits of these pension cases and that the country may be informed on them.

Now I submit that in asking that these reports be read none of us who do it are doing anything for which we should be censured by any gentleman upon this floor, and we are doing something for which I am sure we shall be applauded by the American people without regard to sections.

Mr. BAYNE. Let me ask my friend from Louisiana a question. With reference to these bills, do we not have to rely to a large extent upon the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

Mr. BLANCHARD. We do, largely.

Mr. BAYNE. Is it not a fact known to the gentleman that that committee has been very attentive to its duties, and has made a great many adverse reports, as well as favorable ones?

Mr. BLANCHARD. So I am informed.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman knows also that according to the statement of the chairman of that committee a great many cases were not even adversely reported, the committee preferring to lay them aside rather than put them in that category.

Mr. BLANCHARD. So I understand

Mr. BAYNE. Now, is not the gentleman willing to accept the conclusions arrived at in these cases by that committee? It will be borne in mind that when these bills come here favorably reported by the committee, without any minority report, we really have in each case the unanimous report of a committee which has given the matter very close and laborious attention, each case being separately examined and the report upon it submitted to the full committee, or to a majority of the committee.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will ask my friend a question by way of answer to his. If we should pursue the course he suggests with respect to the reports which come in here from the Committee on Invalid Pensions—that is to say, if we absolutely accept their judgment in every case where the report is unanimous—why should we not do the same as respects every other committee of this House?

Mr. BAYNE. Do not we do it with respect to almost every private claim? If a member gets up here and asks consent for the passage of a private claim and states that it is unanimously reported by the committee from which it comes, who questions it?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have seen many private bills other than pension bills upon which there was a favorable report contested on this floor. The gentleman's argument, if it had any force, would apply to all the committees of the House.

Why should we not accept, for example, every bill that comes with the unanimous report of the Committee on Appropriations, or the Committee on Ways and Means, or the Committee on Public Lands, or any of the other committees of the House? There is not a bit more reason why we should accept unquestioningly the judgment of the Committee on Invalid Pensions than there is why we should accept the judgment of any other committee of the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, let me say, in response to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], why I think these cases are different from private claims or bills which come from other committees. These reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions deal with slight technicalities as between the Pension Office and the claimant or between the Pension Office and the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Nine-tenths of them are based on mere technicalities. Then, too, they do not involve any great amount of money, and hence they are on a different basis, as I look at it, from private claims reported from the other committees. Of course each gentleman is entitled to his own view.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Every one of these bills that we pass at these pension sessions, when usually only a handful of Representatives are present, is an exception to the general law. We pass general laws pensioning persons who are disabled by wounds or sickness incurred in the line of service. Under those laws applicants go to the Pension Office and apply for pensions. Their cases are rejected for one reason and another, mostly because of insufficient proof. Then they come here and we make their cases exceptional by passing these bills. I yield now to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CROXTON].

Mr. CROXTON. Mr. Chairman, I regret extremely that the only bill that I have ever asked to have passed since I have been a member of this House should have led the distinguished gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to make it the basis of a speech to show that all pension bills should pass here without the reports being read. Especially do I regret it in view of the fact that I sat here silent without uttering a word or making a sign when a bill was presented which would have made terrible confusion if it had passed in the form in which it was presented.

I have never opposed any pension bill or said a word about any pension bill. I presume the gentleman is aware that if there is any just reason why the political disabilities of Mr. Barton should not be removed, after his case has been favorably reported upon by the appropriate committee, I am not to blame for it, and I beg to assure these gentlemen that in all human probability I shall never again present myself where I shall have an opportunity of confusing the pension-seekers. I bid them good-night.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, so far as the Committee on Invalid Pensions is concerned, that committee is not disposed to criticise any gentleman for asking to have the reports in these cases read. It is, perhaps, not just the thing for the members of the committee to ask to have them read, because we might be accused of attempting to inflict our literature upon an unwilling House; but if any gentleman desires to hear the report in any given case I am sure he is not to be criticised on that account by the committee, and I do not think he ought to be criticised by anybody. In my judgment no gentleman should be criticised for wishing to vote intelligently; and even if it be assumed that a gentleman has read the report in any given case, it is impossible for him to remember the facts of every case. It seems to me, therefore, entirely proper for any gentleman who desires it to ask for the reading of the report in any of these cases.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, the word "criticism" has been applied to my remarks by two or three gentlemen here to-night. I simply made an appeal to the generosity of the House in behalf of poor and suffering soldiers, and if I made any unjust criticism upon any gentleman it certainly was done unintentionally.

Mr. MATSON. I think we can allow the House to be informed by the reading of the reports and still have time to pass all these pension bills. I do not think any gentleman is disposed to ask for the reading of exhibits or of anything which will make unnecessary delay, and if any gentleman desires the reading of a report I think the report should be read. The trouble is not about the reading of the reports; the trouble is that we all get up here and get to talking and consume the time in that way. Now, I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH A. TUCKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7193) granting a pension to Sarah A. Tucker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah A. Tucker, mother of Charles P. Tucker, deceased, late of Company I, First Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

Sarah A. Tucker is the mother of Charles P. Tucker, who enlisted in Company I, First Wisconsin Volunteers, October 5, 1861, and died at Andersonville prison July 10, 1864.

The claimant lost another son in the Army, while three others served and were discharged.

Her claim for pension as dependent mother of Charles P. Tucker has been rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the evidence fails to show dependence upon the soldier at time of his death.

It appears from the evidence on file that the son, Charles P., was a stone-mason by trade, and, being a single man, made his home with his parents, who owned a small place, and with the son's assistance were moderately comfortably situated. Nearly all of the son's earnings went in the common fund of the family, and after enlistment he is shown to have contributed to the support of the claimant, but the exact amount of such contributions can not now be ascertained, as the letters of the soldier furnishing this information were destroyed by fire some years ago.

The ground of rejection of the mother's claim appears to have been based principally upon the certifications of the proper officers of the assessments standing against the claimant and her husband during the alleged period of dependence and since. In 1864, the year of the son's death, they were assessed for real estate $550, and on personal property, $140; while in 1868 the assessment reached $1,900 on real estate, and $422 on personal property. The latter is the maximum assessment during any year since 1861; while in 1878 the real estate of claimant and her husband is assessed at $750, and since that time in no one year higher than $120.

The increased value of real estate after the son's death is fully explained by testimony as well as by certified extracts from the records of conveyances of the country in which located. Claimant's husband purchased with the money sent home from the Army by his younger sons a certain tract of land, which he held in his own name in trust for the sons, and subsequently conveyed it to them. In 1873 claimant's husband purchased 120 acres for $2,600, $300 only being paid down, and failing to make the deferred payments, it was reconveyed to the original owner in 1880.

It further appears in evidence that claimant's husband was more or less disabled for manual labor for many years, and since 1881 has been insane. Claimant has now no income except that derived from her own manual labor, and being old is now dependent upon charity.

Winfield Scott Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Whitehall, Wis., as well as the Woman's Relief Corps, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Wisconsin, have asked Congress to place this much-deserving woman upon the pension-rolls.

While, notwithstanding the acknowledged contributions on the part of the soldier son, claimant may not have been so dependent upon these contributions as to bring her case within the general pension laws, yet your committee are clearly of opinion that the evidence shows at least a partial dependence upon the soldier, and in view of the fact that she gave five sons to the country's cause, two of whom were lost to her in that cause, and the further fact that by reason of the unfortunate condition of her husband, the father of the soldier, she has now become dependent upon others, we believe her entitled to the favorable consideration of Congress, and therefore ask that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN PATTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8280) granting a pension to John Patton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Patton, late of Company C, Tenth Regiment of New York Heavy Artillery.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

John Patton claims pension on account of chronic rheumatism alleged to have been contracted while serving as a private in Company C, Tenth New York Heavy Artillery. His claim has been rejected on the ground that there is no record evidence of treatment for alleged disability, and the parole evidence furnished by the claimant is not deemed sufficient to warrant favorable action.

The records of the War Department show that claimant enlisted August 19, 1862, and was discharged June 23, 1865. Was admitted to post hospital, Fort Baker, District of Columbia, January 28, 1863, with chronic diarrhea, and returned to duty March 25, 1863. Admitted to the Lincoln General Hospital, District of Columbia, August 15, 1864, with chronic diarrhea; furloughed November 5, 1864; readmitted November 19, and returned to duty December 28, 1864.

Comrade Isaac Algier testifies that he was a nurse in Lincoln Hospital, District of Columbia, during the summer and fall of 1864, and knows that claimant was an inmate of said hospital, suffering from pain in side and rheumatism.

Comrade Hiram S. Perkins testifies that claimant was a sound and healthy man at and prior to his enlistment, and that at Fort Davis he was taken with rheumatism, when he was removed to a hospital called "Post Baker Hospital," where affiant visited him a number of times. Understood claimant was suffering from pleurisy, and knows that he had plasters on his back and side. In subsequent affidavit affiant states that claimant's trouble at the aforesaid hospital appeared to be in the side, and therefore called it pleurisy. Claimant and affiant came home together from the Army, and have lived neighbors nearly the entire time. Affiant knows that claimant has been a constant sufferer from rheumatism ever since he rejoined his command at Petersburg, Va.

Comrade Morris Griffin also testifies to claimant's disability from rheumatism while at Fort Davis and at Bermuda front.

T. H. Gates testifies to an acquaintance with claimant for more than forty years. Was a sound man at enlistment, and on his return home was afflicted with rheumatism, from which he has suffered ever since.

C. G. Patton testifies that upon his return from the Army claimant suffered from rheumatism, for which he was treated by Dr. Trowbridge, now deceased.

Dr. John V. Smith testifies to treatment for chronic rheumatism since 1872.

Charles Myers testifies that he has been claimant's neighbor for eighteen years, and knows that nine-tenths of that time he has been a sufferer from rheumatism and pain in left side; is now entirely unfit for manual labor.

Examining Surgeon Hebard in June, 1882, finds six-eighths disability from rheumatism and disease of heart.

The Wabasha board of surgeons certify, under date of January 28, 1885:

"There is an increased impulse, but no valvular lesions. He has atrophy of the muscles of the left hip, thigh, and leg from rheumatism; left thigh at middle third measures 16¼ inches and left calf 15 inches; the right thigh 17¾ inches and right calf 16½ inches. Disability from rheumatism one-half total."

Correspondence on the part of the Pension Office has fully established the credibility of the parties who have testified in the case. The testimony seems to establish beyond any reasonable doubt that claimant was sound at enlistment; that he contracted rheumatism in the service, and that he has been a constant sufferer therefrom ever since discharge. The record of treatment in the service for "chronic diarrhea" is evidently an error, and should, in the opinion of your committee, not prejudice a claim otherwise so well established as the one under consideration.

We recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NEWCOMB PARKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1077) granting a pension to Newcomb Parker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Newcomb Parker, late of Company K, Eleventh Regiment of Vermont Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. NEECE) was read, as follows:

That they have examined Senate bill No. 1077, and the evidence pertaining thereto, and that they hereby adopt Senate report thereon, which report is in words and figures as follows:

"[Senate Report No. 561, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1077) granting a pension to Newcomb Parker, have examined the same, and report:

"The claimant, Newcomb Parker, late private of Company K, Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, enlisted August 14, 1862, and was discharged February 8, 1864. He made application for pension January 7, 1880, alleging dislocation of right ankle by a falling stockade at Fort Slocum, Dak., about January 1, 1864. The claim was rejected November 10, 1885, on the ground that the claimant is unable to prove that he contracted or had any disability in the service that he did not have prior to enlistment.

"It appears from the report of the Adjutant-General that this soldier was disabled by reason of lameness from the fracture of ankle-joint December 31, 1863, and that on February 8, 1864, was discharged for disability, but when and where fracture of ankle occurred the records do not show. The certificate of disability for discharge is, however, on file, and states that he was found unable to perform the duties of a soldier because of old and irreducible dislocation and fracture of right ankle-joint received at Fort Totten, Dak., and unfit for duty in invalid corps; discharged at his own request; disability one-quarter.

"The last examination by a medical board, August 6, 1885, rates the disability by reason of injury to right ankle at total.

"The claimant has entered evidence of several parties who knew him before enlistment, showing that he was then a sound man and had no difficulty with his ankles, and also testimony as to the incurrence of the disability in the service.

"The report of a special examiner, dated October 23, 1885, which closes as follows, is also on file:

"'From the testimony in this claim I am of the opinion it is one of merit, and therefore respectfully recommend it for admission.'

"The report of another special examiner, in which a large amount of testimony was taken, dated August 4, 1885, is also on file, in which he states:

"'I think there is merit in the claim for injury of right ankle, and that, on that account, it may be admitted.'

"It would seem from this evidence that there can be no doubt that this disability was incurred in the service, and that this case should properly have been admitted as recommended—as recommended by the special examiners—in the Pension Office. Why it was not so admitted does not appear from the papers.

"Your committee recommend the passage of the bill."

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the same.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH SHULL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1841) granting a pension to Joseph Shull.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph Shull, late a private in Company G, Seventy-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. NEECE) was read, as follows:

That they have examined Senate bill No. 1841, and the evidence pertaining thereto; that they hereby adopt Senate report thereon, which report is in words and figures as follows:

"[Senate Report No. 609, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1841) granting a pension to Joseph Shull, have examined the same, and report:

"The petitioner was a private in Company G, Seventy-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and applied for a pension in April, 1872, for injuries resulting from a gunshot wound of head. The application was rejected on the ground that there is no evidence of disability. The board of examining surgeons and the physicians to whom he was directed to report for special examination agree as to the existence of disability, but disagree as to its extent.

"The testimony of the captain, of his comrades and acquaintances shows that the man received a hurt, and that he is disabled in consequence.

"Your committee report the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass."

The committee therefore recommend the passage of said bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. LOU GOBRIGHT M'FALLS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1267) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lou Gobright McFalls.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the pension of $20 per month heretofore granted and now allowed to Mrs. Lou Gobright McFalls, widow of Capt. Thaddeus B. McFalls, be, and the same hereby is, increased to the sum of $40 per month; and that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to pay to her the sum last mentioned per month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. SWOPE) was read, as follows:

Mrs. McFalls is the widow of Thaddeus B. McFalls, late a chaplain of the United States Army with the rank of captain. She is now receiving a pension of $20 a month, according to the rank of her husband, when he died, in the Army.

Your committee can not see that there is anything in this case to distinguish it from those of widows whose husbands died in the performance of their duty. It is claimed that in addition to these duties of chaplain he also acted as nurse in several hospitals in Washington, and that while acting in this latter capacity he lost his health and continued growing steadily worse until he died. Conceding that his death was directly traceable to his service, his widow now receives the same pension which is granted to the widows of officers of the same rank who have been killed in the service, and they can see no reason why a distinction should be made in her favor. They therefore report this bill adversely, and recommend that it lie on the table.

Mr. NEECE. As the gentleman who has charge of this bill is not here to-night, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. MATSON. I am inclined to object to that request. I think the bill ought to be disposed of.

The question being taken on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it lie on the table, it was agreed to.

REUBEN FARNUM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 787) granting a pension to Reuben Farnum.

The bill was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The files in this case show that claimant was drafted into the military service and served as a private in Company E, Thirteenth Iowa Volunteers. That he had a slight rupture at time of draft which did disable him is admitted by the claimant; that it was materially increased so as to cause a permanent disability is also shown. This man was forced into the service, and while in it received an injury. It would seem but simple justice that he receive compensation for it. The facts in the case are fully set forth in the following Senate report, which is adopted, and the passage of the bill recommended:

"That the records in this case show that Reuben Farnum, private of Company E, Thirteenth Iowa Volunteers, was drafted into the military service of the United States November 3, 1864, and was honorably discharged at the expiration of term of service, July 21, 1865.

"Declaration for pension filed January 20, 1871, alleges a fall and consequent rupture, near Decatur, Ala., some time in December, 1864; claim rejected April 14, 1880, on the grounds 'that the alleged disability existed prior to enlistment, according to claimant's own admission.' Claimant's affidavit, dated January 10, 1880, admits the existence of a slight rupture since 1860, and that he has not been able to do ordinary manual labor since that time, although he ran a sawmill then, which he could not do after the war; that early in the war he attempted to enlist, but was rejected by examining surgeon on account of the rupture; that when he was drafted he called the examining surgeon's attention to the hernia, but it was not believed to be sufficient to excuse claimant from military duty, and that he did full duty until the date given above.

"Claimant's statement is corroborated by affidavit of Benjamin A. South, a private in said company and regiment, who swears to a knowledge of the injury alleged, and that it did increase the rupture; that he knew claimant did all duty required of him before the injury was received, but that afterward claimant could not wear his cartridge-belt, or do the duty which he had done before, because of the increased rupture.

"The affidavit of P. A. Farnum, wife of claimant, states that claimant had a very slight rupture before he was drafted, but that when he returned to his home the rupture was much increased in size; that before he was drafted he supported her by his labor and could do work quite well, but that since his return from the Army there had been 'weeks at a time' when he could not work because of the rupture, and that she had often been compelled to work to prevent herself and husband from want.

"Affidavit of Martha Gallagher, dated February 18, 1880, corroborates the foregoing; also, the affidavit of Francis Farnum, dated February 9, 1880.

"The affidavit of Samuel Zousey, dated February 18, 1880, corroborates the foregoing, and states, further, that he hired claimant to do work for him, but that claimant was unable to do it because of the rupture, and he was compelled to relinquish the job; also that claimant at other times and under favorable circumstances could not do the work assigned him.

"The affidavit of Samuel A. Farnum, dated February 9, 1880, corroborates the statement that claimant was much worse after enlistment than before.

"Therefore, taking into consideration all the evidence filed, the committee believe it to be their duty to report in favor of this bill and recommend its passage."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM REYNOLDS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1304) granting a pension to William Reynolds.

The bill was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The records in this case show that claimant was a sergeant in Company H, Forty-first Regiment Missouri Enrolled Militia. That the regiment had been organized under the order of Major-General Halleck requiring the enrollment of all loyal men in Missouri. That the command was stationed at Whitesville, and while performing duty the said William Reynolds was wounded severely in the leg by the accidental discharge of a gun in the hands of a comrade. It is shown that the regiment, though enrolled militia, was held subject to the orders of the commanding officer of the department, and were in the performance of military duty under that command. As the wound was not received in battle, the case can not be allowed in the Pension Department under paragraph 4693, Revised Statutes. Congress has invariably granted relief in cases of this kind, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN S. KIRKPATRICK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1797) granting a pension to John S. Kirkpatrick.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John S. Kirkpatrick, late a private in Company K, First Colorado Regiment.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

After a careful and thorough investigation of the papers in this case, your committee adopt the following report of the Senate committee, and recommend the passage of the bill:

That the records in this case show that claimant was a private in Company K, First Regiment Colored Volunteers; that he was a sound, strong man when he enlisted, and that during a long, tedious march from Fort Craig to Fort Union, New Mexico, he contracted varicose veins, which have ever since that time prevented him from performing manual labor; that he is sixty-five years of age, and totally unfit for any manual labor. Statement of claimant is corroborated by testimony of comrades and neighbors; also, by certificates of Examining Surgeons L. D. Hall and Max Kennedy, who testify that this is the worst case of varicose veins they ever saw, and rate his disability total therefor.

Taking into consideration all the testimony on file in this case, the committee believe it to be their duty to report in favor of this bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to inquire why a pension in this case was not allowed by the Pension Bureau?

Mr. MORRILL. For the simple reason that the applicant could not fix the time when he incurred the disability. It was incurred during the long march described in the report. It came on gradually, continuing to increase. The Pension Office requires that the time of the incurrence of the disability be fixed.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I asked the question because the report does not state why the application was rejected at the Pension Office.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senate report was very short. Upon a careful investigation of the papers I came to the conclusion that beyond question the disease was incurred during the march I have mentioned. That was the testimony of the man's comrades.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN G. NICHOLAS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1618) granting a pension to John G. Nicholas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John G. Nicholas, late of Company F, Ninety-third Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1618) granting a pension to John G. Nicholas, submit the following report:

The soldier enlisted August 4, 1852, and was mustered out June 8, 1865. In July, 1877, he made application for pension, alleging that about July, 1864, he contracted kidney disease and piles. The claimant is unable to prove medical treatment in service, but he does show by his officers and comrades that he suffered with both diseases in the service; by physicians and neighbors that he has suffered ever since.

The examining surgeon at Scandia, Kans., September, 1882, says:

"I find very painful bleeding piles; the bleeding is the worst feature, and makes him weak and thin."

The surgeon who examined him at enlistment testifies that he was then sound and free from disease.

Several neighbors and comrades corroborate this.

It seems to be established that the soldier was free from disease when he enlisted; that he contracted a disability in the service from which he has ever since suffered.

Your committee, therefore, recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES R. BAYLOR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6825) granting a pension to James R. Baylor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James R. Baylor, late a private in Company F, Fiftieth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out, in line 7, the word "volunteers" and insert the word "engineers."

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6825) granting a pension to James R. Baylor, submit the following report:

The soldier served in Company D, Eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, from April 22, 1861, to July 29, 1861, and re-enlisted in Company F, Fiftieth Regiment New York Engineers.

He alleges in his declaration for pension that early in October, 1862, while engaged in laying a ponton bridge and carrying timbers for it, he slipped and fell into one of the boats of the bridge, causing a compound fracture of the left ankle joint. The claim failed to secure an allowance in the Pension Office because of claimant's inability to furnish certain testimony asked of him as to the origin of his disability.

Samuel R. Bois, a sergeant of soldier's company, testifies—

"That about October 1, 1862, while company was laying a ponton bridge across the Potomac River at Harper's Ferry, Va., soldier accidentally slipped and fell inside of the boat, causing a fracture of the left ankle joint, disabling him for some time."

Abner G. Hill, a corporal, also of soldier's company, corroborates the statement of Sergeant Bois.

There are no records of this company on file in the office of the Surgeon-General. The soldier states that he was treated for the fracture of left ankle joint by Dr. Hillery, the regimental surgeon, and Dr. H. M. Hewett, the assistant regimental surgeon, from time of receiving injury until in November, 1862, when he was removed to Washington, D. C., where he was under medical treatment for six weeks or more; that he is unable to ascertain, after diligent search and inquiry, the whereabouts of either the surgeon or assistant surgeon who treated him, but has learned that Dr. Hewett is now dead.

Dr. Alfred Gale testifies—

"That he has seen the soldier almost every day for five or six years, and that he is disabled from a fracture of the tibula at the ankle joint, the bones of which are injured, and that he is unable to do manual labor over one-fourth of the time by reason of his disability."

Dr. J. O. Hoff testifies that he has known the soldier for twelve years, and corroborates the testimony of Dr. Gale.

The soldier, it appears, has been materially incapacitated for work since discharge by reason of his disability.

Your committee, believing that the disabilty for which soldier claims pension was received in the service and line of duty, and that he has been disabled thereby since discharge, recommend the passage of the bill, striking out the word "volunteers," at the end of line 7, and inserting the word "engineers."

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS BROWN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6817) granting a pension to Thomas Brown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas Brown, late a private in Company D, Thirty-first Regiment New Jersey Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6817) granting a pension to Thomas Brown, submit the following report:

The soldier was a teamster in Company D, Thirty-first Regiment New Jersey Volunteers. In his application for pension he alleges disabilty from varicose veins, the result of an injury to his left foot and ankle, received on or about October 1, 1862, by being thrown from a wagon while driving from Capitol Hill to Camp Warren, District of Columbia. The Pension Office rejected the claim because there is no record showing that soldier suffered from varicose veins in service. The soldier's family physician testifies that he was a sound man and was never affected with any disease or disability prior to and at the time of his enlistment into the service.

William Parker and Thomas Hoppock, two comrades, testify that the soldier was injured in his left foot by a wagon at or near Camp Warren, District of Columbia, and was laid up for some time.

Lewis L. Ramsey, Joseph Milburn, and John O'Shay, all comrades, testify that the soldier was injured, as alleged, in his left foot and ankle and that the wheels of the wagon from which he was thrown passed over his left foot and ankle. That he was badly hurt and laid up for six weeks in camp.

William Brown, a comrade, testifies that he is not related to the soldier; that soldier fell from his wagon and the wheels passed over his left leg; it was badly injured and he was laid up from said injury six weeks.

Affiant states he was present at the time and was detailed to drive in soldier's place.

The company and regimental books of this company are not on file in the office of either the Adjutant-General or Surgeon-General.

Dr. A. P. Hunt testifies that the veins of the soldier's left leg and foot are badly varicosed, so much so that it must be painful for him to do labor requiring either walking or standing for any length of time.

Dr. B. B. Mathews testifies that the soldier suffers from varicose veins of one of his legs, with weakness of same ankle-joint. Many neighbors and employers of the soldier since discharge testify to the existence of varicose veins of left leg and weakness of the same ankle-joint, and that he is and has been a constant sufferer by reason of the same and largely incapacitated for the performance of manual labor. The examining surgeons who examined soldier report that he has large varicose veins of left leg, which cause pain and stiffness in walking.

Your committee deeming this a meritorious case recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM CONNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6819) granting a pension to William Conner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Conner, late a private in Company F, Seventy-second Regiment New York Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6819) granting a pension to William Conner, submit the following report:

The soldier, at Malvern Hill, Va., July 2, 1862, was wounded in left cheek; at Gettysburg was wounded on shin-bone by minie ball, and contracted chronic diarrhea while on a raid under General Grierson at Montgomery, Ala. His pension claim was submitted for admission for chronic diarrhea and gunshot wound of left leg and cheek November 30, 1885, but rejected December 25, 1885, because, from opinion of medical referee, no disability in a ratable degree has existed since discharge.

John Leonard, captain, James Thurston and John R. Sutton, privates, serving with claimant, testify that he was wounded as alleged and suffered with chronic diarrhea, as stated, in service continuously for a long time. Thurston, in a letter filed with the case, states he can positively say that claimant was taken with chronic diarrhea in the service, and after they arrived home, Trenton, N. J., remembers of his going to a doctor to get something for his bowels. He used to carry med'cine with him when his bowels were so bad, and adds that claimant served through the war and was a good soldier.

Dr. E. C. Willet testifies that he has been acquainted with claimant for twenty-five years, and knew him to be a sound man prior to enlistment. About the 1st of August, 1865, he examined claimant and found that he had chronic diarrhea. He was at that time unfit for manual labor. Affiant prescribed astringent and a course of diet.

W. S. Small, an employer, testifies that in June, 1881, claimant came to work for affiant at the mason trade. He worked some three months, and during that time had to quit work two or three times on account of chronic diarrhea. He was weak and unable to work and was obliged to go home. Affiant also worked with claimant in June and July, 1882, and when he left he was sick with chronic diarrhea, and after a day or two was obliged to go home and was hardly able to walk to the boat. At the time he worked for affiant, and at other times when not in affiant's employ, he was not able to work one-half the time.

William Schuyler testifies that claimant and he learned their trade together, and never knew him to be sick prior to his enlistment; after discharge in 1865 claimant was sick with chronic diarrhea, and was a mere skeleton, and remained this way eight or nine months; after that he grew better slowly until 1867 and 1868, when he was able to work some and did for affiant during that time at the mason's trade when he was able. He would be troubled with the disease seven or eight days at a time, and unable to work, but when he did work he was paid only one-half price. In 1869 and 1870 he continued about the same; since that time have seen him about three or four times a year; he still complains of same disease, and think he grows worse and complains of pains in his back.

David E. Tiger, also an employer, testifies that claimant came under his employ in January, 1866, and remained until about the 1st of April following; that he was troubled with chronic diarrhea, and affiant went with him to see Dr. Willet, who pronounced the disease chronic diarrhea; he was generally very weak and only fit for light work, and finally was obliged to quit work. Reports to the Pension Office show that the witnesses who testify enjoy excellent reputations in the neighborhoods in which they live.

Dr. T. H. Studiford, the examining surgeon, reports:

"Wounded in left cheek; the cicatrix is about an inch back and below the corner of the mouth; wounded in the shin of left leg, outer side, middle third. The diarrhea becomes chronic. I find he is somewhat sympathetic over the abdomen, and there is some tenderness; he often has attacks of diarrhea; he is frequently lame in the left leg; no trouble in the left cheek. The disability is rated at three-quarters."

The claimant filed no medical testimony except that of Dr. Willet, which only covers his soundness at enlistment and treatment for chronic diarrhea in 1865. His failure to receive a rating by the medical referee in the Pension Office was probably because of this.

Your committee are of the opinion that the testimony of claimant's employers since discharge is positive evidence of his being disabled by reason of his disabilities, particularly that of chronic diarrhea contracted in the service and line of duty, and recommend the passage of the bill,

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY MORTIMER SEMMES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 489) granting a pension to Mary Mortimer Semmes, widow of Commodore Alexander A. Semmes, United States Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Mortimer Semmes, widow of Commodore Alexander A. Semmes, late of the United States Navy, and pay her a pension of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. SCOTT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 489) granting a pension to Mary Mortimer Semmes, widow of Commodore Alexander A. Semmes, United States Navy, have had the same under consideration, and report:

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill, and have agreed to the adoption of the report prepared and submitted by the Committee on Pensions of the Senate. (See Senate Report No. 493, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.)

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let the report be read. This bill allows a pension of $50 a month.

Mr. RANDALL. The report has been read; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SWOPE], if necessary, will state the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Senate report has been handed up and will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 489) granting a pension to Mary Mortimer Semmes, widow of Commodore Alexander A. Semmes, United States Navy, having examined the same, submit the following report:

The committee desire to present herewith the memorial of Mrs. Semmes, the widow of the late commodore, and the record of his professional services in the United States Navy, as follows:

"Memorial of Mrs. Mary Mortimer Semmes, widow of the late Commodore Alexander A. Semmes, United States Navy, who died while in command of the United States navy-yard at Washington, D. C., September 22, 1885, to the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, asking the grant of a pension of $50 per month.

"Your memorialist, Mary Mortimer Semmes, widow of the late Commodore Alexander A. Semmes, United States Navy, would most respectfully state that her husband served his country with fidelity and conspicuous ability in all parts of the world, in peace, war, and in the presence of devastating epidemics, for a period of forty-four years, a detailed account of which service is herewith appended.

"He was trusted and honored by his superiors, loved and esteemed by his equals, and respected by his subordinates until the hour of death.

"During this long and most honorable career he, at times, temporarily succumbed to the influence of pernicious climate and the power of epidemic disease, notably to an attack of yellow fever while commanding the U. S. S. Portsmouth, on the South Atlantic station, and again to the same plague during the prevalence of the fatal epidemic of 1872, at the navy-yard, Pensacola, Fla., while he was temporarily in command.

"From these illnesses, contracted directly in the line of duty, he never fully recovered.

"Since 1874 he constantly suffered from congestion of the liver, and the accompanying digestive and heart complications.

"Despite these physical troubles he continued on duty until the present year, when, during the performance of important and delicate service, his health, already weakened, broke entirely under the protracted strain.

"With the hope of recuperation, and by the advice of his physician, he proceeded to a quiet and salubrious hamlet in Virginia, where he grew rapidly worse, and finally, in a fit of delirium brought about by his sufferings, he ended his life.

"This dreadful event plunged your memorialist from a condition of entire comfort to one of almost absolute poverty.

"Her husband, owing to the wants of a growing family, the expenses incident to his position, the needs of those collaterally dependent upon him, and unfortunate investments, had saved but little during his earlier years.

"The emoluments pertaining to the office of a rear-admiral in the Navy, to which exalted rank he was about being promoted preparatory to his retirement from active service, rendered the close of his career pecuniarily secure,

"The hand of death has deprived him and her of this solace, and she now finds herself, in her old age, a widow, a cripple, and almost an object of charity.

"Her poverty is indeed so great that she has been compelled to resort to the precarious and hazardous expedient of keeping a boarding-house in order that she may provide the absolute necessities of life for herself and her two children, one a minor of tender years.

"Wherefore she begs that her petition be granted."

Brief of record of professional services of the late Commodore Alexander A. Semmes, United States Navy.

Born in the District of Columbia. Appointed midshipman from Maryland October 22, 1841; attached to receiving ship Pennsylvania same year; to Vandalia in 1842, coast of Africa; to United States flagship Macedonian in 1843, on same station; attached to United States steamer Saratoga, and participated in a skirmish with the natives at Grand Bereby, Africa; served on board United States steamer Vincennes, East India station, 1845–'46; attached to flagship Columbus 1846, on East India and Pacific stations; in attendance at naval school, Annapolis, 1847.

Promoted to passed midshipman August 10, 1847; at Naval Observatory, Washington, 1847; United States ship Congress, Brazil station, 1851–'52; United States Coast Survey, 1853; Naval Observatory, 1854.

Promoted to master, 1855.

Commissioned as lieutenant September 15, 1855; ordered to U. S. S. Massachusetts, Pacific station, 1855–'57; on November 21, 1856, commanded a force of twenty-three sailors and marines in a successful attack upon an encampment of one hundred Russian-American Indians in Puget Sound; on board U. S. S. Powhatan, East India station, 1859–'60; U. S. S. Rhode Island, Atlantic coast, 1861; commanded U. S. S. Wamsutta, South Atlantic blockading squadron, 1862–'63; engaged in skirmish with confederates on an island in Newport River, Georgia, April, 1862; commanded steam gunboat Tahoma, East Gulf blockading squadron, 1863–'64; attacked the batteries of Tampa, Fla., April, 1863, and in October, same year, attacked the same batteries as a ruse while dispatching a party of seamen to capture some blockade-runners; September, 1863, while in command of a light-draught steamer, with detachments from various vessels of the East Gulf squadron, made a demonstration on Bayport, Fla., which resulted in the destruction of an English blockade-running steamer and the warehouse containing her cargo; commanded the ironclad Lehigh, South Atlantic blockading squadron, 1864–'65; bombarded Fort Pringle, rear of Charleston, S. C., July 7–10, 1864; on picket duty in the harbor of Charleston, S. C., during the fall and winter of 1864–'65; February, 1865, commanding the Lehigh and senior officer of six vessels operating against the confederate defenses on James Island at fall of Charleston, S. C., 1865; commanded the Lehigh in a midnight bombardment of Howlett House batteries, on the James River, at the fall of Richmond; on ordnance duty in Philadelphia, 1866–'68.

Commissioned as commander July 25, 1866; commanded U. S. S. Portsmouth, South Atlantic station, 1869–'71; at navy-yard, Pensacola, 1872–'74; part of this time as its executive, and, after the death of its commander from yellow fever, as the commandant.

Commodore Semmes, as lieutenant, commanded the U. S. brig Dolphin, which was temporarily commissioned at the commencement of the civil war for the protection of public property at Norfolk, Va., and while on the East India station he rendered assistance to the English and French forces in their attack on the Peiho forts, in China, by towing the English reserves into action.

Commissioned as captain August 24, 1873, and commanded the U. S. S. Alaska, European station, 1875–'76, and during this service afloat he conducted negotiations between the Republic of Liberia and several of her subject tribes, which resulted in a treaty of peace, and obtained for him the thanks of the Navy Department; he was ordered as executive officer of the navy-yard, Washington, D. C., in 1880, promoted to the rank of commodore March 10, 1882, and in June, 1883, appointed to the command of the Washington navy-yard, which position he occupied at the time of his death.

The brilliant services rendered by this officer should be a sufficient guarantee that his wife and family, being entirely dependent upon him, ought to receive from the Government some evidence that the country is grateful for his long, faithful, and meritorious services.

Mrs. Semmes was not granted a pension by the Department because of his having taken his own life while suffering from temporary aberration of mind, brought on by disease.

The personal habits of Commodore Semmes were such as to place him above the suspicion of contributing to this alienation of his mental faculties, and the committee are strongly of the opinion that death by his own hand was the result of disease contracted while in the line of duty in the service. They therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I have already moved that that bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. PRICE. I ask this committee to vote negatively on that motion to lay the bill aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass. It grants a pension of $50 a month, and, as I have already stated, I am hostile to the adoption of any such principle on the part of this House.

I request this committee to vote this bill down, because it is wrong in principle.

Mr. RANDALL. This widow is a cripple and in need, and although she has made a heroic effort to support herself, she has failed to do so. The honorable gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] is well known to object on principle to a certain class of bills; but there are exceptions to all rules, and as this is the case of a worthy widow, I hope he will allow it to go through without further objection.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Here is a pension proposed for $50 a month. There are some things in this report I cannot understand. It is stated this widow is aged and furthermore that her husband went into the service forty years ago. It also states she has a minor child. How can that be?

Mr. HEPBURN. Perhaps she adopted it.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Then it is not her child. I am not going to fight this report, but I will move to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty." I am willing to concede that much.

Mr. RANDALL. You might as well vote down the bill, for she has that now.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Oh, no, she tried at the Pension Office, but her claim was denied and she has no pension.

Mr. RANDALL. I will state the reason why. It was because her husband committed suicide, caused, as the evidence shows, by an attack of yellow fever between 1873 and 1875.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. There is no evidence of that.

Mr. BRADY. It is stated in the report.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Only in the memorial, but there is no evidence to support it.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SWOPE] states the evidence supports that position.

Mr. PERKINS. The report says the committee is satisfied from the investigation that he committed suicide in consequence of disease which worked a derangement of the mind.

Mr. RANDALL. He was not a man who was addicted to the use of liquor at all, and the suicide was the direct effect of an aberration of mind resulting from the disease which he contracted in the service of the country.

Mr. LYMAN. I would like to ask the question of some member of the committee who is familiar with the subject whether there are not precedents for this pension?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, there are at least fifty.

Mr. BRADY. They are numerous. To my own knowledge there are over forty of them.

Mr. RANDALL. There are many cases where such relief has been granted. I am traveling a beaten path in this connection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask a vote on the motion to lay the bill aside.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was accordingly laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask the gentleman to yield for a moment. I have an urgent case I would like to bring up, which can not take up much time.

Mr. MATSON. I yield for that purpose.

JOHN BUCHANAN.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I call up the bill (H. R. 8827) granting a pension to John Buchanan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Buchanan, late of Company D, Thirty-first Regiment New Jersey Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows.

The soldier was a member of Company D, Thirty-first Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, and at Belle Plain, Va., in February, 1863, while unloading corn from a transport, he strained himself across the breast; while leaping over riflepits at the battle of Chancellorsville in May, 1863, he strained his back, and in same month, near Falmouth, Va., contracted typhoid fever.

His claim for pension was submitted for admission June 24, 1885, by the examiner in the Pension Office for strained back and results of typhoid fever, but rejected by the legal reviewer on the ground that there is no record of alleged typhoid fever or injuries to breast and back, and claimant's inability to furnish positive evidence that said injuries were incurred in the service.

The claimant is shown to have been a sound man at enlistment.

Joseph R. Potts, a sergeant of same regiment, testifies that he was present and saw claimant when he was hurt while unloading corn, in February, 1863.

Joseph Smith and Henry Blackburn, both comrades, testify as to the origin of strained breast and back and typhoid fever, and Smith adds that he took care of claimant.

Blackburn, in a letter, states that he saw claimant very soon after he strained his back; he was lying in one of the rebel barracks near Belle Plain, Va., where he remained a number of weeks; that he often visited claimant while he was sick and found him suffering from the strain he had received, and also with fever, and took him food to eat.

Joseph Smith, in a letter filed, after recounting the manner in which claimant became disabled, states that when claimant had typhoid fever he was with him and took care of him part of the time and gave him medicine.

Samuel W. Dilts, a comrade, testifies that he saw claimant in June, 1864, when on his way home on furlough, and he was greatly debilitated and suffering from chronic diarrhea. He again testifies, with Samuel Runyon, another comrade, that claimant was taken sick with typhoid fever in February or March, 1863, which finally ran into diarrhea. Claimant was sick some time and treated in regimental hospital.

There are no records of this regiment on file in the office of the Surgeon-General.

George V. Cuveling, Charles A. Higgins, George W. Shepherd, Charles Buck, Leonard Barrick, Hiram Gary, John W. Swallow, and John S. Gary, very near neighbors of claimant, who are certified to enjoy good reputations in the neighborhood in which they live, testify separately that claimant has been a constant sufferer from his disabilities since discharge, and oftentimes laid up so that he was unable to work for some time, and has been fully disabled for work three-quarters of his time. Higgins states that he is engaged in the drug business, and has frequently sold claimant alcoholic liniments and other baths for the purpose of bathing his back and chest, and has also sold him preparations for kidneys and rheumatic affections, which he still purchases from him.

The board of surgeons rated claimant's disabilities as follows:

"Strained back one-quarter of total; results of typhoid fever three-quarters of total, or a total disability for all injuries."

The committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr FARQUHAR, Mr. SPOONER, and others. Oh, no.

Mr. SOWDEN. I hope that motion will not prevail.

The question being taken, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 18.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill——

Mr. SPOONER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. MORRILL. Let us take up bills in their regular order on the Calendar.

MARY E. CRIMMINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 160) granting a pension to Mary E. Crimmins, widow of Patrick Crimmins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary E. Crimmins, widow of Patrick Crimmins, late a machinist's helper in the United States Navy, in service at the naval torpedo station, Goat Island, Rhode Island.

The report (by Mr. SCOTT) was read, as follows:

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill, and have agreed to the adoption of the report prepared and submitted by the Committee on Pensions of the Senate. (See Senate Report No. 258, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.)

Mr. BLANCHARD. This report does not state any of the facts in the case. Let us have the Senate report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the Senate report was not with the bill.

Mr. BRADY. Then I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. SPOONER. I object. I have a copy of the Senate report here which I send to the desk.

The Senate report was read, as follows:

The claimant, Mary E. Crimmins, is the widow of Patrick Crimmins, late a machinist's helper in the United States Navy, in service at the naval torpedo station, Goat Island, Rhode Island. No claim in this case was ever made to the Pension Office, as it could not be considered under the general laws. The following communications which are appended will show the main facts upon which the claim is based.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, County of Newport, ss:

OFFICE CLERK SUPREME COURT.

James G. Topham, being sworn, says: My residence is No. 9 North Baptist street, Newport, R. I. I am now, and was in 1874, one of the coroners of this city. On the 22d day of February, 1874, as such coroner, I held an inquest upon the body of Patrick Crimmins, at the torpedo works, on Goat Island, in this city. After hearing the evidence the verdict of the jury was that the body was that of Patrick Crimmins, and that he came to his death by suffocation while in the line of duty and service of the United States in the gas room. I am disinterested.

JAMES G. TOPHAM, Coroner.

Subscribed and sworn to before me the 18th day of April, 1884; and I hereby certify the affiant to be credible and well known to me as the officer he represents himself to be, and that I am every way disinterested.

[SEAL.] THOS. W. WOOD, Clerk.

UNITED STATES TRAINING-SHIP NEW HAMPSHIRE (1st Rate),
Newport, R. I., April 12, 1884.

I hereby certify that the late Patrick Crimmins was employed at the torpedo station, Goat Island, Newport Harbor, under my command, from its commencement, in the fall of 1869, to July, 1873, when I was detached; and I have reason to know that he continued to be so employed until and at the time of his death, in January, 1874.

He was a most faithful, reliable man; though not a trained machinist, he was so handy with tools, so very trustworthy and intelligent in whatever he was called upon to perform, that he became as useful as a regular machinist; and he finally lost his life in the execution of a duty for which he had been selected, owing to his steadiness and intelligence.

He left a widow and children in needy circumstances.

E. O. MATTHEWS,
Captain U. S. Navy.

NAVY-YARD, Boston, April 9, 1884.

To whom it may concern:

Patrick Crimmins, employed as machinist's helper at the naval torpedo station on Goat Island, Newport, R. I., in the winter of 1873-'74, the date forgotten, the torpedo station then being under my command, lost his life while in the performance of one of his regular duties. He had charge of a gasoline vault, which he was obliged to enter in order to turn on the flow of gas each evening.

On the date, forgotten, above referred to, not having returned to his home at the usual hour in the evening, his friends sent to the island to inquire for him. Search was made, and his dead body was found in the gasoline vault. Upon investigation it was learned that he had been seen but a few minutes before the usual time for the workman's boat to leave the island, running toward the vault, and that he had not again been seen alive. It was concluded that having been detained in some way beyond his usual time for visiting the vault, he was obliged to run in order not to miss his boat; that having thus exhausted his breath before entering the vault, he had taken deep respirations, drawing in so much of the gasoline fumes as to overcome and finally to suffocate him. He was an excellent, quiet, sober, and industrious man, whom I had known for several years. He was put in charge of the vault through confidence in his intelligence, and it was not deemed that there was any danger in entering into it, nor, indeed, was there, except for the momentary condition in which he doubtless was.

Very respectfully,

EDWARD P. LULL,
Captain U. S. Navy.

Mr. SOWDEN. I hope the committee will not give this case a favorable consideration. Here is a man who was not in the military service of the Government at all, but was in the civil service as a machinist's helper at the naval torpedo station on Goat Island, Rhode Island. He never made a claim for pension before the Pension Department, nor would such a claim have been considered by it under the general laws. It would certainly be a very marked departure on the part of this House were it to pass this bill. What if the husband of the claimant was a most faithful and reliable man and trained machinist? What if he died of suffocation in 1874 while in the service of the Government as machinist's helper? Does this entitle his widow to a pension? If so, the widows of other faithful employés dying while in the civil service of the Government might also make claim for similar legislation, and they would be as much entitled to relief as this man's widow.

There is no law covering the case of pensions to civilians and probably never will be. When a man enters the civil employ of the Government as into that of civilians he assumes all the risks of that employment. If, therefore, a civil employé of the Government who enters its service and is injured or dies while in the Government's employ, neither he nor his widow can expect relief in the manner proposed by this bill. It is not military employment; for which a pension can or ought to be granted.

Mr. SPOONER. I agree rather with the colleague of the gentleman from Pennsylvania who made this report [Mr. SCOTT] and with the Committee on Pensions, from whom the report comes, concerning the propriety of granting the pension in this case. Nor need I go further than the State of Pennsylvania itself to find a parallel case, one at least in which relief was granted, where the parties were civil employés of the Government and were injured or killed while in the service of the United States.

At the explosion of the arsenal, I think in Pittsburgh, or in that neighborhood, there were a number of persons killed and some wounded. A bill for their relief was passed by Congress and became a law.

Mr. MATSON. Was that a pension?

Mr. SPOONER. I was about to say that was in the line of direct pecuniary compensation. But the report which has been read cites certain cases as precedents for this action. And within my own knowledge in the last Congress an act was passed for the relief of Jeremiah McCarty granting him a pension. He was a civil employé who was injured by the explosion of a torpedo which he was placing. It will be found in Statutes at Large, volume 23, page 679, chapter 408, and it is here for the inspection of any member who desires to refer to it.

We have passed with a good deal of propriety, and certainly with considerable celerity upon many occasions, pension bills granting relief which I think are far less deserving consideration than this bill is.

Here was a man in the employ of the Government, a faithful employé during a long number of years; a poor man; not a commodore or an admiral. He is killed in the discharge of his duty. He leaves a poor widow and orphan children who depended upon him for support, and who without him are left in distressed circumstances.

I suggest to the committee that this is certainly an appropriate case for the granting of relief. It is not without precedent, as I have suggested. And to my personal knowledge the case of Jeremiah McCarty, to which I have referred, is a case precisely in point, the circumstances being such as I have already detailed to the House.

Mr. BRADY. I can give another case, that of Captain Guthrie, who was a civil employé of the Treasury Department some years ago. He and his crew in going to the assistance of a wreck on the eastern coast of Virginia were lost; and Congress not only pensioned his widow, but the widows of all the crew.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no doubt many precedents can be found for action of this kind. It is certainly within the limit of just, reasonable, and not excessive liberality on the part of the Government to the dependent widow of a faithful employé. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MATSON. I do not know if there are any precedents for this precisely in point. I take it for granted the gentleman from Rhode Island is correct in what he has stated about the McCarty case. I remember when the widows of the crew belonging to the Life-Saving Service were pensioned; and I remember the decided opposition which was made to that action by the present occupant of the chair [Mr. MCMILLIN] and by myself. The crew were drowned attempting to save lives off the coast of North Carolina. But whether there are precedents in point for this case or not, we can not afford to begin a civil-pension list.

Mr. SPOONER. This is not a beginning.

Mr. MATSON. If we have begun it the sooner we stop it the better; pensions ought to be held sacred for military service alone. Our people do not intend that men engaged in the civil service of the Government shall be pensioned. There is such a sentiment in the country on this subject that we can not afford to do it; Congress can not afford to do it.

If this passes, the next thing will be to pension the railway mail clerks and the Life-Saving Service; and then we will have to pension the relatives of all the clerks and employés who have died in the Government service.

A MEMBER. And the widows of Congressmen.

Mr. MATSON. We may as well understand it now as at any other time. So far as I am concerned, I should feel it my duty if this bill should obtain a majority of those present to-night to demand that it be voted on in a full House. I therefore renew my motion that the committee rise.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion. Let us dispose of this bill.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Is the motion that the committee rise in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion that the committee rise is always in order. It stands on the same footing as a motion to adjourn in the House.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I think we can dispose of this bill by defeating it.

Mr. MATSON. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to say a word before the vote is taken. I am a little bit surprised that a favorable report should have been made on a bill of this sort by the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MATSON. It was not made by that committee.

Mr. MORRILL. It was made by the Committee on Pensions. The Committee on Invalid Pensions has invariably rejected every proposition of this kind.

Mr. SPOONER The bill was not before the Committee on Invalid Pensions, as it was not a case of pensioning for service performed during the late war.

Mr. BLANCHARD. This party was nothing more nor less than a civil employé, who met his death while in that employment; and his widow is no more entitled to a pension than the widow of a Department clerk who loses his life by the fall of an elevator. I think it must be apparent to every gentleman that it is stretching the pension prerogatives of Congress when we are seriously asked to grant a pension in a case like this.

Mr. ROWELL. Suppose the elevator fell by reason of carelessness in its construction.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That would be another question. The Government then might be liable in damages to the party or to his heirs. But here is a bill to pension a civil employé of the Government. I hope this bill will be voted down, because evidently it is impossible for it to pass. A quorum will certainly be asked on such a bill as this.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, a single word. It seems to me that before a bill of this kind could receive favorable consideration in this House it would have to be demonstrated clearly that the death of this party arose from neglect on the part of some Government employé. That does not appear in this case. I see no reason why the Government should be more liberal with reference to its civil employés than a private employer would be.

Mr. FARQUHAR. In such a case would it not be a question of damages, not a question of pension?

Mr. BUCHANAN. And in that case, as the gentleman from New York suggests, and as I was about to say, it would be simply a question of damages, not a question of pension. Mr. Chairman, claims of this character are more numerous than many of us think. There are a good many cases where persons in the civil employ of the Government have not been killed, but have sustained injury, and where they seek compensation in this form.

In every such case that has been referred to me as a subcommittee I have refused to report favorably without the fullest proof that some employé of the Government was responsible for the accident. Let me add a word with reference to the Life-Saving Service. I do not think that that service should be put in the same category with these other cases, because there is an element of personal danger connected with that service which does not enter into the other cases to which I have referred. However, that subject is not now before us for discussion, and I simply make this remark lest my silence in regard to it should be misunderstood. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman, I do not doubt that the granting of a pension in this case would be somewhat a matter of grace. I think, however, that the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions should not allow his very proper zeal in behalf of the Union soldiers to prevent him from also granting consideration to other classes of employés in the service of the Government, including, I think very properly, as has been suggested by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN], those connected with the Life-Saving Service.

I am not sure but that the Railway Mail-Service would be deserving of the same consideration; and there have been projects, strongly urged, for the granting of pensions by general law to both those classes of civil employés. I do not know that it is a matter of very much concern to the Government in making compensation for death or injury in its service whether that compensation is made in a single sum by way of damages, or whether it is paid in installments in the form of a pension. As I have already said, I am aware that under existing law the granting of a pension in a case of this kind is a matter of grace, but this is not an entirely unusual case. [Cries of "Vote!" Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER], that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to allow me a minute before he presses that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MATSON having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration bills on the Private Calendar under the special order, and had instructed him to report to the House sundry bills with various recommendations.

HOUSE BILLS PASSED.

House bills of the following titles, reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole House, were severally ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 5950) granting a pension to Catharine Reisinger;
A bill (H. R. 3851) granting a pension to William P. Shelton;
A bill (H. R. 8334) for the relief of Jacob Nix;
A bill (H. R. 1681) for the relief of William Hicks;
A bill (H. R. 4624) for the relief of Cassius H. Robinson;
A bill (H. R. 6832) granting a pension to Mrs. Catherine Sattler;
A bill (H. R. 7169) to grant a pension to James Robinson;
A bill (H. R. 7234) granting a pension to Susan Hawes;
A bill (H. R. 7193) granting a pension to Sarah A. Tucker;
A bill (H. R. 8280) granting a pension to John Patton;
A bill (H. R. 6817) granting a pension to Thomas Brown;
A bill (H. R. 6819) granting a pension to William Conner; and
A bill (H. R. 8827) granting a pension to John Buchanan.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House with amendments, were severally taken up, the amendments agreed to, and the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 6425) granting a pension to Jonathan S. Lents;
A bill (H. R. 1617) for the relief of George H. Laurence;
A bill (H. R. 5389) granting a pension to Ann Kinney;
A bill (H. R. 8046) granting a pension to Erastus W. Kennedy; and
A bill (H. R. 6825) granting a pension to James R. Baylor.

House bills of the following titles, for the removal of political disabilities, were ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed—two-thirds voting in favor thereof:

A bill (H. R. 8192) to remove the political disabilities of J. R. Eggleston, of Mississippi.

HOUSE BILLS LAID ON THE TABLE.

House bills of the following titles, reported adversely from the Committee of the Whole House, were laid on the table:

A bill (H. R. 7869) to increase the pension of Sophia Beeler; and
A bill (H. R. 3610) granting a pension to Anna A. Probert.

SENATE BILLS PASSED.

Senate bills of the following titles, reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole House, were severally ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. 686) granting a pension to Charles N. Sebastian;
A bill (S. 1077) granting a pension to Newcomb Parker;
A bill (S. 1841) granting a pension to Joseph Shull;
A bill (S. 787) granting a pension to Reuben Farnum;
A bill (S. 1304) granting a pension to William Reynolds;
A bill (S. 1797) granting a pension to John S. Kirkpatrick;
A bill (S. 1618) granting a pension to John G. Nicholas; and
A bill (S. 489) granting a pension to Mary Mortimer Semmes, widow of Commodor Alexander A. Semmes, United States Navy.

SENATE BILLS REJECTED.

Senate bills of the following titles, reported adversely from the Committee of the Whole House, were taken up; and the question being taken on ordering the bills to a third reading, it was decided in the negative, and the bills were rejected:

A bill (S. 1267) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lou Gobright McFalls.

EDWARD CORNING.

The bill (S. 1666) granting a pension to Edward Corning was taken up, and, in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House, was recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions with leave that when reported back it should occupy its former place on the Calendar.

Mr. NEECE moved to reconsider the various votes by which bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House had been passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARY HOWARD FARQUHAR AND HENRY DOMEYER.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 678) for the relief of Mary Howard Farquhar and the bill (S. 1520) granting a pension to Henry Domeyer, be stricken from the Calendar. In one case a House bill identical in substance has passed the Senate; and in the other the pension has been allowed by the Pension Office.

The motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. WINANS (at 10 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 14, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has been called away again by the affliction which has been the occasion of his absence heretofore, and he wished me to ask of the Senate an indefinite leave of absence for him, which I now do. I move that the Senator from Alabama be granted an indefinite leave of absence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas in behalf of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] moves that he be granted an indefinite leave of absence. If there be no objection the leave will be granted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish it to be stated in the Journal, that there may be no question of appropriation under the law, that the leave is granted on account of illness of his family, so that there can be no question about pay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so stated in the Journal.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1797) granting a pension to John S. Kirkpatrick;

A bill (S. 1618) granting a pension to John G. Nicholas;

A bill (S. 489) granting a pension to Mary Mortimer Semmes, widow of Commodore Alexander A. Semmes, United States Navy;

A bill (S. 686) granting a pension to Charles N. Sebastian;

A bill (S. 1077) granting a pension to Newcomb Parker;

A bill (S. 1841) granting a pension to Joseph Shull;

A bill (S. 787) granting a pension to Reuben Farnum; and

A bill (S. 1304) granting a pension to William Reynolds.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the resolution of the Senate to print 15,000 additional copies of the reports of the South American Commission.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted by U. S. Grant Post, No. 14, Department of Montana, Grand Army of the Republic, of Miles City, Mont., thanking the Senate for passing Senate bill No. 1886, for the benefit of disabled soldiers and their dependent relatives; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CALL. I present a petition of the workingmen of the navy-yard at Washington, D. C., praying for the passage of the bill (S. 2268) to grant leaves of absence to employés in the United States navy-yards, and for other purposes. The bill has been favorably reported from the Committee on Education and Labor, and I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented the petition of Isaac Gaskin and 283 citizens of Sangamon County, Illinois, praying for the passage of legislation providing for compensating prisoners of war for the suffering endured and physical injuries received in Southern prisons; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 2653) to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad Company, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1188) to exempt the property of the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington, D. C., from taxation, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. 962) touching the grade of commander in the Navy and to correct an error in relation to an appointment therein, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2661) touching the grade of commander in the Navy and to correct an error in relation to an appointment therein; which was read twice by its title.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2654) granting a pension to Mary J. Layton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2655) for the relief of Marcus A. Reno; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 2656) granting a pension to O. R. Gifford; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2657) granting a pension to Isaac D. Gensel; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2658) granting a pension to William Verbryck; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5659) granting a pension to Adolphus W. Smith; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2660) granting a pension to Annie E. Gardiner; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 70) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I introduce a joint resolution, and ask that it be read at length and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; and I also give notice that I shall at the proper time offer the body of the joint resolution, without the preamble, as an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The joint resolution (S. R. 69) providing for the appointment of a commission to select a site for a naval station on the Pacific coast, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, as follows:

JOINT RESOLUTION.

Whereas the military and naval defenses of the United States, the construction and repair of our shipping, and the promotion and security of our commerce have ever been subjects justifying in the American mind a policy of liberal appropriations for the improvement of harbors, construction of fortifications, erection of light-houses, establishing a Navy with suitable navy-yards and naval depots, until the Atlantic seacoast, from New Brunswick to Strait of Florida presents a cordon of military and naval defenses, and commercial aids, with numerous navy-yards, including all the facilities for the construction and repair of vessels, and equipments, and the manufacture of ordnance and munitions of war, and all of which have been established with a view mainly of enabling the United States to successfully compete in military, naval, and commercial prowess, advancement, and necessary conflict with the European powers facing us in that direction; and

Whereas the territorial empire of the United States presents another great national front bordering on the eastern shores of the Pacific Ocean, with more than 2,000 miles of sea-line rapidly growing into military, naval, and commercial importance, confronted not only with formidable European military and naval establishments in the islands of the Pacific to the westward, and in the British and Russian possessions to the northward, but with the vast Asian empires and their dependencies with their over seven hundred million of inhabitants, who are rapidly turning their attention to improvements in the arts of war, offensive and defensive, and which must at no distant day become powers on the Pacific Ocean not to be ignored by the more civilized nations of the world, while as yet we have but a single navy-yard on all this extended coast line, and none north of the thirty-eighth parallel of north latitude; and

Whereas the Pacific Northwest, embracing the State of Oregon and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, Western Montana, and Alaska, in addition to being possessed of great agricultural, pastoral, and mineral resources, and a great and rapidly increasing commerce, internal and foreign, has within its western borders, and in close proximity to the most magnificent harbors, and inland seas, immense bodies of the best quality of iron, coal, lime and other stone, and almost boundless forests of the finest timber in the world, suitable in all respects and admirably adapted for the construction and repair of ships, and extensive water-power for propelling machinery, including every natural requisite and facility for the establishment of a first-class navy-yard: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, required to appoint a commission, composed of three competent naval officers, whose duty it shall be to examine the coast north of the forty-second parallel of north latitude in the State of Oregon and Territories of Washington and Alaska, and select a suitable site, having due regard to the commercial and naval necessities of that coast, for a navy-yard; and having selected such site, shall, if upon private lands, estimate its value and ascertain the price for which it can be purchased, and of their proceedings and actions make full and detailed report to the Secretary of the Navy; and the Secretary of the Navy shall transmit such report with his recommendation to Congress.

SEC. 2. That to defray the expenses of such commission the sum of $——, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

AMENDMENTS TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. VEST submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGETOWN GASLIGHT COMPANY.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I submit the following resolution for adoption:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be directed to report by bill prohibiting the Washington Gaslight Company and the Georgetown Gaslight Company from consolidating with any other corporation within said District.

Also, that said committee be directed to make a similar investigation into the affairs of the Georgetown Gaslight Company as was ordered by the Senate into the affairs of the Washington Gaslight Company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOAR. Let it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. VAN WYCK. One moment before the reference is made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and debate is not in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement, or else let the resolution go over under objection until to-morrow and then I shall desire to make a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Massachusetts to object.

Mr. HOAR. No, sir. The latter part of the resolution I should not object to; but the former part, requiring the Senate to commit itself, I should object to, and I prefer to have the resolution referred.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Senator will permit me, I wish to make one statement.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly; I do not object to that.

Mr. CONGER. I suggest that the resolution go over and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution will go over and be printed.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Very well; I shall call it up to-morrow morning.

POSTAGE ON FOURTH-CLASS MATTER.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to give notice that on Wednesday next, after the formal morning business, I shall ask the Senate to take up for the purpose of submitting some remarks upon it Order of Business 585, being the bill (S. 1079) to regulate the rate of postage on fourth-class matter, which has been reported adversely from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I desire to present some considerations to the Senate on the bill at that time.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the Calendar is in order.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that Senate bill 2172, restoring to the United States certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, &c., be now taken up.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

Mr. BECK. I rise to what I suppose is a privileged motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky rise to a privileged question?

Mr. BECK. I think it is a privileged question. I rise to call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which a certain bill was passed, and of which notice was given that it would be called up this morning. I thought that matter was to be proceeded with after the morning business was concluded this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky, claiming it to be a privileged question, moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the question on reconsidering the vote by which a certain bill was passed. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grants of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to say just a word or two. I suppose the motion is not debatable.

Mr. DOLPH. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. HOAR. Is it in order to raise the question of consideration at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not very well advised as to whether a motion to reconsider is a privileged question that can be called up at any time. He has some doubt about it. The Chair is disposed to hold that it is not a privileged question, especially when another motion in regular order is made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The decision of the Chair is evidently right, but I hope the matter will be taken up and disposed of.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to inquire what disposition was made of the motion made by me to take up Senate bill 2172?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is pending, but the Senator from Kentucky rose to what he considered a privileged motion. The Chair thinks it is not a privileged motion pending another proposition.

Mr. BECK. I not only gave notice that the motion to reconsider would be called up this morning, but I was standing on the floor and trying to press it when the Senator from Oregon got in his motion first. The notice was given at the request of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] that we would pass on the motion to reconsider this morning after the morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will advise the Senator from Kentucky that after the pending motion is adopted, then it will be in order to move to proceed to the consideration of any other business; but pending a motion to take up a bill on the Calendar, the Chair is of opinion that a motion to reconsider can not be called up as a matter of preference.

Mr. CONGER. As the time within which a motion to reconsider is limited, I suppose the entry of the motion to reconsider would be in order at any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion has been already entered.

Mr. CONGER. But the taking up and considering of it I should think under the rules would not be a matter of privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The question being put, it was declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays. I insist upon having a vote upon my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky demands the yeas and nays. Is there a second?

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Kentucky not to demand the yeas and nays. Inasmuch as a motion to reconsider is not debatable under the rules, I ask the Senator from Oregon to consent that his bill may be informally laid aside in order that we may dispose of the other matter. We can do it with a single vote on the question of reconsideration one way or the other.

Mr. BECK. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2172.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. VAN WYCK, in section 1, line 12, after the word "Oregon," to strike out all down to and including the word "mountains," in line 14, and to insert:

> And also all lands which appertain to and are conterminous with that part of the branch line across the Cascade Mountains which shall not have been constructed on the 15th day of June, 1886.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] is entitled to the floor on the pending bill.

Mr. DOLPH. I understand the President to have ruled that the motion of the Senator from Kentucky would now be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida has the floor. If he yields the floor for that purpose the motion can be entertained.

Mr. CALL. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HOAR. I object to any yielding for any purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the Senator from Florida will proceed.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, when the Senate was in session on Friday last and I was proceeding to discuss the provisions of the bill and yielded the floor to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], I was endeavoring to show the relation which the tenure of land in the United States sustains to the passage of this bill. I regard that as the important feature of this discussion. I stated that we had in this country a condition of land tenure, of landlordism, in which the people were excluded from the ownership of land to a greater extent than in any civilized country of modern times. The tenant farmers of the United States are stated in the last census to be as follows:

Statement showing the number of tenant farms in the several States and Territories.

In addition to this the laborers employed in agriculture, together with this large amount of tenant farmers, number something upward of five million men, who have no homes, no permanent interest in the soil of this country, and the question is presented now to the Congress of the United States whether we shall place in the hands of a corporation an empire as great as the States of Ohio and Indiana, the terms of settlement and sale to be imposed upon the people who go upon that territory in the discretion of a corporation of a few individuals. The question presented is whether the policy of encouraging the ownership of the soil by American people is consistent with this act of legislation by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, I regard that as a question lying at the very basis of American institutions I regard it as a question subversive not only of the policies of this Government but of the very principles of the Government itself. It must be met, and met here. It is a question between the people and the corporations of the country. I maintain, and I think I can establish, that there is no principle of law, there is no policy of this Government or any other free government, which ever existed that can sustain and approve such a doctrine.

What is a corporation? Blackstone defines it to be:

> But as all personal rights die with the person, and as the necessary forms of investing a series of individuals, one after another, with the same identical rights would be very inconvenient, if not impracticable, it has been found necessary, when it is for the advantage of the public to have any particular rights kept on foot and continued, to constitute artificial persons, who may maintain a perpetual succession and enjoy a kind of legal immortality.

This convenient form of association was first introduced into the kingdom of Great Britain under ecclesiastical government. It was a device which came from the old Roman civilization. We are all aware how, in the history of the English Government, the ecclesiastical corporations acquired such a tenure of the land as to constitute a great public grievance.

We find by an examination of the law upon that subject that alienation without authority of law became by the principle of the English law in the interests of freedom a forfeiture of the franchise of the corporation. It is so asserted, and I shall cite authorities to show that the mere fact of alienation of land contrary to the terms of the law was of itself an absolute forfeiture of the land.

The Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives in a report made in the last Congress say:

> The legal right, therefore, of one who has incurred a forfeiture by breach of condition-subsequent to relief against an unwilling adversary, upon a substantial performance after the day, at law and in equity, and undoubtedly in the latter forum, can not be denied.
> But one other point remains to be considered. After breach of the condition-subsequent, the estate does not determine ipso facto, but only at the election of the grantor by re-entry. And, therefore, if the grantor after such breach accepts performance of the condition tendered by the grantee, he waives the forfeiture, the condition is gone forever, and the estate becomes absolute.
> In Dumpor's case (2 Coke, 119; 1 Smith L. C., 15) we find the basis of this principle. In Goodright vs. Davies (Cowper, 803) Lord Mansfield says: "Cases of forfeiture were not favored at law; and where the forfeiture was once waived, the court would not assist it." (See also Ward vs. Day, 116 E. C. L. R., 337; Doe vs. Birch, 1 M. & W., 402; Croft vs. Lumley, 85 E. C. L. R., 648; S. C. Cam. Scac., ibid., 682; Jackson vs. Barman, 7 Johnson, 227, and other cases cited in note by American editor).

Yet the honorable Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] maintained in an elaborate argument a few days since that not alienation, but the passive silence of the legislative branch of the Government, when an alienation was to be made, divested the sovereign power of the legislation of the government over a corporation. But we well know that in the whole history of English law, the common law which he cites was that a corporation that violated its charter and exceeded the authority given to it was subject to forfeiture; and especially in regard to its holding of lands, to its absorbing the soil and holding in dead hands the property, the soil of the country, was the English law most severe.

But yet upon this question here in the Senate of the United States, when the question of the alienation to a corporation of an empire capable of sustaining fifty million people is before us, we find an interpretation of the law based upon the relations of one individual with another, which it is claimed not only controls the sovereign power of legislation, but even divests the representatives of the people of the power to protect them against such enormous spoliation.

The Senator from Colorado said in the conclusion of his speech, after reading a report from the Judicary Committee of the House:

> I shall be astonished if anybody can produce an authority when the condition has been performed that the grantor can intervene and re-enter, whether it be the great nation the United States or whether it be a humble individual. The Government of the United States has no greater right, when it comes to a question of law, than the humblest citizen of this great Republic.

This is read to establish the right of a railroad corporation which has obtained a grant of lands from the legislative power of the country upon the condition of the completion of a line of railway within a definite and fixed period of time. It is to confirm the right and title of such grantee to any extent of the appropiation of the public domain. It is to establish the proposition that if the Congress of the United States should by such a grant convey to a private corporation, or to two or three individuals constituting a corporation, a whole empire as great as the United States itself, it would be an absolute title and be vested in the individual beyond the power of legislation to control the terms of its settlement for all time, and might be leased by that individual for a thousand years to the entire exclusion of the right of ownership of every American citizen to the soil.

I desire to test this proposition in the light of the authorities. I affirm that there is not a single principle of law or the decision of a single court which affirms that upon a great question of public policy the rights of the individual can stand for a moment in opposition to the rights of all the rest of the people; the people upon one side, the individual upon another. There is no law and no construction of law which will be held to bind the great body of the people in derogation of their rights in the interest of an individual.

Especially is this true in regard to vesting lands in corporate hands, which by the whole course of English law has been discouraged and forbidden and held to be exercised only subject to strict limitation. Blackstone says:

Alienation in mortmain, in mortua manu, is an alienation of lands or tenements to any corporation, sole or aggregate, ecclesiastical or temporal. But these purchases having been chiefly made by religious houses, in consequence whereof the lands became perpetually inherent in one dead hand, this hath occasioned the general appellation of mortmain to be applied to such alienations, and the religious houses themselves to be principally considered in forming the statutes of mortmain; in deducing the history of which statutes, it will be matter of curiosity to observe the great address and subtle contrivance of the ecclesiastics in eluding from time to time the laws in being, and the zeal with which successive Parliaments have pursued them through all their finesses; how new remedies were still the parents of new evasions; till the legislature at last, though with difficulty, hath obtained a decisive victory.

We read by the history of these corporations and these grants here how history repeats itself, and with what evasions and with what finesse from time to time, in contradiction of the established policy of this country of the division of lands, in contradiction of the established policy of this country of the equality of fortune so far as may be within the general policy of the law—we see how in modern times this great vesting of lands in corporations has eluded from time to time and defied, as Mr. Garfield said to the people of this country, the power of the States and of the National Government. Blackstone says further:

Lastly, alienations by particular tenants, when they are greater than the law entitles them to make, and divest the remainder or reversion, are also forfeitures to him whose right is attacked thereby.

This was the course of English law. It was a settled principle of English law and the decisions of all its courts that contracts in derogation of the public policy of a country were to be construed strictly, that no implications could be derived from them, that there could be no rights created by them which were not in express terms conceded. Let us take this declaration of those who maintained that a forfeiture may be waived by the passive silence of those who are charged with protecting the rights of the people. Let us examine the naked principle of law as it is said to be in the light of some of the authorities. In the twenty-third volume of Wendell's Reports, Chief-Justice Nelson, of the supreme court of errors of the State of New York, in a case for judicial consideration under the statutes of the State of New York bringing this question up, said:

Lord Holt said, in London City vs. Vanacre 1 Ld. Raym., 498, all franchises which are granted are upon condition that they shall be duly executed according to the charter that settles their constitution; and that being a condition annexed to the grant, the citizens can not make an alteration; but if they neglect to perform the terms of the patent, it may be repealed by scire facias. The principle is so thoroughly and firmly fixed in the law of corporate bodies, that I need do no more than refer to some of the authorities. A non-performance, therefore, of the conditions of the act of incorporation is deemed per se a misuser, that will forfeit the grant even at common law; and hence, if the reading of the statute claimed be conceded, it would not change the legal effect.

Again he says:

Now I am not aware of any ground that can warrant us in distinguishing between the materiality or the legal effect of conditions precedent and subsequent; or that would exact the performance of the one as a condition of corporate being and not of the other; the same authority prescribed both, and, we are to presume, for good and wise ends. Neither has the statute authorizing the filing of informations against corporations made any such distinction, as has already been seen (2 R. S., 483, § 39). We could not, therefore, make one, were we so disposed.

One strong ground for regarding the conditions in these grants in the same light as in cases of private individuals is that they are mainly obtained with a view to private interests. I admit the public interests are often thereby promoted; and that this is the chief inducement to the grant on the part of the Legislature. But most of them are sought for from considerations of private gain, and which more or less enter into the grant of every private company. In this respect they differ from public corporations, which are but the investment of a body of citizens with municipal authority for the better government of a place. The corporators have no private interest in the matter. The former are but individuals stipulating for and accepting the grant upon certain terms for their own benefit. The acceptance implies an undertaking to perform them; and to neglect or refuse is a fraud upon the Legislature.

The hardship of exacting from corporations a fulfillment of all the requirements of the charter has been urged upon us; but the appeal is made to the wrong forum. That is a question to be settled with the Legislature that prescribed them. It is not for courts to say one condition is material, and must be performed on pain of forfeiture; and another is unimportant, and may be dispensed with, or enforced by indictment or pecuniary penalty. Where shall we draw the line? The statute makes no such distinction; if corporations offend against "any of the provisions of the act or acts creating" them, the information may be filed, and judgment of ouster rendered. (2 Revised Statutes, 483, section 39; Id. 485, section 49.) Besides the hardship is no greater than in the case of individual grants, where in a court of law nothing short of performance, or the act of God, or of the grantor, will excuse the forfeiture. While this rule is steadily enforced against them, I do not perceive how we can deny its application to the case of a private association of individuals.

If the condition is onerous and unessential to the purposes of the charter, relief is plain and at hand; the legislature will repeal it. While it remains on the statute-book we are to presume it was deemed material by those who had a right to judge of the matter and should be enforced. I speak now of express conditions. Where they are implied and of course undefined, except by construction of law, a more indulgent consideration may well be given. We are not then tied down to the letter of the statute. Their materiality to the great end of the institution may be regarded and enter into the judgment of the court.

I shall not detain or weary the Senate with reading further citations of law upon that subject. The law is unquestionable that there can not be a waiver of the sovereign legislative power conferred by the Constitution upon the Congress of the United States. The law is plain that there can not be a divestiture of the right of the people of the United States to the public lands of the United States by an implied negligence, by an implied waiver on the part of Congress to assert the enforcement of the conditions of a grant by forfeiture. The law is plain that no laches can be imputed to the Government of the United States or the Congress of the United States because of the action of the executive department of the Government. The law is plain that the executive department of the Government and the courts of the United States can not make law for the people of the United States.

But let us see how this thing will come out. It is gravely contended by Senators here that when we say that there are more than five million American citizens houseless and homeless, men engaged in agriculture who have no interest in the land, who can not acquire an interest; when we point to the increasing population of this country, which becomes double and increased four times even in some of the Territories within a decade; when we point to the fact that this Government is founded upon the idea of homes for the people upon the domain, be it public or private, of the country, that all of its policies are opposed to a monopoly of land, that its very Declaration of Independence and all the professions of the great party which is represented by the Senators upon the other side have been for equality before the law and that the law itself should be equal before the people—when we point out that and point to an empire capable of sustaining perhaps fifty millions, as great as two States, now to be given to a corporation of a few individuals, we are met by the proposition that by the mere failure on the part of the Senate to concur with the House of Representatives in propositions of forfeiture its public land, although it is worth perhaps two or three hundred million dollars, although it will bring a sum of money four times greater than the entire cost of the highway and the franchise given it by the Government, although it accumulates wealth greater than any given by any patent of nobility, we are told that like a contract between two individuals it is to become absolute and permanent and vested right, and that there is no power in the Constitution of the United States to keep this great empire of land as homes for the people.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Will the Senator yield a moment?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator from Florida says that because of the failure on the part of the Senate to agree to a proposition of the House to declare certain lands of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company forfeited, therefore we claim that certain rights have accrued. The Senator does not mean to state to the Senate or to the country that the House of Representatives has ever at any time passed any act declaring forfeited any portion of the lands of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. CALL. I mean to say that in past Congresses, to which I may refer, the reports of the House committee and the action of the House clearly indicated and asserted the power of the Government and the duty of the Government to forfeit and open to public settlement every acre of the public domain that was not within a grant completed within the time prescribed in the granting act.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. One other word. Of course we can not refer to what the House has done at this session, but I undertake to say in the first place that the House of Representatives has never at any time at any session passed any act declaring forfeited any portion of the lands of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. I undertake to say further that the Judiciary Committee of that body, at former sessions of Congress, so far from declaring that it was the duty of the House of Representatives and of Congress to declare any portion of these lands forfeited declared just to the contrary and supported that opinion by a very able report from the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Mr. TUCKER.

Mr. CALL. I went into that subject a few days since, and I read from the report signed by Mr. J. Proctor Knott, Mr. DAVID B. CULBERSON, Mr. R. W. TOWNSHEND, and Mr. Van H. Manning. This report is also signed by Mr. L. E. PAYSON, who indorses the conclusions, though he says he has not verified the figures. The doctrine affirmed by the House committee on that occasion is very decided, and it is not necessary for me to enter into a discussion with the Senator on that subject. I affirm that the doctrines of that report conclusively establish not only the right but the duty of Congress to forfeit every grant where the road was not completed within the time prescribed in the granting act.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. What report does the Senator refer to?

Mr. CALL. The report signed by Proctor Knott.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Is not the Senator referring to the views of the minority?

Mr. CALL. This is a report which was submitted to the House on the 24th of July, 1882, and which constitutes the foundation of subsequent reports, as the Senator probably knows, made to the House.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Who made that report?

Mr. CALL. Proctor Knott.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The chairman of the committee?

Mr. CALL. The report is signed by J. Proctor Knott, DAVID B. CULBERSON, R. W. TOWNSHEND, and Van H. Manning.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That is not the report to which I asked the attention of the Senator. The report to which I asked his attention was a report made subsequent to that by the Judiciary Committee of the House, of which Mr. TUCKER, of Virginia, was then and is now chairman.

Mr. CALL. I am aware of that.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I desire to state that I do not go so far as the Committee on the Judiciary of the House did go in that report. I believe we have the right to forfeit the lands adjacent to the uncompleted portion of the road. That report from that committee went further.

Mr. CALL. I am aware, as shown in the history of corporate power in England as has been declared by Mr. Garfield, that there have been variations of opinion. I am aware that the parties have to some extent in the House divided politically upon this subject. I am aware that there has been an uncertainty in the action of the House and of the Senate in the past; but still I affirm that the body of feeling in the House has been increasing in force all the time in favor of the indisputable proposition that no interpretion of the law against the forfeiture of a grant can be made in derogation of a great principle of public policy.

The idea is intolerable that an empire of two States in size, capable of sustaining fifty million people, can be forever closed under the Constitution of the United States and a republican government against occupation and settlement by the people except upon the individual will of two or three persons—given without consideration to a corporation in quantities greater by four and five times than is found necessary to accomplish the purpose for which it was given, and then held when this purpose has failed to be accomplished within the time specified in the act in defiance of the people.

It can not be held that such a right has grown up by the acquiescence of Congress when the Government has repeatedly declared in various forms that no implication, no laches can be imputed to or exercised against the sovereign power of the Government, that no right can be acquired against the Government by the failure of any of the branches of the Government to carry out the law. The idea that in defiance of this established principle of law and public policy, necessary to every government, a territory of 42,000,000 acres can pass to private individuals in defiance of the very terms of the grant, is I say a contradiction of every principle of law and can only be sustained by saying as the Senator from Colorado said that the United States or all the people have no more right as against one individual than a private person would have. His notion is that no question of public policy however great, no question of the safety of the people, no question like that which even set aside the letter of the Constitution in the great war between the States for the preservation of the national Union, no question however great can effect or change or make a difference between the people on one side and an individual and between two individuals dealing with a question of private right which concerns them alone.

Mr. President, there can be no such law. It is inconsistent with the very existence of government; and I mean to say here in my place according to my humble judgment that it would be fatal to concede it to-day with our population increasing with a fearful rapidity, with all Europe turning in upon us, when within the next decade perhaps there will be an increase from one-third to one-half of the population of this country, with five million people engaged in agriculture to-day without homes upon the soil, with fortunes of one, two, and three hundred million dollars obtained without the exercise of labor and by the exercise of the public powers of government in the States and in the Union. The words which I read the other day from Mr. Garfield, uttered with a prescience and ability which will commend him to future history as a man of profound thought, show the dangers of corporate power so swollen by public grants, donations from the people to a few individuals, that it has corrupted States and ascended to the very source of power till it controls the representatives of the people and the States themselves. We have had exhibitions of this vast power accumulated in these agents of modern civilization. It would be monstrous to give to a few individuals this empire of land upon the pretext here alleged—a pretext I affirm without the sanction of reason, in defiance of the whole history of English law, of all the doctrines upon the subject of forfeiture, in defiance of the doctrine that no laches can be imputed as against the Government by the failure of any of its departments in any duty. The action of the Senate on this bill and this case will be a precedent for others. It involves the greater part not only of 42,000,000 acres but 200,000,000 acres granted to different railroad companies that have failed to comply with their grants within the time fixed by the public policy to be promoted by the grants, vicious as the principle was, for it is neither more nor less than saying, "We will give to you this great territory of land, and we will give to you as a corporation the right not only to impose upon the settlers on that land whatever price you choose to ask for their homes, but we will give to you the absolute and unrestrained power to tax their production and their labor whatever you may choose for transportation." I say in a densely settled country it is the most vicious and hurtful principle and method of constructing great highways that could possibly be devised, the most oppressive to the people, and it would be infinitely wiser to pay out of the public Treasury the honest and just cost of the construction of the roads than to impose on the settlers on the public lands the hardship of complying with whatever terms a corporation may see fit to impose upon them for their homes.

I therefore say that this question is larger and broader than seems to be supposed. It is strong enough to destroy the republican institutions of the United States. No act of secession, no act of war, would have been as ruinous, if it had been successfully accomplished, as the sanction by the Senate of the United States of the principle that 42,000,000 acres of lands, capable of sustaining many millions of the people of the United States, can be granted to a corporation of a few individuals under the pretext of building a highway seven years after the time fixed by the act for the completion of that highway has expired, and when that land has became of a value great enough even at small prices to pay, according to the best authorities, not only the cost of construction of the road but four times the cost, when the grant made by the people of the United States and earned according to the interpretation which we are willing to put upon the act would pay the cost of construction of the entire highway and leave the company with its 2,000 miles of road, with its franchise of perpetual taxation, which is in itself without any land the richest gift that was ever given, whether in the days of the Roman Empire or of modern history, to a few individuals, for I affirm that the grant of railroad franchises with the power to tax locomotion and production is more magnificent, as said by Mr. Garfield, than any patent of nobility and ducal lands that was ever granted. A franchise with the right of perpetuation, as these corporations have, with the right even of reasonable taxation, of a reasonable amount above the actual cost of the highway, to a few private individuals is a most magnificent donation, grander than anything that has ever occurred in the past history of the world.

But you not only propose to give that here and now to a few individuals, a perpetual taxation over the most magnificent country the world has ever seen, in great part a highway destined to be an avenue of commerce between the West and East—you not only propose to give enough of the public land to construct that entire highway and make it a gift, but you propose to give three times as much of the public domain and to subject the people who shall go upon it to the unlimited and the absolute will of these individuals to whom you donate it.

I affirm, Mr. President, that such a doctrine and such a practice is destructive of the Republic, is destructive of the rights of the people, and will be the forerunner of a disposition of unsettlement and unrest and angry feeling on the part of the people, that the Senate no longer represents the people, but represents corporate interests, accumulated wealth, and defies the people's interests and the people's rights.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, for the reason that the facts as I see them have been very clearly shown by those who have preceded me, and that the law relating to these facts has been on most points fully discussed, I simply desire to give in a very few words the considerations which will control me in casting my vote on the amendment and on the bill.

In 1864 Congress granted a charter to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to build a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, with a branch to Portland, Oreg., altogether about 2,000 miles. They had two years within which to begin the work and ten years within which to complete it. By various extensions, granted by Congress upon application by the company, no work was done until six years after, namely, 1870.

The work was to be completed by the 4th of July, 1876. It was not completed by that time, and but little work indeed had been done. By further extensions the company was allowed till the 4th of July, 1879, to finish the work. By that time they completed but 592 miles of the road. After July 4, 1879, no application was made to Congress, as far as I have been able to see, for any further extension of time, but they went on and have completed the main line of the road. It is said that in 1878 an application was made for an extension of time and the bill passed one House of Congress but failed in the other; and that is presented as an equitable reason why Congress should not now exercise the right of entry. So far from that being a point in favor of the company, it has, to my mind, precisely the reverse effect, for it shows that when the question was presented to extend the time further Congress deliberately refused to do so, and they were then and thereby served with notice that Congress did not intend to extend the time further.

Unquestionably, according to every principle of law, by the mere fact of the company having failed to comply with the terms of the grant on the 4th of July, 1879, the Congress of the United States had a right to declare the forfeiture and to re-enter. I think there can be no question about that as a question of law, and if the right existed on that day and has not been waived by Congress it exists to-day.

But it has been stated that there was an equitable estoppel in favor of the company in this, that the executive department of the Government has accepted so much of the road as was constructed subsequent to July 4, 1879, and has in some instances issued patents. Mr. President, the doctrine of estoppel does not run in that direction. Estoppel will bind the parties who by act or word have caused another party to act, and the taking back of which word or act would operate to the injury of the party who had acted thereon. That is an estoppel. It is not contended that any one was mistaken and supposed that the executive department of this Government would have the right to bind the law-making power, the political department of the Government, or that any act of the executive department could by possibility be an estoppel upon the legislative department of the Government, which has entire control over this question.

So far, therefore, as the doctrine of estoppel is concerned, I can see no possible application of it to this case. It is not the act of the party who had a right to act; it is not the word of the party who had the right to give that word. The executive department had no right to do anything whatever in contravention of the written law of the land, because every department of this Government is bound by law, and every one of these departments is independent of the others, and must act within its own constitutional limits, and an act in contravention of the law or beyond the law by the executive department of the Government is just as wrongful a violation of law as a violation of law committed by a private individual, and if the executive department had no legal power to bind the legislative department, an estoppel because of an act done by the executive department of the Government can not possibly bind the Legislature.

Of course gentlemen admit that the doctrine of lapse of time has no application here because no time runs against the Government.

Another point I wish to state. I have heard it asserted with a great deal of confidence that this grant was a grant in præsenti with a condition subsequent attached thereto, and that a waiver of that condition once made operated as a waiver forever, and that the grant stood perfectly stripped of the condition. But that waiver must be made by a party who has the right to make the waiver. The executive department having no right to make that waiver, no one having the right but the legislative department and the legislative department never having made the waiver, the condition is as binding to-day as it ever was.

Mr. President, while I know that there are authorities which go to sustain the idea that a legislative grant must be construed as a deed between private individuals and that where the deed conveys to the grantee all the right, title, and interest in possession, reversion, or remainder of the grantor and the grantor annexes to the conveyance a substantial condition upon the performance of which the title completely vests in the grantee and the grantor waives that condition, then the right of entry ceases. That is true. But I have always regarded an act of Congress not in the nature or character of a deed, but as a law every part of which must be construed together and that a law making a grant must be construed like every other law according to the text and context, according to the letter, and according to the spirit and intent of the lawmaker. Outside of all this, contemporaneous exposition, debates, &c., are often called in to ascertain the true spirit, intent, and meaning of a law, and I think in this case the whole object and design of the law must be taken together, and be gathered from the whole act.

Now, what was the object of the law at that time? At the time of the passage of the act of 1864 war was flagrant in this country, and undoubtedly the object and purpose of the lawmaker was to connect the parts of this Union together by bands of iron as early as possible, not only as a great military measure but as a great measure of union. In carrying out that they made a magnificent grant to the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroads, and they made a grant to this Northern Pacific. Ten years was given for the Northern Pacific to complete the road. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] as has been quoted, in a speech made here, said that five years was ample time to complete that road. A statement was made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], who evidently has carefully examined this, that this company came in when the charter was applied and professed ability and the means to build the road within the time; but six years passed by and not one spade was put into the ground, nothing was done as far as I am able to see, but applications to Congress to give them further time. and six years went by before anything was done; and at the expiration of fifteen years but 592 miles of road was built, and after that time they went along and built with full notice and knowledge that in 1878 Congress had absolutely declined by the joint vote of the two Houses to extend further the time. It would be a very nice question, if the law of the charter is to be construed as an entirety and the grant in the charter as an entirety, and they failed on the 4th of July, 1879, to complete the entire road, whether they would be entitled to any portion of the grant, even for the 592 miles; but it is conceded on all sides that in equity they would be entitled to that part. From the 4th of July, 1879, to the present time they have gone on building the road with their eyes open, with full notice and knowledge that Congress had a perfect right at any time to declare the forfeiture because the forfeiture existed as a fact by non-compliance on the 4th of July, 1879, of the company with the conditions of the grant, and Congress thereafter at any time had the right to make that declaration. Negligence can not be urged against the lawmaking power. To-day the proposition comes up to declare that forfeiture. The equitable feature I have answered. Are there any reasons why this bill should not be passed?

It seems to me that it never was the intention of Congress to give to any body of men on earth the right to hold one-half of a vast body of land 120 miles in width for all time to come to the exclusion of every honest settler. That was certainly not the purpose. The purpose of Congress was a speedy building of the road, and in order to accomplish a speedy building of the road this magnificent domain of 12,800 acres of land per mile within the States and 25,600 acres of land per mile within the Territories was given. Time was of the essence of that contract. Three-fourths of the whole line of road was within the Territories, as the Senator from Mississippi says, and therefore for that three-fourths they got the amount of 25,600 acres per mile, an amount unparalleled.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MAXEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I have listened very patiently to the argument of the Senator. I should like the Senator from Texas——

Mr. MAXEY. I did not get up for the purpose of making a speech, but to give my reasons as briefly as possible, though I will hear the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. On the theory of the argument that the Senator from Texas has been making and carrying out the logic that he has suggested, I would like the Senator to point out what equity there is in favor of the railroad company as to the lands adjacent to that portion of the road completed before the date fixed in the law for the completion of the road, and those lands which are adjacent to the rest of the line.

Mr. MAXEY. The difference in the equity, in my judgment, is this: that every mile of that 592 miles was built at a time when they had the legal right to build, and the 4th of July, 1879, not having been reached, all they built prior to that time was built in strict accordance with the law; but from the 4th of July, 1879, they had no promise of this Government to give them one acre of land. In the first case they had the promise of the Government up to the 4th of July, 1879, and not a day longer, but after that time the company took the chances without any promise whatever, and without any claim, legal or equitable. They took the chances.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. But the condition of the grant, according to the Senator, was that the whole of the road should be completed by that time.

Mr. MAXEY. I prefer to proceed.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I will not interrupt the Senator if he prefers not to yield.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator can reply to what I say. I maintain the proposition that these railroads are great civilizers, that the building of this railroad out to Puget Sound and to Portland, Oreg., has opened towns and rendered available for man's use a vast amount of land which otherwise would long, perhaps always, remain of little value to the country unless means of transportation were obtained. I concede that. I concede that when that road was authorized the Government had in view the fact that the alternate sections reserved by the Government would be appreciated in value by the building of the road, but I also know that when the company accepted the charter the very work which they did appreciated the value of that which did not belong to them but which the Government had by the charter given to them on the condition that they would complete the road in a specified time. For the appreciation of every acre of land which the Government got the benefit of, the company got in like manner the appreciation of every acre of land which the Government gave them. So that there is no equity on that branch of the case.

But, sir, going back to the point I made, that time was of the essence of the contract, on the 4th of July, 1879, Congress having failed to give any extension of time beyond that date, and that being five years longer than the original charter intended and three years longer than the extended time by the act of 1866, they were then notified to build the railroad within that time and you shall have this land; and had they complied with the terms of the charter their rights would have been complete.

Congress has not violated its promise. Congress does not propose to violate even the implication of a promise by refusing to them the land for the 592 miles which they built within the time, although according to strict, cold law, regarding the contract as an entirety, a point might well be made that they had lost all because they did not comply with the contract.

Time was of the essence of the contract; undoubtedly it was; the very fact that war was flagrant at the time the original charter passed was conclusive evidence of that. Then they are entitled to no equity, because they failed and neglected for six years even to make a beginning, and have gone along until Congress has out of its grace extended to them five years more time than they had originally; and now they come in, and although they built the road on with their eyes open, they want all the land. Is that fair? I think not. We have got to be just before we can be generous. The land does not belong to us. The right to give the land as a mere gratuity is not in Congress.

The original grant was made because it was believed by Congress that it would benefit the people of the United States. Congress has complied with all its contract. The company has not. The company comes in now and claims not that Congress has failed to comply with its contract, not that Congress has held out any inducement to them to build the road after the time, July 4, 1879, had elapsed, but that the Executive Department had done so, and they attempt to plead an equitable estoppel by reason of that conduct. I have shown that that is impossible.

It is the interest of this Government that all this vast public domain out West shall be settled up by honest, thrifty, hardy settlers. If there is a thing that is cursing this country to-day it is the ownership of vast bodies of land by private individuals and corporations when thousands and thousands of people throughout the country are left landless and homeless. It is the part of a wise government in the exercise of a true policy never to put these vast bodies of land beyond the control and reach of the law. For that reason I believe that as this company has no legal claim, and in my judgment no equitable claim, we should simply declare a forfeiture and exercise the right of entry. That in my judgment is the interest of the people and no injustice to this company. So believing I shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. VAN WYCK), which will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 12, after the word "Oregon," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "mountains," in line 14, and to insert:

And also all lands which appertain to and are conterminous with that part of the branch line across the Cascade Mountains which shall not have been constructed on the 15th day of June, 1886.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I rise to ask if the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] does not take precedence of that offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Louisiana has not been offered, the Chair is informed by the President of the Senate.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I think as to priority of date at all events the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana seems to have precedence of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Jersey that he is informed by the President of the Senate that the Senator from Louisiana has offered no amendment. He simply gave notice that he would offer one.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then I am mistaken.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I do not propose to undertake to answer the elaborate speeches which have been made upon the other side of the Chamber upon this bill. There are many things which have been stated that according to my information are incorrect; many of them are contradicted by the current history of the country, because the history of this great enterprise is part of the history of this country. There are some things, however, which have been stated that I feel in duty bound, having charge of the bill, to notice.

I called attention on a previous day in a very brief and imperfect manner to the great importance of this line of transportation, to the great importance which I attach to an early completion of what is known as the Cascade branch, to the fact that there is already completed and in operation entirely across the continent upon British soil a railroad terminating upon Puget Sound which will be a competitor of this road and of the other transcontinental roads of this country for the traffic of the Pacific coast as well as of China and Japan. I do not propose at this time to repeat what I then said. If the logic of the facts which I presented, and if the logic of the figures in regard to to the cost of the construction of the uncompleted portion of the Cascade branch which I propose to present at this time are not sufficient to convince Senators that no obstacle should be placed in the way of the construction of that branch and of the completion of a direct line of communication between Lake Superior and Puget Sound, nothing which I could say would convince them.

Much has been said in regard to "the company"—meaning the Northern Pacific Railroad Company—and the term has been used I think rather loosely and indefinitely, at one time meaning the projectors of this enterprise who came to Congress and proposed, if they could obtain Congressional aid in the shape of a grant of land, that they would endeavor to secure subscriptions from the people of the United States to the capital stock of the company by which they would undertake—that is, the people who subscribed to the stock of the company would undertake—to construct this road. But who are the Northern Pacific Railroad Company? Not alone the individuals who with foresight and public spirit projected this enterprise.

They may be perhaps to-day in their graves or have no connection with this corporation. Not alone the president and directors of the company, the men who, for the time being as trustees, control and direct its operations, who are elected from year to year by the stockholders of the company; they are not the company, but they are its representatives. The company is composed of fifteen thousand stockholders, residing in every State and Territory in this Union, many of them trustees of express trusts, guardians of minors, executors and administrators of estates, widows, trustees of religious and charitable institutions. They constitute the Northern Pacific Railroad Company; they are the parties in interest, the cestui que trusts of the property of this corporation.

But, as I said on a previous occasion, whoever they may be, it is not their interest that moves me in what I have said in opposition to this amendment, because they are private citizens, and although there may be many of them, their interests are of secondary importance. I look alone to the question of the commercial importance of the great enterprise of tunneling the Cascade Mountains; and with my knowledge of the condition of that country, knowing as I do that the great, growing, grand Territory of Washington is separated into two portions by the Cascade Range which is being pierced by this Cascade branch, and knowing that there is nothing of practical value to the Government or to settlers left of the land grant lying adjacent to and conterminous with the uncompleted portion of this branch, I raise my voice in this body against throwing an obstacle in the way of this enterprise. That is the motive that actuates me.

Senators have said we are proposing to forfeit nothing by this bill. As I said on a former occasion, we are proposing to forfeit two or three million acres of land lying adjacent to 214 miles of the main line of this road, and which, leaving out the question of the power of Congress to divert it from the work to which it was pledged, ought to be forfeited; but when we come to the Cascade branch, there is nothing to be advanced in favor of a forfeiture but a mere theory that it is the duty of Congress to forfeit an unearned grant, nothing of practical value to the Government and nothing of practical value to the settlers is involved, while the commercial interests of the whole country demand the completion of the branch and the opening of a direct line of road to Puget Sound.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. DOLPH. I will.

Mr. GEORGE. Was there any Government subsidy or subvention in any way ever granted for that 214 miles of road built from Portland to Wallula, or was it built entirely as a commercial enterprise by the stockholders of the company that built it?

Mr. DOLPH. I have stated that before.

Mr. GEORGE. I forget what you stated.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator the other day referred—and I might as well refer to it in this connection—to the reorganization of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in 1875. As I then said—I make the statement from recollection—at the time of the reorganization there were 530 miles of railroad completed, and there had been issued and sold $30,000,000 of bonds. I am a resident of the North Pacific coast and was vitally interested, as all the people there are, in the construction of this line, and I never have heard it suggested, until it was suggested by the Senator from Mississippi, that that money was not expended and properly expended in the construction of the road and in the work which had been done. Not only had that much road been constructed, but extensive terminal works had been constructed at Duluth on Lake Superior. The company had built 110 miles of road from the Columbia River to Puget's Sound, from Kalama to Tacoma, and had bought up what was known at that time as the Oregon Steam Navigation Company, a company which owned a fleet of steamboats and railroad portages around the Cascades and the Dalles of the Columbia River, and was navigating the river; and it was a part of their plan of operations that this line of transportation by boats and portages was for the time being to form a part of their line, and that they would devote their energies, as was at last done, in constructing the main line from the Columbia River to Lake Superior; and a part of this expenditure of $30,000,000 went for the purpose of purchasing the property of the navigation company or the controlling interest in it. Of course when the crash came during the financial panic of 1873 the stock of the company went down. The Northern Pacific Railroad Company could not fulfill its contract, and the result was that the original proprietors of the navigation company purchased up the stock at a low valuation in the Eastern markets and acquired control again of that enterprise.

Senators have talked of overcapitalization. The original stock of the company was $100,000,000 authorized capital. It has never been increased. When the reorganization was made in 1875 it was provided that $51,000,000 of preferred stock should be issued. There were outstanding $30,000,000 of bonds. There was due on these bonds unpaid interest for two years at 8 per cent., and preferred capital stock was delivered to these bondholders in exchange for these bonds. There were two years' back interest on the bonds and three years' interest in advance paid on the stock, making $12,000,000 interest, $42,000,000 principal and interest in preferred stock which was delivered to the bondholders. That $42,000,000 in preferred stock was all the bondholders ever received except a dividend of 11 per cent. in certificates paid some two years ago as the value of the proceeds of the sales of lands of the company which had gone into construction, but which should have been paid to the preferred stockholders. For eleven years they have received nothing upon their investment except this 11 per cent. in certificates, and their stock is quoted at less than 60 cents on the dollar.

Mr. GEORGE. Preferred stock?

Mr. DOLPH. The preferred stock. The other $9,000,000 of preferred stock was placed in the treasury and sold, as the securities were sold, and the proceeds were applied to the construction of the road.

Something has been said about the common stock. This common stock simply represents the balance of the authorized capital stock which has been in part paid, I can not state the amount. It is worth to-day, as was stated by the Senator from Ohio, 25 per cent. on the dollar. Nothing has ever been received upon it.

Mr. GEORGE. Was anything ever paid upon it?

Mr. DOLPH. There has been, but I am not able to state the amount. My information is, without being able to state the exact figures, that the amount paid upon it and accrued interest would be greater than its present market value.

Mr. GEORGE. Has the Senator any certain information that a dollar has been ever paid on it?

Mr. DOLPH. I have seen it stated frequently. Whatever has been paid upon it does not affect this question in any way whatever. Every man who has paid a dollar into this enterprise, as bondholder, or as preferred stockholder, is preferred to the common stock. All the fixed charges of the company upon their bonds, first and second mortgage bonds, and the interest on the preferred stock, which represents the original bonds, must be first paid before anything can be paid upon the common stock. So that this company is like any other corporation in which the full amount has not been paid, in which all the fixed charges must first be met; and the time is uncertain in the future, is speculative, when anything at all can be received upon the common stock.

But I am wandering from the inquiry put to me by the Senator from Mississippi. Some years ago, in 1879, Mr. Villard conceived the project of buying up the Oregon Steam Navigation Company, the property of which had gone back in the mean time to the original proprietors in the manner which I have stated. He bought up that.

Mr. GEORGE. Where did that company run; on the Columbia River?

Mr. DOLPH. On the Columbia River, from Portland to Wallula, and above. The boats ran up to Lewiston, on the Snake River. Mr. Villard stepped in and bought up this intermediate line of water transportation, and then conceived the idea of building a railroad along the river; and the time being ripe for it, his first move being considered a brilliant one, he succeeded in getting the capital to construct the line of railroad from Portland to Wallula and a branch from this line from a point below Wallula across the Blue Mountains, in Oregon, to the State line, now forming part of the Oregon Short Line which connects with the Union Pacific, and which was built without Government aid. That is the reason I believe this portion of the grant ought to be forfeited, although the time will come when another line will be necessary there. The Northern Pacific will be compelled to build that line for self-protection in order to have a through independent line down the Columbia. The Oregon Railway and Navigation Company's line is likely to pass under the control of some other company—very probably the Union Pacific.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not understand the Senator's statement about the building of that road. What was the date?

Mr. DOLPH. The company was organized in 1879. The road was not built until 1881 or 1882. Perhaps it was 1883 before it was completed.

Mr. GEORGE. It was built then by a company organization entirely distinct and separate from the Northern Pacific Railroad?

Mr. DOLPH. So I stated. Entirely distinct from the Northern Pacific Railroad Company; and the Northern Pacific Railroad Company has nothing to do with it to-day. They have running connections only, as I understand, and they will be compelled, as a matter of self-protection, to build an independent line down the Columbia River themselves. But I believe that inasmuch as the people have another line which has induced the settlement of the country, and this grant is greatly in the way of the development of the country, it ought to be forfeited; and that is the object of this bill.

The company, I state now, would like to hold on to that grant until it can build the road. Besides that, they deny that Congress has any power to divert the land from the object for which it was granted.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the Senator to say that the company now insist that under this law it has the right to build that road and receive the subsidy for it from Wallula to Portland.

Mr. DOLPH. I have no doubt they do. As was stated by my colleague the other day, the company, relying upon the opinions of eminent lawyers, among them Hon. J. S. Black, from whose opinions I quoted, and on some decisions of the courts, hold that under the ninth section of the act all that Congress can do in case of default of the company is to apply the grant in some other manner to the completion of the road; that the power of absolute forfeiture was not reserved in the act; but I do not care to discuss that question now.

I have been diverted from the line of argument I proposed to follow. I will now refer to the question of forfeiture. Waiving for the present the question as to whether or not this act must stand by itself, whether or not in case of default all that Congress can do is to take the grant and apply it in some other manner to the completion of the road, and treating this grant as similar to the sixty-one others passed previously, I will say just a word in regard to the right of forfeiture.

It appears to me that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] in his speech confounded a condition precedent with a condition subsequent. Where there is a grant upon condition precedent, the condition must be performed before the grant takes effect. Where there is a grant upon condition subsequent, the grant takes effect at once. In this case the grant was a grant in præsenti, and the condition was a condition subsequent. In such a case if the condition is not performed the grantor may enter for a breach of condition and resume the estate. It has been the law for two hundred years that time in such a case is not of the essence of the contract, and this grant between the Government and the company is a contract.

Mr. EUSTIS rose.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator declined the other day to yield. I am going to be very brief. I will only state my side of the question; I do not expect to convince him at all.

I say it has been the law for two hundred years, a law which enters into every contract whether expressed or not, the law of the land which becomes a part of every contract made between individuals, the law which entered into this contract between the Government, as I believe—stating my view of the law—and this grantee, that the grantor has an option to take advantage of the breach or not; and if entry is not made for the breach until the condition is performed, the condition, using the language of the Senator from Louisiana, is gone forever, and the estate is just as indefeasible as if no condition had been attached to the grant. That is my view of this case.

That brings me to the consideration of another proposition, and that is that one of the conditions of this grant was that the whole road should be completed within a given time, and at this time the whole road is not completed. And that that is a condition which relates to the entire grant. If that view of the law is correct, then there is no more reason for forfeiting the lands which have been earned since 1879 than the lands which were earned prior to that time by the construction of the road, because the condition goes to the entire grant.

But, as I said on a former occasion, I think under the granting act in this case and all of a similar character that every section of road stands by itself independently of every other portion of the road; that the grant is divisible, and that whenever the condition as to a section is performed the grant as to that section has passed beyond the power of Congress; in other words, beyond the power of the grantor to enter for breach of condition.

Mr. GEORGE. I agree with the Senator entirely in that. That is the obvious effect of the fourth section of the charter. I agree with the Senator entirely in that proposition, only as these sections of 25 miles are completed in accordance with the terms of the charter and within the time prescribed for that completion in the charter.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator says he agrees with me entirely, but he does not agree with me according to my view of the case. He agrees with me, I understand, in this proposition, that the condition that the whole road shall be completed within a given time does not extend to those sections of the road which were completed and accepted within the time limited in the charter. He only disagrees with me in the proposition that the Government stands in this matter of contract like an individual, and that if it does not enter for breach of condition the condition may still be performed after the time limited with the same effect as if it had been performed before. He disagrees with me on this proposition as I understand.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I disagree there.

Mr. DOLPH. That is my position upon this question. I do not propose to argue it. I merely state it and leave it. If that position is not correct, from my standpoint, I do not believe after the Government has stood by and seen these conditions performed it would be honest for the Government, or honest for me as representing in part the Government in this legislative body, to take advantage of the breach of the condition and claim a forfeiture. But, as I said before, I believe that the law is such that as to the sections of the road which have been constructed, examined, and accepted in accordance with the law, though since the time limited within which the road was required to be completed, the grant is beyond the power of the grantor to resume it for breach of condition.

Mr. GEORGE. Has the Senator any legal authority for that position?

Mr. DOLPH. I think I have a great many cases, but I do not propose to cite them now. I can not convince the Senator from Mississippi. He would not agree with me as to what the authorities mean, nor would the Senator from Louisiana. I differ with them in regard to what the authorities are, and therefore it would be profitless for me to cite them. Some of them have already been cited. I content myself with stating what I understand the law to be. The authorities, Van Wyck vs. Knevals and Schulenberg vs. Harriman, have been cited, and others.

Mr. GEORGE. Has it been stated that those cases established that proposition?

Mr. DOLPH. I think they do. I think one certainly does, and the other goes a great way toward it. There are others.

I have been a little surprised at the zeal of my friend from Florida [Mr. CALL]. I know he always means to be right, and he is always earnest. I am told that the State of Florida has made a grant of her entire swamp lands to railroad companies and there has been patented to the State 15,992,244.41 acres of swamp lands, that indemnity lands have been awarded her amounting to 56,518.99 acres, and that she still claims indemnity to the extent of 2,082,528.25 acres, and if I am not entirely mistaken I have heard it claimed by the Senator on this floor that large amounts of the lands which have been patented to the State as swamp lands were good agricultural lands.

Mr. CALL. Allow me to say just there that the lands were confirmed by act of Congress in 1856, long before any of us had anything to do with it.

Mr. DOLPH. That was not the point precisely. The United States granted to the State of Florida, May 17, 1856, for the Atlantic Gulf and West India Transit (formerly Florida Railroad) 290,183.28 acres; May 17, 1856, for the Florida and Alabama road 165,688 acres; May 17, 1856, for the Pensacola and Georgia road, 1,275,579.52; May 17, 1856, for the Florida, Atlantic, and Gulf Central, 29,384.18 acres. I understand also that much of these lands have been earned within the last two years, even during the present Senatorial term of the Senator from Florida by the construction of the roads; and my present recollection is that this is the first session that the zeal of the Senator from Florida in regard to the forfeiture of land grants has ever been exhibited. I may be wrong about that. If I am, when he has the floor again he can correct me.

This State of Florida, which has received such valuable grants from the General Government, which has disposed of her swamp lands to railroad corporations, and has had the benefit of these improved means of transportation, is represented here by a gentleman who would deprive the Territory of Washington, the most distant Territory of the United States, with her peculiar geographical situation, divided into two parts without communication between one part of the Territory and the other, of the benefit of the land grant for the unconstructed gap of this road of the North Pacific in the Cascade Mountains.

Mr. President, I desire to submit for the consideration of Senators the estimated cost of the 75½ miles of this gap of the Cascade branch. I read now from the last annual report of the board of directors of the company:

The cost of these 75½ miles will be as follows:
Twenty miles to foot of mountain grade on the west side of the summit	$530,700
Forty miles to foot of mountain grade on the east side of the summit	900,000
Fifteen and a half miles over the mountain including the tunnel (1.9 miles long)	2,441,200
Snow-sheds on mountain (if required) estimated at	200,000
Total cost	4,071,900

For 75½ miles of road the amount realized from first mortgage bonds sold at par for the 75½ miles would be $1,887,500; so that to be raised from other sources to complete this gap there will be required $2,184,400. I think, I greatly fear, that there is much force in the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio on last Friday that the forfeiture of the land grant for these 75½ miles will be an excuse for the company to avoid this large expenditure, and that they will be glad to avail themselves of it.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to section 9 of the act of July 2, 1864, as a conclusive answer to any difficulty on that subject if they fail to build. That section says:

> At any time hereafter the United States, by its Congress, may do any and all acts and things which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of the said road.

Under that provision I think Congress might seize the whole road and build those 75 miles.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not think Congress after it had violated the contract upon its part and had forfeited the land grant, could do any such thing. But there is another matter to be considered in this connection. By the provisions of this act and all land-grant acts it is provided that the road shall be a thoroughfare for the transportation of troops and mails, and Congress has provided by law that the mails on the land-grant railroads shall be transported for 50 per cent. of the amount paid to other railroad companies; and the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, I suppose, must be now under the general law transporting United States mails at 50 per cent. of the price paid to other companies. Putting the most reasonable construction on the effect of the forfeiture of this part of the grant, should it be made, it will be that as to that part of the road if constructed by the company that law will not apply.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to refer to one other matter, and that is the financial condition of the company. I will say, however, before leaving the question of the Cascade branch that I am convinced that, should the company be deprived of the land grant, comparatively worthless as it is for this section of the Cascade branch, it can not obtain the funds with which to prosecute the work. The work will be delayed, in my judgment, for ten years, and by that time the Canadian Pacific will have seized and so secured as to forever control the commerce of that Northwestern country.

The financial status of the company on July 30, 1885, which was before the 65 miles of the Cascade branch recently completed had been built, was as follows:

General first-mortgage bonds	$43,403,000
General second-mortgage bonds	18,857,000
Missouri division mortgage bonds	2,233,500
Pend d'Oreille division mortgage bonds	3,240,000
	67,733,500
Add to this preferred stock, which is an equitable mortgage, being the old first mortgage converted into stock	38,610,584
Total	106,344,084

To this must be added, to come down to the present time, the securities issued upon the 65 miles since constructed and accepted by the present administration. I have stated that $42,000,000 of preferred stock were issued for the purpose of retiring first-mortgage bonds, and $9,000,000 sold and the proceeds used in construction. The difference between the $38,610,584 stated here and the $51,000,000 is accounted for by the fact that the preferred stockholders had a right by the terms of reorganization to take the lands east of the Mississippi River at the appraised value and to pay for them in stock, and the preferred stock has been reduced by that method and by the proceeds of the lands sold to this amount of $38,610,584.

Much has been said in regard to this magnificent land grant. It is estimated that the total amount of the grant is 43,200,000 acres. The amount sold up to June 30, 1885, was 5,468,779.97 acres. Let it be remembered that these lands sold, 5,000,000 and over out of 43,000,000 acres, were the choice lands, choice by reason of their quality and choice by reason of their location. They were the very first to be selected. That left at that date of the balance of the estimated grant 37,731,220.03 acres. I had occasion to state the other day that in the Territory of Montana there are 21,000,000 acres of this grant, there being 800 miles of the railroad within that Territory, and that out of the 21,000,000 acres there are not to exceed a million and a half acres of any value whatever; and the probability was that there are nearly 20,000,000 acres that under the operation of the law for the taxation of railroad lands would pass into private hands because the company would not pay taxes on them. I undertake to say now, from general knowledge of the country and the best information I have been able to obtain, that when 5,000,000 more acres have been selected and sold the remainder will be of comparatively little value, and that more than one-half of the grant is valueless altogether.

I will state further in this connection that so far as I have ever heard—and I have followed the history of this enterprise as carefully as most men in public life—no part of this road was constructed by a construction company, that no man connected with the company, so far as I ever heard, made a dollar out of the construction of the road; and in my judgment if there is an honest corporation so far as the construction of its road is concerned to-day it is this one.

Mr. GEORGE. Suppose the road to be completed all the way to Tacoma from Lake Superior, is it a valuable road or not, a good road? I do not mean as to its physical structure, but commercially.

Mr. DOLPH. The gentleman might have asked me in regard to the construction of this road. I am not very much of a judge myself, but from the reports from every one who has passed over it, it is a good road and well constructed. Will it be a valuable road? In time, yes. At the present time it is like all the railroads which have been projected across the continent through a new and unsettled country. The earnings are not large enough to make it profitable to the stockholders; it is not so profitable that there will be dividends on its common stock for many years to come. The country is better than the corresponding country along the Union and Central Pacific Railroads. There is much more arable land along the line of the road through Western Dakota and Montana than between the corresponding points on the Union and Central Pacific roads, but there is much waste and mountainous land in Montana and in Western Dakota and in Eastern Washington, and it will take time to develop the country and secure to the road large earnings.

Mr. GEORGE. If the land is so worthless, it would not injure the road much to take it away.

Mr. DOLPH. I am not going to discuss the question of the forfeiture of the earned lands. I did state in a general way my position in regard to it. I am not afraid of the Congress of the United States taking away the land of the company which has been earned, as I claim, by the construction of its road. I am afraid, I will state to the Senator, that the construction of this Cascade branch will be delayed if not prevented. It would injure the company, certainly, to forfeit the lands conterminous to the 75 miles. But that is not the question that troubles me. We will injure ourselves worse; we will injure the commercial interests of the country much worse than we will injure the railroad company by stopping the construction of the road.

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? I will say to him that I never declined to answer any questions.

Mr. DOLPH. I will yield.

Mr. EUSTIS. I never declined to answer any question that any Senator wished to ask me. The Senator seems to be familiar with the financial condition of this corporation. I should like to ask him what the statement means in the report of the Secretary of the Interior? I understand that it is admitted on all sides that the estimated cost of this road is $75,000,000. The liabilities of this railroad are stated in the report to which I refer as follows:

Total debt	$79,434,211 24
Total stock	87,610,584 32
Total stock and debt	167,044,795 56

That is upon the basis of the actual cost of the road being $75,000,000, which makes an excess of over ninety millions of total debt and capital stock. I would ask the Senator what amount of the total debt is bonded debt?

Mr. DOLPH. I will let the Senator get through his question, and then go on.

Mr. EUSTIS. That is all I want to know for information.

Mr. DOLPH. I have stated, and if the Senator had listened he would have heard——

Mr. EUSTIS. I have listened.

Mr. DOLPH. I have stated what the bonded and total debt, including the preferred stock of the company, was on the 30th of June, 1885, giving the different items of the indebtedness. Now I will state further that it is very easy for anybody to sit down and say that this road cost so much or ought to have been built for so much; a road stretching over 2,000 miles through a wilderness; a road in which it is necessary to build tunnels 1.9 miles long; a road which has been years in process of construction, and which has placed its securities on which interest must have accumulated and have been paid from year to year; a road which has expensive terminal works upon Puget Sound and upon Lake Superior—it is very easy to sit down and say this road should have cost so much, and then say the debt is so much, and therefore the money has been squandered or misapplied.

I will answer the Senator by saying that I understand that the debt of the company, all of it, represents money which has gone into the construction of the road, and I never have heard it charged and it can not be shown that a dollar of it has gone in any other direction. I have already explained that $49,000,000 of the capital stock represents the original common stock of the company, that which will receive no dividends and no benefits from this enterprise until the fixed charges upon all the mortgages and preferred stock, which represent the debt of the company, are paid; and the question of how much has been paid upon it, I apprehend, is a question between the stockholders themselves and the creditors of the company.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator say the common stock is worth 60 cents on the dollar?

Mr. DOLPH. No, sir. But I do not yield further.

Mr. EUSTIS. Does the Senator think he has answered my question?

Mr. DOLPH. I will not yield further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The Senator from Oregon has the floor and declines to yield.

Mr. DOLPH. This grant has been talked of as a subsidy and as a donation. It was no such thing. Here was the United States owning public land from the Missouri River through to the Columbia River. It was a vast wilderness. As was said the other day, it was inhabited by hostile bands of Indians which were costing us millions of dollars to keep in check. It could not be reached by immigration. The Government has received its consideration for its contract. This road has been built across the continent. The mountains have been tunneled; the country has been made accessible, and to-day there are settlers under the pre-emption and homestead laws on lands all along the line. Territories have been carved out of this public domain. There are flourishing towns and cities, and mines have been developed and are adding to the wealth of the country. Means of communication have been made through to the North Pacific coast, and people are flocking into Oregon and Washington.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] said the Government had kept its part of the contract. The Government did not do that. Attention was called by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] the other day to the fact that it was provided in the granting act that the lands should be surveyed, and, as the Senator showed, but a small fraction of them had been surveyed, only 21,000,000 acres within the limit of the entire grant. The Government undertook to extinguish the Indian title, and, as I said the other day, it failed to do it, and the company were driven off when they went upon the reservations to survey the lands. They were ordered out by direction of the Interior Department and compelled to treat with the Indian tribes and to pay them for the lands they needed for right of way, and to come to Congress to have the treaties confirmed.

Mr. President, I was very much interested, as I think we all were who listened the other day to the remarks of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] in regard to Washington Territory, and especially in regard to the Cascade branch of the Northern Pacific Railroad and the Canadian Pacific, and I desire as part of my remarks to place on record some quotations from that speech in opposition to the speeches of some gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber on this bill, and I ask the Secretary to read the portions which I have marked in the speech of the Senator from Alabama.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Considered in a political view there could be nothing more important to the welfare of the people of the whole Union than to have a State established at that angle of our Northwestern possessions, one side of which is washed by the Pacific Ocean and the other by the Straits of Fuca. I may describe it as a political buttress standing out there partly in the sea, opposed directly to the power and enterprise of the greatest rival that we have in the world—people of our own kith and kindred, whose power and enterprise we certainly ought to learn to estimate, if we have not done it yet—the British people.

What are they doing there? There is the great Fraser River that comes into one of these straits or sounds—I forget the name of the principal sound which it empties into, but it is in this great body of interior water near Vancouver's Island. That river has fine navigation for more than 250 miles from the coast, up which steamers of a very large class are running continually; and down along that river to its mouth comes the Canadian Pacific Railroad, which is now completed. We are toiling along through the Cascade Mountains with 60 or 70 miles of very heavy work to do before we can get our Northern Pacific road through on a direct line, while the Canadian Pacific, connecting on its east with the waters of Lake Superior and on its west, as ours will, with the waters of Vancouver Bay or Puget Sound, is entirely completed.

You may rely upon it that that is one of the best railroads in the world, constructed without reference to the outlay of money, laid down firmly, clothed with a most excellent quality of steel rails, and equipped as scarcely any other railroad in the Western world is equipped. I have it from friends who have gone over it and made personal inspection, railroad men, and men also who have worked out large sections of contracts upon that railway, that it is one of the best establishments in the world.

I remember within the last year to have seen a statement, extracted, I think, from the London Times, giving an expression of the British Crown through its premier in regard to this railroad, in which it was said that the British Crown would volunteer the payment of £20,000,000 for the completion of that road rather than it should fail.

Why does Great Britain want that road? It is far north, about 300 miles, I believe, on an average, north of the Northern Pacific road of ours. Why do they want it? The first idea in the mind of a British statesman always is power. A British statesman feels himself adequate to the accomplishment of anything which lies within the reach of enlightened intellect, force of character, courage, and determination. They have a wise, sagacious government that has forecast, and prudence, and thought. They ponder upon questions that lie fifty or a hundred years ahead, and gradually, sedately, and inevitably they work their way to the accomplishment of that great end. They do not falter about it; they do not hesitate; they turn neither to the right nor to the left; and while they do not boast about it they seldom fail to accomplish their purposes.

Great Britain has possessions in Australia, which are simply another continent, equal almost in material strength and wealth to the continent of South America, lying in a temperate latitude, fruitful in all that the earth produces, abundant in mines, surrounded by the seas, lying on the highway between India and the Atlantic, a place where her population gathers and strengthens and pays revenue, not by direct tribute but through commerce to London and the other great cities of England; a place where the heart of Great Britain pulsates almost as freely and as strongly as it does in England itself. She wants to be connected by two lines with that country. The longer line is through the Suez Canal, and in some respects that is the more difficult and the more dangerous line.

She has been paying heavy tribute to us for the passage of her mails and much of her light merchandise over our railways ever since the completion of our transcontinental system. She determined to get rid of that exaction which we were making upon her, and which she was compelled to submit to for the purpose of saving time in the transmission of her valuable merchandise, her exchange, and her mails. Hence it was that the Crown of Great Britain was willing to pay a bonus of £20,000,000 for the purpose of completing in first-class order and maintaining the Canadian Pacific Railway rather than to have it fail of completion, or even to be seriously delayed.

When Great Britain had that trouble with us about our possessions on the Northwestern coast was it a mere ideal fancy of hers that she desired to be possessed of a portion of the waters of that great inlet of the sea, and Vancouver Island, and the coasts along that island? It was one of the grandest of all the projects of British enterprise. She saw the time when railroads would reach across this continent, when she would have there an opportunity for the commercial control of the traffic of the great Pacific Ocean. She wanted a home port on the Pacific. She got it, and having got it she has gone on to improve it. She has got her railway running to it; she has got two vast colonies lying above it, British Columbia and the Northwestern Territory, which, though not as yet very populously inhabited, are attracting population rapidly and contain a vast area of fertile lands.

Great Britain has commenced to build her cities on that coast. There is Victoria, at the southern extremity of Vancouver Island; and what has she got at Victoria? She has a naval station there, a navy-yard, and a larger dock than there is in the United States except one, and that is at Mare Island. There is not a dock on the Atlantic coast which compares with that at Vancouver Island. Who has she got there? Admiral Seymour in command. What is he doing there? He has one of those magnificent iron-clad ships there that shelled Alexandria. Why? To give dignity to his enterprise and stateliness to the progress of British power in the Northwest, and perhaps to remind us that after all we had better not take many liberties with a country which is able to float around the world a ship like that, and with an admiral in command who takes charge of that place as a post of honor for the purpose of establishing the flag of Great Britain in power, in strength, and in perpetuity upon that shore.

What is our nearest town to that? What is our nearest fortification?

As to fortifications, I do not believe we have any, not a shovel of earth, so far as I remember, has been thrown up on Puget Sound, not a gun mounted. Port Townsend, lying 100 miles nearly to the southeast of Victoria, way down in the bosom of Washington Territory, at a narrow neck on this very deep inlet, is a place of commerce just commencing to bud and to grow.

We pass on down from that and come to Tacoma, just on the eastern shore of this inlet, a town which has magnificent prospects as being the terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad when that shall be completed. Then we have Seattle and Olympia—towns which are growing up there, depending entirely for their support, for their permanence, and for their future growth upon the enterprise of men who have gone out under a Territorial government and who are trying to establish themselves with capital and to surround themselves with every form of civilization that is necessary for an American community.

Mr. President, I think it is a duty that we owe to the people of the United States to furnish them such advantages as we can in making settlements in that country. I want to see them go there rapidly. I want to see capital accumulating rapidly in Washington Territory. The country needs it. The United States needs it. We need a concentration of power upon that Northwestern coast, and if we do not have it and put American genius and enterprise to work there we can understand that very soon British enterprise and British genius and persistence will have stripped from us the rewards that belong naturally to the people who occupy this great country of ours in respect to the commerce of foreign countries along and across the Pacific Ocean.

* * * * * * *

Mr. President, I am not in favor of the policy, no matter who profits by it, no matter if some men get rich by it who ought not to get rich by it—I am not in favor of the policy of cutting down the enterprise which is carrying our people to that Western coast and which is opening highways of access to that country. I do not want to see that tunnel and that heavy line of road-bed remaining to be built through the Cascade Mountains delayed for ten years. In ten years' time the Canadian Pacific Railway will have established itself and its lines of traffic throughout the countries of the Pacific, and we shall find that it will snatch from the Bay of San Francisco half, or it may be more than half, of its trade. We must have a competitor there; we must have somebody there at least to divide with Great Britain the honors and the wealth also to be accumulated from her commercial adventures in that ocean.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I will ask the Secretary also to read an article from the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, a newspaper published in New York, on this question, which I desire to have incorporated as a part of my remarks.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE SENATE AND THE NORTHERN PACIFIC LAND GRANT.

We can scarcely remember a proposition ever before the Senate with less merits to recommend it than the land grant forfeiture amendment of Mr. Van Wyck, which received the support of a majority of the Senators voting. Whether we view it in its relation to the development of a single Territory, or in its bearing upon the latent wealth and resources of the whole United States, or as a question affecting the rights and equities of individuals or of a corporation which has been simply spending money for years in opening up the land through which the road passes without receiving any return for the investment—in whatever light we view it, the Senators voting for the amendment have made a record which we should think they would be glad to erase.

The bill before the Senate in its original shape provided simply for the forfeiture of the unearned lands on that portion of the Northern Pacific main line between Wallula Junction and Portland. There was no objection to this if the company does not intend to build that part of its line. It is now using the track of the Oregon Navigation for the whole distance, and one object that Mr. Villard had in mind in uniting the two companies under one management was to avoid the construction on the part of the Northern Pacific of this parallel piece. At present it would be simply ruinous to undertake such a work, and though doubtless some time in the future the Northern Pacific would build the line if the land grant was continued, yet in view of the fact that the time fixed by Congress for the completion of the road has expired, and there is already another line between the same two points, there is some reason in the argument that the unearned land contiguous to this piece of road should not be kept in reserve for the company and withheld from the public domain. This evidently was the view of Mr. EDMUNDS, and he advocated the passage of the bill in that form.

But the amendments proposed go much further than this. The first amendment offered undertook to forfeit all lands not earned prior to the 4th of July, 1879, the time set for the completion of the road. That would have covered the vast bulk of the company's land grant, the greater part of the road having been built since that time; but of course the company would have nothing to fear from such a measure. The lands have been certified to the road by the proper officers in the proper way, under different administrations, and the attempt to deprive the company of them now, in the manner proposed, one finds it difficult to attribute to any motive other than the hope of obtaining political advantage among the most ignorant. But Mr. VAN WYCK (Senator from Nebraska) was prevailed upon to withdraw this amendment, and in lieu thereof offered another, forfeiting not only the lands between Wallula Junction and Portland, but also all other unearned lands, including those on the uncompleted portion of the Cascade division, the construction of which is being pushed as rapidly as possible. It is this latter amendment that Mr. EDMUNDS sought to have tabled and failed, the vote being against him 28 to 23, 25 members not voting.

Now what reason can be urged for forfeiting the lands on this Cascade division, completing the link connecting the main line of the road with Puget Sound? It is on the credit of the land chiefly that the Northern Pacific is building the road. The sole object of Congress in originally donating it was to secure the completion of the line, forming another route across the continent. The company has gone on with the work against great obstacles, till (barring the Portland division) the whole system except this Cascade division is in operation; and now, when the most difficult section is reached, the Senate proposes to forfeit the lands on that part of the line.

To understand the position one must remember that this Cascade division runs through and over the Cascade Mountain ranges, and the work is not only difficult but very tedious and expensive. There is an unfinished gap over the mountains of about 75½ miles, and it is on this that the company would lose the grant of land. An estimate in the last report of the road places the cost of building these 75½ miles at $4,071,900, or almost $54,000 per mile. This is not the cost calculated in bonds or stock, sold at a discount, but in cash. By the terms of its first mortgage the company can issue bonds only at the rate of $25,000 per mile, and a careful calculation of the amount required for the completion of the whole division (140½ miles) left $2,399,400 to be provided from other sources after the full issue of first-mortgage bonds at the rate of $25,000 per mile. That is, the proceeds of the first-mortgage bonds will fall nearly two and a half million dollars short of meeting the cost of the division in full. Hence we hazard nothing in saying that without the inducement offered by the land grant the work of building this division would never have been undertaken. The return promised on the investment is altogether out of proportion to the outlay incurred. Even with that inducement, there are many who doubt the wisdom of the venture. Yet now we have certain Senators seriously proposing that the company be deprived of the land.

Besides that, the building of this division is not a necessity to the Northern Pacific, for the company can in the future, as in the past, use the Oregon Navigation line from the Junction at Wallula to Portland for an outlet to the Pacific. On the other hand, it is a necessity to the people of Washington Territory and the Pacific coast. According to Senator DOLPH, of Oregon, there is not even a wagon-road across the Cascade Mountains in Washington Territory, and the people in going from one side of that Territory to the other have to go by the Columbia River and Portland, Oreg., and every bushel of produce raised in Eastern Washington has likewise to be taken that way. Moreover, the building of the division is in the interest of quicker communication and cheaper transportation, and consequently is in the interest of the whole country, and not the Pacific section alone. The company is going on with the work in good faith, and thus earning the grant. Why, then, take it from it, especially as the object which the grant had in view, namely, the construction of the road, is being steadily accomplished? If the work does not progress as rapidly as could be wished, that is because of the natural obstacles in the way, and it should not be forgotten that according to the calculations of the road's officials, made a year ago, the tunnel alone will require from two to two and a half years for its completion. How inexpedient and wrongful then for Congress to attempt to harm the credit of the company when it is in the midst of the work, incurring enormous expenses and bending all its energies to securing its early completion.

We do not think the proposition to alienate the Cascade division lands would be entertained for a moment, except that in the peculiar state of the public mind, which has been fanned into a feeling of enmity against all land-grant roads, members of both parties think it to their political advantage to make these attacks. In this case the Northern Pacific is singled out because of the exceptionally large aggregate extent of the grant to it, and because the road was not completed within the time specified by law. But why was it not completed within the time limit? Simply because the period of depression through which the country was passing put such an undertaking out of the question then. Everybody knows how adverse was the financial situation between 1873 and 1879. As soon as the outlook began to brighten the work was begun in good earnest and with exceeding vigor, so that within a comparatively short period a vast amount of mileage was added to the system. And what was it that secured the prosecution of the enterprise? Nothing but the grant of land to be received. The company may have obtained the equivalent of a "whole empire," as we so often hear it said, but except for that grant of land the line could not have been built. The bonds of the road could not have been sold. The syndicate of bankers would not have undertaken to place them. It was the prospective value of the lands to be secured as the road progressed that constituted the chief value of the mortgage.

There is in connection with the same subject a great deal of talk about protecting the laboring people, but who has gained more from the building of the roads than these very laboring people? If the Northern Pacific had not been opened up, a vast section of country now the field of great industrial activity would have remained closed to settlement and immigration. The Northern Pacific received a good deal of land, but it received it only in alternate sections, and the other sections were, through its construction, improved in value and rendered accessible to settlers. Besides, even the railroad land is sold at very moderate prices, so that no one intending to take up his abode in that section need be deterred by that fact. Then consider the effects in cheapening transportation. Compare the rates across the continent since the opening of the line with those in force before the opening. Again, what would be the position to-day of such points as Minneapolis and Saint Paul without the Northern Pacific? The truth is everybody was clamoring for the road, and Congress did not dare to annul its charter. Mr. EDMUNDS made a good point on Senator VAN WYCK, who was so bitter in his opposition to the Northern Pacific in the debate when he contrasted the Nebraska Senator's position in favoring the building of Union Pacific branches in Nebraska (as proposed in a bill recently introduced by Mr. VAN WYCK) with that on the pending bill, virtually denying the same boon to Oregon and Washington Territory.

As regards the profits which the promoters of the enterprise are claimed to have made out of the scheme, they are very hard to find indeed, notwithstanding the liberal donation of land with which the road has been endowed. At present only the most careful and the most economical management enables the company to keep the yearly outlays within the limit of the ingoes. And as for the original projectors, every one remembers the Jay Cooke failure and how the road went through reorganization and foreclosure, the holders of the bonds taking the present preferred stock in exchange for the same. And how profitable the exchange has proved! The stock sells in the market to-day at 57, and in the interval that has elapsed since the exchange was effected—eleven years ago, though allowance for the first three years' dividends was made in the exchange—they have received just one dividend of 11.1 per cent. in scrip.

Mr. GEORGE. Who is the author of that article?

Mr. DOLPH. It is an article in the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, published in New York city.

I do not care to add anything further. As I said at the commencement of my remarks, if the logic of the facts which have been stated is not sufficient to save this grant for the 75 miles of the uncompleted gap of the Cascade branch, nothing I could say further would do it.

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DOLPH. I have concluded.

Mr. EUSTIS. I understood the Senator from Oregon to state that in all probability the Northern Pacific Railroad Company would construct the road from Wallula to Portland. If that be so and if it be true, as the Senator seems to believe, that time is not of the essence of the condition, I would ask him whether or not from his standpoint the forfeiture which he proposes would not be very unjust; in other words, whether this company ought not to be allowed ten or fifteen years more in order to save this land, as he claims it should be saved in reference to other portions?

Mr. DOLPH. I attempted last Tuesday to state with more particularity than I had on previous days—because the first and second days when the bill was being discussed I hoped to get a vote without an extended discussion, and made my remarks very brief—I say I attempted to state with more particularity why I thought the time had come when the grant for the 214 miles of the main line of the company's road, from Wallula to Portland, should be forfeited, and why I thought that there was no reason which would require or justify the forfeiture of grant for the 75½ miles on the Cascade Mountains. I then stated, and I now repeat, that the Northern Pacific Railroad is not now engaged in constructing that portion of its road, its main line between Wallula and Portland; that it has made no considerable expenditure there; that in the mean time another company has constructed a road which serves the public and answers the demand for transportation for the present; and that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company have perfected arrangements with that company to use their track.

I also stated, if I did not I will now state, that I have no assurance of any time in the future when the Northern Pacific Railroad Company will undertake the construction of this portion of its main line; and the fact that a road has been constructed along the same general route by another company has induced the settlement of the country and made this unearned land grant for this 214 miles a greater obstruction to the development of the country than it was before.

I stated further that I did not propose that my action should be governed by the interests of the company alone; that I propose to consider the interests of the public in determining the question as to whether this grant should be forfeited, and for the public interest I believed it should be forfeited for these 214 miles.

But I do state, as I stated on a former occasion, and as any one familiar with the geography of the country must know, that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, which has a line from Portland to Puget Sound, and a line from Wallula stretching to the east across the continent, must eventually have a line for its own protection between these two points. When the business of the country demands it the country will be so settled and the local business so great that the company will probably be in a condition to build that line without the aid of a grant.

I will state further that if to-day the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was engaged in constructing that line. I for one would not be willing to step in and place an obstacle in the way of its construction by the forfeiture of the grant, for I realize the importance and value of two lines of railroad down through the Columbia River basin. I will go further. If I had any reasonable assurance that within the next year or the next two years, and I do not know but I would say the next five years, the company would construct that line, I should be willing to allow them to do so and earn the land and secure in that manner the rights of settlers under their contracts with the company; but I have not that assurance. Therefore, I think that the grant there should be forfeited.

On the other hand, as to the Cascade branch, it is now the last hour, I may say the end, of the struggle for the completion of that through line, the last 75 miles, the most difficult, the most expensive to construct, looking to the public interest and not to the interest of the company (for I very much doubt whether it would be for the interest of the company to build it at all for years to come), and looking to the development of that Northwest country and to securing immediate and direct transportation between the two portions of Washington Territory, now separated by a mountain barrier, I am not willing to throw an obstacle in the way of the construction of that branch. I hope the Senator is answered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] as modified.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 12, after the word "Oregon," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "mountains," in line 14, and to insert:

And also all lands which appertain to and are coterminous with that part of the branch line across the Cascade Mountains which shall not have been constructed on the 15th day of June, 1886.

Mr. TELLER. The amendment has been modified by inserting, after the words "which shall not have been constructed," the words "on the 15th day of June, 1886."

Mr. ALLISON. "Which shall not have been constructed at the date of the passage of this act," is the language of the print.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator that the Senator from Nebraska has modified his amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to vote for the amendment forfeiting all the unearned land of this road, but I can not vote for the amendment in that shape, because I claim that we have no right to forfeit any land which has been earned before the passage of the act.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not consider the date at which the bill may become a law to be of any importance. I am perfectly willing to withdraw the modification and let the amendment stand as originally offered.

Mr. TELLER. Let us take the question then on the amendment as it has been printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks leave to withdraw the modification. The modification will be withdrawn.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let the amendment be read as it is now pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read as it stands with the modification withdrawn.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 12, after the word "Oregon," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "mountains," in line 14, and to insert:

And also all lands which appertain to and are coterminous with that part of the branch line across the Cascade Mountains which shall not have been constructed at the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Several days since I suggested an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, to insert certain words preceding that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 12, after the word "Oregon," and before the proposed amendment, insert:

Except such of said lands as appertain to and are coterminous with the branch line across the Cascade Mountains.

So as to read, after the word "Oregon:"

Except such of said lands as appertain to and are coterminous with the branch line across the Cascade Mountains; and also all lands which appertain to and are coterminous with that part of the branch line across the Cascade Mountains which shall not have been constructed at the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President, I will explain my amendment in a word. The two grants in the neighborhood of Wallula, Wash., the one by the way of the Columbia River and Portland to Puget Sound, and the other across the Cascade Mountains to Puget Sound, lap. No part of the road from Wallula to Portland has been completed, nor has there been any attempt on the part of the company to construct any portion of it, whereas a portion of the road between Tacoma and Wallula across the Cascade Mountains has been completed and accepted by the President of the United States. The land grant included in the grant adjacent to this completed road laps over the grant adjacent to the uncompleted road between Wallula and Portland.

The effect of my amendment is simply to except from the operation of this declaration of forfeiture those lands included in the grant to the branch across the Cascade Mountains which lie conterminous with and adjacent to that portion of the branch line which has been completed.

In other words, in voting against my amendment the Senate vote to declare forfeited lands adjacent to completed road. By voting for my amendment they exclude from the operation of the declaration of forfeiture, as I have stated, any lands included in the grant which are adjacent to and conterminous with road that has been completed and accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK.]

Mr. VAN WYCK. I supposed there was to be at least a clean forfeiture from Wallula to Portland on both sides of the proposed road.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. All the lands included in that grant which are not included in another grant and which are adjacent to road completed.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It so happens that some land adjoins both roads; that is, the road running from Wallula to Portland necessarily has land lying upon its right; the road running from Wallula to the Cascade Mountains necessarily has some land lying on its left; and they have unfortunately nearly all that Western territory in about the same situation; it has been duplicated by claims of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

From Wallula to Portland the land on both sides is tributary to the road, and had the road been built it would have absorbed the land on both sides. But when that branch of the case is reached they say, "Oh, yes; but some of this land is covered by the branch from Wallula across the Cascade Mountains, and therefore if we give up our first we still take our second claim on the land."

It seems that is reducing the thing to a fine point for a great corporation. When it was supposed that much at least would be restored to the public domain, these gentlemen step in and say, "We must hold it for the branch."

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Where the two grants lap the grant goes to the road which completes its line first; or if the grant is to two different companies, then it may go to that company whose right first attached, or is divided equally between the two. But here the grant is to the same company. It is two grants to the same company for two separate and distinct lines of road. One line has been completed, and of course the rights of the company attach to all the lands adjacent to and conterminous with that completed line of road. If the company succeeds to any vested rights by virtue of those facts, then the lands included in that grant are no longer included in the grant to a line of road which has not been completed.

So far as I am concerned, I am earnestly desirous of having a declaration of forfeiture made by Congress as to every foot of land which now pertains properly and rightfully by virtue of the grant to the line of road running from Wallula to Portland, because that line has not been completed, and no steps have been taken toward constructing any portion of it.

So, after all, we come back to the simple proposition, whether we shall by the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska vote to declare forfeited lands included in a grant to a road which road has in so far as these lands are concerned been completed, examined by commissioners, and accepted by the President.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from Oregon speaks of vested rights. To what does he refer? Does he refer to the portion of the lapsed grant which is now claimed by the branch to the Cascade Mountains?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. What I had reference to a moment ago when I used the term "vested rights" was simply this: I made the statement that the company had completed this particular portion of the road for a part of the distance across the Cascade Mountains, commissioners had been appointed by the President, it had been examined, and the road accepted. As to whether the company has any vested rights in that land is a matter perhaps for the courts. I myself think they have. I will say very frankly that any declaration Congress may make in regard to any such land I do not think would amount to the paper it is written on. That is my view of the law, and for that reason for one I shall vote to forfeit no land, if I know it, that is included in a grant to this or any other company where the road coterminous with which such lands lie has been completed prior to the date of the declaration of forfeiture by Congress.

Mr. VAN WYCK. May I ask——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Yes; I was speaking in the time of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I beg pardon; I desire the Senator from Oregon to finish.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not desire to make a speech, because I am very anxious to get to a vote, but I am also anxious that the Senate shall not vote under any misapprehension as to the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. That amendment, as I understand it as it now stands, without the modification I propose (the Senator from Nebraska will concede that, I presume), is a declaration of forfeiture in part as to lands which are included in a grant to this company which are adjacent to and lie conterminous with road now completed and accepted. That, I believe, is true; is it not?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It lies adjoining that, as well as the other branch that is not completed. It adjoins both roads.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. There is a lap. The two grants lap. The one road has been completed and the other has not. Of course the road which has been completed takes the grant; it is no longer a part or parcel of the grant to the company as to that portion of the road which has not been completed.

I desire the amendment to be so framed as to exclude from the declaration of forfeiture those portions of the grant which are included in the grant to the Cascade branch, and along which the road has been completed.

I shall vote, however, against the whole amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, even as so modified, and I wish to state in a word why. In other words, I shall vote against declaring a forfeiture of lands conterminous with and adjacent to the 75 miles of uncompleted road across the Cascade Mountains; and if the Senator from Nebraska and other members of the Senate could understand the situation on the Pacific coast as we who reside there understand it, if they could understand the difficulties connected with the question of transportation upon that coast, if they could understand that the people of that coast are to-day at the mercy of one corporation for a distance of 214 miles along the Columbia River, I do not believe there is a Senator on this floor who would not vote just as the Senators from Oregon propose to vote in reference to this amendment.

What will be the effect of the completion of the Northern Pacific road across the Cascade Mountains? One effect will be to release the people of that country from the monopoly of transportation which now exists on the Columbia River. In other words, instead of that whole section of country being at the mercy of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, which controls the transportation of that country absolutely for a distance of 214 miles, from Wallula to Portland, and for hundreds of miles in every direction, we would have a competing line from Wallula, or from Ainsworth, or Patapsco, wherever the point of connection is near there, to the city of Portland, and to Puget Sound as well.

The road of the Northern Pacific is completed from Portland to Tacoma, and is now being operated. All that is lacking in order to give the Northern Pacific Company a complete and independent line from Saint Paul to Portland, Oreg., and the waters of Puget Sound is the completion of this gap on the top of the Cascade Mountains. When that is completed the farmers of Eastern Oregon, Eastern Washington, and Idaho, the producers of that large producing field, instead of being subjected to this monopoly now controlling the valley of the Columbia and the Columbia River will have the benefit of a competing line. In other words, they will have two ways of getting their produce from that section of the country to Portland, whereas they have but one now.

Any Senator on this floor who is looking solely to the interests of the people, to the interests of the producer, and who cares but little for the interests of the monopolists, for the interests of the railroad companies, for the interests of the transportation companies, would it seems to me cast his vote in favor of doing that which would result in the early completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad across the Cascade Mountains to Puget Sound.

Whether that company will go on and complete the road across the Cascade Mountains in case they are deprived of these lands is a question which I am not able to answer. I have heard it said that they would not be able to complete the road if deprived of these lands, and I would not be surprised if this were so; and if such a result should follow it would be a great detriment, full of calamitous consequences to the producers of the Pacific Northwest.

I am not now speaking in the interest of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. I care nothing personally about that company. I am under no obligations whatever in that direction. If I were to be governed by my personal resentments here I might be willing to ignore public interests in order to embarrass this company; but I shall endeavor to protect the interests of the people, even if by so doing I may incidentally promote the interests of the railroad company. I am speaking in advocacy of what I believe to be right, looking to the true interests of commerce, looking to the true development of the Pacific Northwest, looking to the interests of the wheat-growers and other producers of Eastern Oregon, of Eastern Washington Territory, and of Idaho; and having in view, moreover, the still more important interests of our transcontinental and transoceanic trade. I shall therefore vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, and every other amendment that will, in my judgment, as I believe this one does, operate as an obstruction to a speedy declaration of forfeiture of all lands included in the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, which properly pertain to and are continuous with that portion of their main line that lies along the Columbia River, between Wallula, Washington Territory, and Portland, Oreg., and no portion of which has been completed.

Mr. HEARST. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. HEARST. I understand that the road for which the Senator from Oregon wishes to retain the land is a road from Wallula to Puget Sound.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That is correct.

Mr. HEARST. What benefit will that be to Portland?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am not speaking in the interest of Portland particularly, although I believe it would be a benefit to Portland perhaps. I am speaking in the interest of the producers in Eastern Oregon, Eastern Washington Territory, and Idaho. They are now at the mercy of one line of railroad and one line of steamers on the Columbia River, all owned and controlled by the one company, in their efforts to get their produce to the seaboard. That is the railroad and steamboat line owned by the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company down the Columbia River to Portland; whereas if this line of road were completed across the Cascade Mountains they could get their produce to the sea on Puget Sound, or they could even get it to Portland by way of the Northern Pacific Railroad (although the distance would be something over 100 miles farther) much cheaper, I have no doubt, than they now can get it to Portland by the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company's road, or by river transportation on their boats.

Mr. HEARST. I do not know just how far the Northern Pacific Railroad goes down the Columbia River.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I will explain that to the Senator from California. The Northern Pacific Railroad is completed from Saint Paul to Wallula, Wash. Wallula is 214 miles east from the city of Portland. Then the Northern Pacific Railroad is completed again from Portland, Oreg., to Tacoma, on Puget Sound. The distance between Wallula and Tacoma across the Cascade branch is 262 miles. Of that distance 187½ miles have been completed by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, examined by commissioners, and accepted by the President, and 75 miles on the top of the Cascade Mountains, of enormously difficult construction, remain uncompleted.

Mr. HEARST. I understand Wallula to be down near Walla Walla.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It is 40 miles west from Walla Walla, and the road of the Northern Pacific goes from near there across the Cascade Mountains to Tacoma, on Puget Sound.

Mr. HEARST. In other words, it connects with the Northern Pacific there and goes to Puget Sound across the Cascade Mountains?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Yes; it is part of the Northern Pacific. The proposition of my friend from Nebraska is to declare forfeited not only the lands from Wallula to Portland, down the Columbia River, along which the Northern Pacific company have no road, and which I heartily favor, but also the lands adjacent to the 75 miles of uncompleted road of the Northern Pacific on top of the Cascade Mountains.

Mr. HEARST. I understand the Columbia River runs to Puget Sound, but the road has no connection with its own line from where it strikes the river until it gets to Wallula. Is that the fact?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not think I quite understand the Senator.

Mr. HEARST. In going from Portland I went down the river and took a railroad that went to Puget Sound, which I understand is the Northern Pacific.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. From Portland to Tacoma. That is the Northern Pacific road completed. Doubtless when the Senator was there some years ago this road was only completed from Kalama to Tacoma. It is now completed from Portland to Tacoma.

Mr. HEARST. The Northern Pacific has no connection from there to Wallula with its own road?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. From Tacoma?

Mr. HEARST. From Portland.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. None whatever. They have only a running connection with the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, but they have never completed any road or any part of a road of their own on the 214 miles between Portland and Wallula.

Mr. HEARST. It seems a matter of very great importance to have the road finished down the river to connect with the road to Puget Sound.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Certainly it would be a matter of great importance to the Northern Pacific, and perhaps of still greater importance to the producer and shipper, but for twenty-two years that company has stood silently by and has never lifted a shovel toward the completion of that road. Therefore I say they are entitled to no consideration whatever so far as that portion of the land grant is concerned. Moreover, although I differ a little with my colleague, I do not believe they ever will complete that road, or have any present intenton at least to complete it.

Mr. HEARST. That is very unfortunate.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not believe they will ever complete the road from Wallula to Portland, and I believe there should be a declaration of forfeiture of the lands between Portland and Wallula. It should, in my opinion, have been done many years ago; but I do not think there should be included in that declaration of forfeiture any of the lands which are adjacent to that portion of the line of the Cascade branch which they have completed and which has been accepted by the President.

Mr. HEARST. Would not the Senator be willing to give them that land provided they would build down the river?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. For one I would not. I do not know what others would do. I think they have had ample time to build the road down the Columbia River, and as they are making no movement toward building it, I should be opposed to extending that grant one hour, so far as I am concerned, or even permitting it to remain unaffected by a Congressional declaration of forfeiture a single hour longer.

Mr. EUSTIS. I understood the Senator, in discussing the amendment which I propose to offer, to consider it an act of injustice to the corporation to forfeit any land where they have completed the road after the expiration of the time fixed by the grant.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not know that I said it would be an act of injustice in so many words, although I did substantially say so.

Mr. EUSTIS. You said you would not vote for it.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I did say that I should not vote for such a proposition, and I would not vote for it for the reason that to do so would be to do violence to my well-settled convictions as to the law of the case. I am firm in the opinion that the company have vested rights under the law and by virtue of their compliance with the law, so far as they have complied with it, to all lands adjacent to the road completed by them prior to any declaration of forfeiture. I believe that is the law. I believe the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in similar and cognate questions settle that question at least, and the construction I place upon these decisions is to that effect.

Mr. GEORGE. Does that apply to any other decision than in the cases of Schulenberg vs. Harriman and Van Wyck vs. Knevals?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I think the same rule of law applies to a grant made by the sovereign to a railroad company or to an individual that applies to a grant made by one individual to another. In my opinion the fact of sovereignty in the grantor cuts no figure whatever in the case; that the same rule of law as to the operation and effect of a condition subsequent in a grant applies, as I said, in a case where the grant is made by the United States precisely as in a case where the grant is made by one individual to another.

Mr. GEORGE. My object was simply to inquire of the Senator whether in referring to the decisions of the Supreme Court he referred to any other decision which established that proposition except the two I have mentioned.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I think there are a great many decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which sustain the view I take in which the question of conditional grants has been the subject of investigation, has been discussed and decided, and in which the question as to the effect of a failure to make a re-entry for a failure to comply with a condition subsequent in grants has been discussed and decided. Taking them altogether, I think the rule of law to be as was laid down by the supreme court of the State of New York in the case of Ludlow vs. The New York and Harlem Railroad Company, and reported in 12 Barbour, page 440. I desire, in this connection, to attract the attention of the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Louisiana to that case.

In the case of Ludlow vs. The New York and Harlem Railroad Company, 12 Barbour, 445, Ludlow had conveyed certain lands to the railroad company, with a condition in the deed of conveyance that the same should be void unless the railroad was completed through the premises conveyed on or before the 1st day of January, 1843. The road was not completed through the premises by the 1st day of January, 1843, but was completed on the 25th day of September, 1844; and on the 22d day of October, 1846, the grantor, Ludlow, commenced an action of ejectment for the land, but no attempt was made by the plaintiff to enter for the condition broken, or to assert his right to the possession until the 9th of September, 1846, when he gave the defendant written notice to surrender to him the possession. Those are the facts. In that case the court said:

> Did the grantor in the case under consideration manifest an intention not to insist upon a breach of the condition and dispense with the forfeiture? Was his conduct such as to induce the company to expend its money and proceed with the construction of the road after he knew that the condition had been broken? The referee found that he did. The facts, which are the evidence of this design, are not in dispute, and leave no room for doubt as to their real tendency. He made no effort to assert his right to the estate, nor to do any act equivalent to an entry at the common law, until two years after the forfeiture had occurred.

Just as here:

> During this time he saw the company making large expenditures over the premises in question, and extending the road at an enormous expense toward its northern terminus. * * * No stronger evidence could be exhibited short of the execution and delivery of a new deed of a design to waive the forfeiture and confirm the grant than the facts to which I have adverted. Motion to set aside the report of the referee is denied. (12 Barbour, 445.)

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if he does not draw a distinction between the action or non-action of an individual, and the action or non-action of the Government?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not in a case of contract or a simple grant of land, and that is all this is. I stated in the outset, the Senator will remember, that I believe the same rule of law should apply to a pure grant made by the sovereign with a condition subsequent attached which should be applied to a pure grant made by one individual to a railroad company or to another individual.

Mr. GEORGE. The Seantor is aware that the supreme court of New York is not the highest appellate tribunal of that State.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I understand that. I understand, of course, that the court of appeals is the higher court and appellate court.

Mr. GEORGE. The supreme court of New York is an inferior court.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I understand. At the same time the Senator from Mississippi will agree with me that the supreme court of the State of New York is a very creditable court, and its decisions are entitled to very great respect.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. My impression is that that decision was affirmed in the court of appeals, though I am not certain. I think if it was necessary and if I had the time (I did not intend to make a speech at this time) I could show any amount of authority to the effect that when the sovereign simply makes a grant or enters into a contract it dispenses with its sovereignty, or at least courts and Legislatures will dispense with it in so far as applying rules of construction to that grant or that contract, and the grant or contract must be construed by the same rules of law which are applicable to grants made by an individual or contracts entered into between individuals. But I shall not take up the time to go into that further.

Nor does the fact which is so often stated by lawyers and which has been so often repeated in this discussion, that the Government can not be guilty of any laches, cut any figure here. It is not so much a question of laches as that it is an absolute waiver by non-action (and in this instance by repeated affirmative acts of recognition) to do that which under the law the United States was compelled to do at a particular time in order to take advantage of the failure to comply with the condition subsequent attached to the grant.

Mr. HEARST. If the Senator from Oregon will yield to me, I wish to ask him a question. I am no lawyer, and may not be familiar with the principles to be applied in this case, but I should be very loath to vote for any bill to forfeit the land from Wallula to Portland, for the reason that the company have all the good land now, and if we could compel them in any way to finish the road from Wallula to Portland and give them bad land, it certainly would be a good trade for the United States, and particularly for Portland, Oreg. Therefore, I should be very loath to change any condition of the grant if the company could be compelled in any way to complete the road. If they have built part of the road and got all the good land, it seems to me there ought to be some way to make them build the rest of the road and take the bad land.

Mr. GEORGE. Is the land bad from Wallula to Portland?

Mr. HEARST. Yes; the good land commences right at Wallula.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I agree with the Senator from California that if there was any way (and my friend from Mississippi appears to think there is a way by virtue of the ninth section) to compel the Northern Pacific Company to complete that 214 miles it ought to be done, but I am not one of those who believe that continuing this grant to them for an indefinite period further will result in accomplishing that end.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator from Oregon agree with the Senator from California that the land included in the grant from Wallula to Portland is of very little value?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. No; I do not. There is a great portion of the land included in the grant from Wallula to Portland which is very valuable. It extends over into Umatilla, Gilliam, and Wasco Counties, in the State of Oregon, and I know the Senator from California visited that country. It is the most magnificent wheat field in the world; there is a great deal of good land included in the grant from Wallula to Portland.

Mr. HEARST. It is a broad grant, but, in traveling along the river and along the Cascades, as far as any one can see down the river it is miserably poor.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The portion of the grant included in the line through the Cascade Mountains of course is comparatively worthless, but there are a great many hundreds and thousands of acres of very fine land included in the grant.

Mr. HEARST. Does not the Senator think that the people of Oregon would be very glad to give that land up if they could get competition from Wallula to Portland and connect with the Northern Pacific down on the river?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I think perhaps the citizens of Portland would, but I am not quite sure that the producers would, although it might be to their interest in the end. For one, I will state to the Senator from California that I shall not feel much like making a visit home this summer unless the bill passes through Congress, or at least through the Senate, declaring forfeited the lands included in the grant from Wallula to Portland, because it is the universal belief of the people there that they have been imposed on by the Northern Pacific Company, as these lands have been tied up for a period of twenty-two years and not a shovel has been lifted toward the construction of that line of road.

Mr. HEARST. Why is it that you go in and invite them to have the land across the Cascade Mountains, to give them connection to Puget Sound, when you leave out all the Willamette Valley and the trade which naturally comes to Portland?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I will state to the Senator very frankly that I see no hope, nor do our people see any hope, for a competing line down the Columbia River. By the construction of the road across the Cascade Mountains we will have a competing line at once from Wallula not only to Portland, but to Puget Sound.

Mr. HEARST. You have a competing line from Wallula to Puget Sound from the east.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. We have to Portland by the completion of the gap of 75 miles over the Cascade Mountains. The Senator will remember that the Northern Pacific completed its road from Tacoma to Portland and is now operating it, so that all that is lacking to give the producers of Eastern Oregon and Eastern Washington Territory and Idaho a competing line to Portland, providing they wish to send produce there instead of to Puget Sound, is the completion of this little gap of 75 miles on the top of the Cascade Mountains. They would then have not only the advantage of a competing line to Portland, but the still greater advantage perhaps of a new line to the seaboard at Tacoma. The value of the completion of this little line of 75 miles of road to the producers of the Pacific Northwest can not be overestimated.

I am quite sure that if the Senators on the other side of the Chamber understood this thing as it really is they would see at once that by voting to forfeit these lands, which are comparatively valueless, on the top of the Cascade Mountains, they are simply voting against the true interests of the producers of the Northwest.

Mr. HEARST. I think from the questions asked that the Senators on this side of the Chamber understand it.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I see that the Senator from California understands it.

Mr. HEARST. It has been a long time since I was there, and there was no railroad built along the river then. I have only obtained my knowledge from the papers, and I have not read much about the matter for a year or two. I understand the Senator to say that at Puget Sound you can get on the cars and go to Portland by the Northern Pacific.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. HEARST. Then I understand that you have connection from Portland up the river on the Northern Pacific.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. No; not on the Northern Pacific, but by the Oregon company's line between Portland and Wallula.

Mr. HEARST. Then why have you not a complete line?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. We have a complete line, but the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company holds the key for 214 miles, and they own and control that road. No car can go upon that road except by their consent.

Mr. HEARST. So the Northern Pacific have not the line?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. They simply have some kind of a contract. I do not know what the contract is. I know as a matter of fact that they run their trains to Portland and Tacoma by way of the Columbia River, but for these 214 miles their trains go over the road built and owned and controlled by the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company.

Mr. HEARST. That is the way I thought it was.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That is the fact.

Mr. HEARST. You get nothing except you make an arrangement by a single line from Portland to Wallula? The Northern Pacific has no connection?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. None whatever, until they obtain it by way of Tacoma by the completion of the 75 miles on the top of the Cascade Mountains.

Mr. HEARST. The only advantage the people get by competition is the continuance of this line from Wallula across the Cascades to the sound?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Certainly; and to Portland.

Mr. HEARST. That to Portland is out of the way.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It is about 130 miles, and perhaps farther, from Wallula to Portland by way of Tacoma than it is from Wallula to Portland direct by way of the line of the Oregon road.

Mr. HEARST. Then Senators may understand that after this line gets to the sound the Northern Pacific will have a road that runs across the country south and east until it strikes the sound, and thence to Portland?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEARST. So by going 80 or 100 miles out of the way the people could get an opposition line?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Yes; but the Senator will bear in mind that the producers who now send their produce down the Columbia River to Portland would have the benefit of whatever advantage it may be to send their produce to Tacoma.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to understand——

Mr. VAN WYCK. I wish to interrupt the Senators long enough to remind them that I am holding the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. I rose to ask a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has been yielding to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I beg pardon of the Senator from Nebraska, but ask the Senator to yield a moment longer.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Am I authorized to understand the Senator from Oregon to say that the Northern Pacific Railway Company has made running arrangements with the company which owns the road from Wallula to Portland, and that it has practically abandoned the idea of building that road itself?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I only know as a matter of fact that for the last three years they have been running their trains from Wallula to Portland over the road owned by the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company. I know further that they have made no movement toward the completion of that portion of the road. They never have and are not doing it now.

Mr. GEORGE. Do you not know that they do not contemplate making any such road?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That is my opinion. Of course I can not speak for the company, but that is my impression. Judging from the past, I do not believe they intend to complete that road.

Mr. GEORGE. By what rule of morals and justice can this company receiving a grant to build a road from Puget Sound to Portland, or via Portland to Tacoma, of their own will abandon without the consent of the United States 214 miles of that road and interest upon having the land grant made to them on the remainder of it? In other words, by what rule of right and justice has the company, with a solid grant all the way across the continent, the right to except out of that grant 214 miles and say, "we will not build that," and then come to Congress and say, "you will be robbing us if you do not give us the land?"

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I agree with the Senator from Mississippi that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company can by no principle of right or justice so far as that is concerned fail or decline or refuse to complete that gap in the line of the road. I think no terms of condemnation of that company can be employed which are too strong for this omission or refusal on their part.

Mr. GEORGE. And yet you say that on an examination of the facts you believe that they have abandoned the idea of building that road.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I believe it, but we have to take things as we find them; and what do we find? We find, as a matter of fact, that they have virtually abandoned those 214 miles. We find, as a matter of fact, that the lands included in that grant for nearly a quarter of a century have been tied up and held from settlement by virtue of the grant. The best thing I think the people can do through their representatives in Congress is to make a declaration of forfeiture as to those lands without regard to any other question. Then the next thing we should do would be to look at the situation as it is, not with reference to any interest of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, not with reference to any wishes or desires they may have in the premises, not with reference to any grace that they may ask at the hands of Congress, because I think they are entitled to ask none.

Mr. GEORGE. I am glad to hear the assertion.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. But we should look at the situation with reference to the commercial condition, with reference to the wants of the people interested, with reference to the rights of the producers of the great Pacific Northwest; and looking at it from that standpoint and in behalf of those interests what do we find? We find that by reason of the failure of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to make this competing line between Wallula and Portland the people are today held subject to the wishes and demands, exorbitant as they are, of a monopoly which holds control of that line of road. We find upon the other hand that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company is at work completing what we believe to be a competing line. We find moreover that it has succeeded except as to 75 miles of the road in completing that competing line. We find furthermore that perhaps by taking from them now the little remaining grant on the top of the Cascade Mountains we may perhaps (they say it will, I understand) prevent the completion of that gap. We find furthermore upon investigation that the lands adjacent to that portion of the uncompleted road lie on the top of rugged mountains, and are comparatively valueless for the purposes of settlement.

Mr. GEORGE. Full of coal and iron.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not know as to that.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that they are full of coal and iron.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Speaking generally the lands are regarded as of but little value. They are certified to be of but little value to the pioneers going out to settle that country.

Without quarreling with somebody because they have not done this, that, or the other thing which they ought to have done, we find upon looking at the thing to-day as it is that by not taking this portion of the grant away from them on the Cascade Mountains they will go on and complete it at an early day and furnish the competing line, to which I have referred sufficiently heretofore.

I did not intend to make a speech at all, but since I have gotten on to this point I wish to state that for very many years, as we all know, the Northern Pacific Railroad Company failed to make any movement toward completing the road across the Cascade Mountains. What was the result? The result among the people of Washington Territory was simply to create a state of feeling there in regard to that matter which exists to-day in the State of Oregon in reference to the failure of that company to complete the road down the river. Prior to the completion of any portion of the line across the Cascade Mountains there was an almost universal sentiment, I may say, among the people of Washington Territory in favor of the declaration of a forfeiture of the grant from Wallula to Tacoma; but inasmuch as no declaration was made by Congress, or by either House of Congress, and inasmuch as the company have gone on and completed 187 miles of the road, and inasmuch as there is but this short gap to complete, there has I think been a revulsion of sentiment among the people of Washington Territory in regard to the matter.

So far as I have been able to arrive at that sentiment I am satisfied that if it were left to a vote of the people of Washington Territory to-day as to whether they would forfeit the lands adjacent to this uncompleted road there would be a large majority against it. That is my opinion. However, I may be wrong about that.

But in any event, looking at the great commercial questions involved, bearing in mind the completion of the Canadian road, bearing in mind all the great interests of commerce which are now being developed on the Pacific coast, and in the Pacific Northwest, it does seem to me, and it has seemed to me, that without any reference to the interests of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, as a company, or without desiring to favor them one way or the other, we should take a broader view of this matter and permit the completion of the road. If there was any way whereby Congress could by declaration issue a decree compelling the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to complete its road not only across the Cascade Mountains, but down the Columbia River, and at the same time take from them both grants, I for one would be willing to do it.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the objection to the latter clause of section 9?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I understand that section; I have read it a thousand times; but when you come to apply the practical test there is some difficulty after all, I presume, as to just how Congress would go about the completion of this road. I presume all that means is that if the company fails to complete the road then Congress has the right under the ninth section to take charge and complete the road. But how complete it? Ways and means must be provided.

Mr. GEORGE. Complete it with the assets of the company.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not know exactly how Congress would go about it. I have always thought that there were great difficulties in the way in reference to that matter.

I have been speaking out of the time of the Senator from Nebraska, and I beg his pardon, but I have been led off.

Mr. GEORGE. There is a question I wish to put to you. I may have misunderstood your colleague; but I understood him to say that in 1879 the road from Portland, Oreg., to Wallula was built by a company organized by Mr. Villard. Did I understand him correctly?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. From Portland to Tacoma?

Mr. GEORGE. To Wallula?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. From Portland to Wallula was not built in 1879; it was in 1881, 1882, and 1883, I think.

Mr. GEORGE. Whatever time it was, was he not at that time the president of the Northern Pacific Railroad?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I think not. I think he succeeded to the presidency and control of the Northern Pacific after that time.

Mr. GEORGE. How long after?

Mr. EDMUNDS. He was president of the company in 1883.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. My impression is that the Oregon road, or most of it at least, was completed before Mr. Villard succeeded to the control of the Northern Pacific.

Mr. GEORGE. You are not certain?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am not absolutely certain, but that is my impression about it.

Mr. GEORGE. I have an impression of this sort which I will put on the records of the country, that while Mr. Villard was managing and controlling the Northern Pacific Railroad Company he formed a company and built a railroad over a part of the line over which the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was obliged to build, and that is the part of the line which it is now proposed to exempt from forfeiture.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That, I am sure, is an entire mistake. I know that the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company was formed long before Mr. Villard succeeded to the presidency of the Northern Pacific.

Mr. GEORGE. Was the road built before that time?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. My impression is that most of the road, and I believe the whole of it, had been completed.

Mr. DOLPH. From Portland to Wallula.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. From Portland to Wallula. I think the Senator from Mississippi is under a misapprehension about that matter.

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me to ask him a question on another branch of the matter?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. EUSTIS. I should like to ask the Senator whether he knows as a fact (I understood him to state it) that there had been any cash paid in by any stockholder for subscription to the stock of this company?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Of what company?

Mr. EUSTIS. The Northern Pacific—$49,000,000 of common stock. What I should like to know, if the Senator is able to give the information, is whether any stockholder who subscribed for the stock has ever paid into the treasury of the company a single dollar?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not profess to be competent to discuss the financial condition or operations of the company.

Mr. EUSTIS. I thought the Senator might know.

Mr. GEORGE. I am informed by a gentleman who was present on the ground that on the 6th day of April, 1882, there was no road built from Wallula down to the Dalles, for he had to travel on the steamboat. Was Mr. Villard president of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company on the 6th day of April, 1882?

Mr. DOLPH. No; he was not.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I can not state certainly.

Mr. DOLPH. He was not until September, 1882. He was elected at the annual meeting in September, 1882.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I think that is true.

Mr. GEORGE. As soon as the road was completed he got to be president of the company.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. If this case were just as the Senator from Mississippi supposed it to be—and I think he is entirely wrong about it—it would have no bearing with me, and I do not think it ought to have any bearing with Congress upon the question we are discussing now. We all admit that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company has failed to do its duty in not completing the road down the Columbia River. We all admit that it was a part of the duty of that company to build its road from Portland to Wallula just as much as it was to build the road from Saint Paul to Wallula; but we must take things as we find them and do the very best we can with the case as we find it. I am endeavoring now to look at and protect the interests of the coast, the interests of the people, and the interests of commerce, and not the interests of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from Oregon has satisfied me that I did not misunderstand his position, that the railroad company had a vested right in lands acquired after the completion of the road. I suppose the Senator has entertained that opinion, I judge from his few remarks, from the time of the decision in the case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Yes; I think that is true.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman was decided in 1874. The Senator now thinks that this claim of the Northern Pacific Railroad is a vested right. I desire to ask the Senator why it was that in 1876, before the expiration of the lifetime of the grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad, two years after the decision referred to, and even in 1878, the Senate of the United States did not even then consider the claim of the Northern Pacific sacred, but actually proposed to forfeit a portion of the grant?

We are occupying a strange position here to-day. We are told that we have no legal right to forfeit any portion of this land opposite to any part of the completed road.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Was any bill passed?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir; a Senate bill was passed in 1876 and one in 1878. I have here the bill of May 1, 1878.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I will ask the Senator from Nebraska if there was not a clause in that bill providing for the assent of the company?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes; there was.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Then that is a complete answer to the Senator's proposition. Of course by consent of the parties they could make an agreement to give up a part of the grant.

Mr. VAN WYCK. But they threatened the terrors of the law upon them if they did not consent to it. They made some pains and penalties upon the railroad company if they did not consent to it. I do not remember what they are, neither have I the time to read them now. The act proposed to extend the time of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

Look at it for a moment, because we are confronted with strange, novel, and startling propositions every time the question of a railroad corporation or the forfeiture of a grant is placed before the consideration of the American Congress. One Congress takes one position, another takes another, and apparently from the same persons and in the same interests. That is a matter which I do not fully understand. Our friends from Oregon, whom we always delight to hear, of course properly explain their positions, and they protest, which of course we accept as correct, and give the reason why they assume to do these things, yet sometimes it would seem as if they might "protest too much."

In 1876 and 1878 it was proposed to do what? The Northern Pacific Railroad Company in the lifetime of their grant came and asked to have its time extended. Its time expired on the 4th of July, 1879. In their early history they had come and had the time extended on two occasions, and later, toward their closing hours, they come and recognize the power of Congress over this question.

Look at it for a moment. Strip it of all verbiage, strip it of all legal complication, and this great corporation came here in 1876, three years before their grant expired, and through eminent counsel outside of this body, as they always have, and distinguished friends inside, as they always have, stretched forth their hands in supplication and said to the law-making power, "Grant us this our prayer we beseech thee; we will give up all the Cascade branch, the 300 miles; we will do more. Here is our immense domain."

The 4th of July, 1879, had not then been reached. They were then still east of the Missouri River. They asked Congress to extend the time eight or ten years, and said they would give all this rich domain of theirs for the benefit of the settler; that he should be allowed to come in and occupy these fair fields, paying into the Treasury of the United States $2.50 per acre, and for that he should receive a patent, and Congress should be their trustee to see that the money was properly expended in the prosecution of this work.

That was their attitude then, and my friend from Oregon knows that I have stated it correctly, because he was then here, very properly and eloquently urging for the settler that he should be allowed to go in on this rich domain and occupy it for $2.50 per acre.

My friend used the same argument in 1876 that he uses to-day. He was eloquent then; he is eloquent now. That portion of his argument was consistent with itself when he pleaded that Congress should give this extension; that the whole of the Cascade branch should be restored to the public domain; when he pleaded that it should be extended in behalf of the American settler, who should be allowed to go out and take the land west of the Missouri River at $2.50 per acre. My friend also used the further argument then that he does now. He said it was to check the terror of a monopoly which then existed. In opposition to that monopoly he desired then that the entire Cascade branch should be restored to the public domain. In opposition to that same monopoly he says to-day that the 75 miles of the Cascade branch ought not to be restored to the public domain. After commenting upon the power of this monopoly, he said:

> Still, on the remaining portion of this great river, the second on this continent, monopoly, seizing at an early day the key which nature forged in these obstructions at the Dalles and the Cascades, sits enthroned as imperial dictator to the commerce of the whole Northwest, a paralyzing incubus upon the material development and general prosperity of that vast region.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. What fault does the Senator find with that? The Senator from Oregon was right then, and he is right now.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have no fault to find with the Senator's argument, only my friend changes his position.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Not at all; he stands to-day just where he stood then. The Senator from Nebraska will bear in mind that at that time there was no railroad of any kind from Wallula to Portland, nor from Wallula across the Cascade Mountains, nor from Saint Paul to Wallula. The monopoly I was speaking of was the control of the Columbia River, the boat monopoly. At that time, just as to-day, there was no hope of the completion of the Northern Pacific from Wallula to Portland. I then saw no hope of the completion of the road across the Cascade Mountains, neither had the Union Pacific then constructed a road from Granger across to the Columbia River. We had no road there.

For years and years we had been contending for what was then known and called the Portland, Dalles and Salt Lake road, which is now the Oregon Short Line and the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company's line.

My proposition in 1876 was that we should take the land grant given to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company from Wallula across to Puget Sound and throw it over in aid of the road from Salt Lake to the headwaters of the Columbia River, and by the same bill compel the Northern Pacific, under certain pains and penalties, to complete the road down the Columbia River. The very bill I was advocating provided that it should, within a certain specified time, complete a portion of the road down the Columbia River, around the Cascades and the Dalles, so as to avoid the monopoly of the Columbia River.

I have not changed. The situation on the North Pacific coast, by reason of the construction of certain roads, has to a certain extent changed, and I now come advocating, as I did then, what I believe to be the interest of the producers of that country, and not the interest of any particular railroad company.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The bill which the Senator advocated then was a good bill.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It was a very much better bill than the measure he is advocating to-day. That is my point.

Mr. McMILLAN. It took things down to the Union Pacific.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It has been taken down to the Union Pacific. When he then advocated a good bill it did not touch the Union Pacific.

Mr. McMILLAN. The connection the Senator wanted to make was with the Union Pacific by the Oregon road.

Mr. VAN WYCK. And he succeeded in getting that.

Mr. McMILLAN. He did not succeed in getting it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. But still that did not help this country where this giant monopoly had its grip. Gentlemen wanted to be relieved of this monopoly. The Senator says it is there to-day. He wanted to relieve the grip of this giant monopoly in 1876, and therefore favored the bill, and was willing to forfeit all the Cascade branch. He wants to release the grip of this same giant monopoly to-day, and he insists that the same road shall retain 75 miles of that same grant when he was then willing to forfeit the whole. What relation has that with the Union Pacific?

Mr. McMILLAN. If the Senator understood the situation he would see.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I understand the situation. If it was necessary to forfeit all this grant in 1876 to release the grip of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, why is it necessary to hold on to this 75 miles to release the grip of the same Oregon Railway and Navigation Company?

No, it is the remarkable feature which I stated about this matter that we are compelled to change front so often on these questions, if it becomes necessary to serve our lords and masters, what the corporations dictate and control. I suppose it would not do for me to-day to propose what the Senator so eloquently advocated in 1876, to allow the settlers to come in and have their share of this domain on the same conditions that Senators were willing they should have it then.

The Senate passed the bill as I shall show you, and in 1876 were willing that the settlers should come and occupy the country. I propose before we finish this matter to make the same proposition in the Senate, and see whether we are willing, after the railroad company have had seven years of forbearance and grace, to give to the settlers what our friends were willing to give them three years before the life of the grant expired.

The railroad aspect of competition is remarkable. We have built three or four lines to the Pacific Ocean and all the financial adventurers and the patriots who came here came in the interest of the people every time. They wanted competition. After the Union and Central Pacific was through, the patriots must have competition by the Northern Pacific and by the Southern Pacific. Competition must be had. What was the effect of competition? The Oregon Navigation Company and the Northern Pacific Company have running arrangements, pleasant, agreeable arrangements, I suppose.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not know how pleasant they are.

Mr. VAN WYCK. They have them all the same.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not know what they are. The Northern Pacific runs trains on the Oregon Navigation Company's road.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Now we have what? We have built at the public expense, by millions of acres of the public domain, competing lines to the Pacific, and yet we have not a single competing line to the Pacific anywhere. Before the Northern Pacific road was built the Union and the Central Pacific did what? In defiance of law and public sentiment and common honesty they purchased the control of the Pacific Mail Steamship line—the water-route from the Atlantic to the Pacific; and when the Northern Pacific was opened to Portland that company contributed its share toward corrupting the free commerce of the ocean——

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator explain the modus operandi of that?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Corrupted by buying control of the ocean, not to charge less than a fixed rate which the Pacific roads fixed. The Central and the Union Pacific first controlled it all, and then when the Northern Pacific built its road they were made partners in that crime and contributed to the outrage. This was done in the name of competition and in violation of the faith of the nation which gave these great donations on the ground of competition.

I have been drawn off from the point I desired to make, which was that the Senate recognized their power, their duty to extend the time within which the railroad should be built. The Northern Pacific twice in their early history and twice later recognized the necessity of having their time extended by coming to Congress and begging for it. And yet, according to the position of the gentlemen to-day, the Northern Pacific Railroad is in a better position by disregarding Congress. That is it. They claim to-day, "No matter if we did not get the power from Congress, we had a legal right to continue;" and in defiance of Congress to-day they are invested with more rights, with more power, with a larger domain than they were disposed to take when they came as suppliants and asked Congress in the exercise of its proper power to extend their time to finish this road.

Why, Mr. President, it seems perfectly plain. Congress by law enacts what shall be done. Who dares to disobey or disregard that law? You say it is done by the subterfuge of a judicial decision—and there the whole difficulty commenced—a decision which is not really applicable to cases of this kind, but the Attorney-General was then willing to give an opinion that it did cover this class of forfeitures, and the executive department was ready to assume the legislative power to reverse the decree of Congress. When the law fixed the termination of this grant, naturally that was the end unless the lawmaking power chose to remove the disability and relieve from the forfeiture for the broken condition, which Congress has not yet done. From that day until now at every session of Congress the railroad company or the citizens have come here and presented bills either to extend the time or to forfeit the grant. Who then will rise now and say that Congress is estopped?

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator know of any efforts on the part of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company through agents or attorneys appearing before committees of Congress to prevent Congressional action? I think I have heard of such things.

Mr. VAN WYCK. When a larger forfeiture than this was proposed at the last Congress their attorneys were here, but, as I said in the outset, their attorneys did not come to oppose this bill, because they wanted it. You remember the difficulty I had some days ago to establish the fact that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company really desired this much of a forfeiture, and while I thought I proved it several times that day by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] and several times by the other Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], it is proved again to-day by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], because when the Senator from California [Mr. HEARST] said "Let them keep this land from Wallula to Portland and compel them to build the road," my friend from Oregon said, "Yes, I should like to do that, but we can not compel them to do that; they do not want it." That is what I claim.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I ask the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Nebraska if there is power, as they seem to think, on the part of Congress to compel the Northern Pacific to go on and complete the road down the Columbia River, why not introduce a bill for that purpose?

Mr. VAN WYCK. By no means.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Why?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I want the land. I am only showing that you are stating what I said the other day, that the railroad company do not want to build the road and want this forfeiture.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. One other question I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska. If I understand his legal argument, it is that this grant was on a certain condition, and that condition was that the whole road should be completed on or before a certain date.

Mr. VAN WYCK. July 4, 1879.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Now, if I understand the Senator from Nebraska, their right to this grant, or any portion of it, depends upon the completion of the road in that time; and not having completed it within the time, of course they failed to comply with the condition. Now, my friend comes in and asks to forfeit a certain portion of the grant. What I want to know is, what equities are there or what legal rights exist to-day in favor of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to that portion of the grant conterminous with the road which was completed before the expiration of the time fixed for the completion of the whole road that does not exist in their favor in reference to the balance?

Mr. VAN WYCK. That means because they did not complete the entire road before the 4th of July, 1879, all the lands should be forfeited.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It would seem to a man from the argument made by the Senator that if they failed to comply with the condition the condition was gone and the whole grant was gone.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No; the Senator is evidently wrong. That is a position which no one pretends. The grant provides for the building in sections of 25 miles; that after they had finished each 25 miles they become entitled to a patent if it was earned in the lifetime of the grant.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. There is nothing in the grant saying if they complete so many miles within a certain time, and so many other miles within a certain time, and the whole road within a certain other time, they shall obtain patents. There is simply one condition, that they shall commence the road at a certain day and complete the whole road on a certain other date. That is the condition.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Another condition was that as they finished 25 miles they should become entitled to patents for so much.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That settles it.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. But by what rule or by what terms of the law can you apply that rule only to that portion of the road completed within the time fixed for the completion of the whole road?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It is very plain. Congress provided when this road should be finished. They also provided that as soon as the company finished 25 miles they should be entitled to patents for it. That ends the question as to the 25 miles. They go on, and up to the 4th of July, 1879, the expiration of the grant, they finished 535 miles and by the act were entitled to patents for the land along every 25-mile section of that road so built. Now comes the time when the law provided that the road should be finished. Then Congress may declare a forfeiture or may do it six years from that time. I ask if Congress defers six years and then forfeits the grant whether it has not the right to make that forfeiture attach back to the date when the condition was broken? I think my friend will not dispute that as a legal proposition.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. In my view of the law I do not believe there is any such right in Congress. I think they can make it apply simply to the lands adjacent to the road uncompleted at the time of the declaration. I believe that is the law.

May I ask one question right here?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator from Nebraska is laboring evidently, as he always does, in the interest of the settlers. Admitting for the sake of the argument that the technical right exists just as claimed by the Senator to declare a forfeiture relating back and attaching to all lands that lie adjacent to that portion of the road which was not completed on the 4th of July, 1879; the road has been completed; everybody along the line of the road has acted evidently on the theory that these lands belonged to the railroad company so far as the completed road was concerned at least. Now, does not my friend from Nebraska believe that to throw that whole controversy into the courts by a declaration of forfeiture here, wherein it must be admitted, to say the least, that there is grave doubt, would have the effect to involve all the settlers along the line of this road from Saint Paul to Oregon and to Puget Sound—I mean along the line of the road completed—in litigation the end of which no man can see?

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is another creation of the difficulty which exists only in the imagination, because my friend can not suppose it will be proposed at any time to interfere with any title which may have been secured by an innocent purchaser. It was proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] to protect all that class of cases. His amendment confirms just sales.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Does the Senator from Nebraska for a moment believe that this railroad company, grasping as it is, never willing to surrender anything unless compelled to do so, whether it holds it rightfully or wrongfully—I will go as far as my friend from Nebraska in that direction—does he believe for one moment that that company would sit idly by and would not contest the validity of this declaration of forfeiture as to lands adjacent to the completed road? And does not the Senator know that a litigation of that kind can not be ended within a great many years, and in the mean time the rights of settlers under the grant and the declaration of forfeiture which may provide for their protection will be held in abeyance, and "confusion worse confounded" would be the result?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I would expect the railroad company to do everything in that direction. I would expect them to embarrass legislation and the Departments, as they always have done.

I desire not to be misunderstood. I believe in law and equity. This grant should be forfeited to take effect July 4, 1879. But if that can not be obtained and the Senate decides otherwise I would take a forfeiture of all the unearned land and have this question settled. This should be out of Congress and out of politics.

For the last ten years both national conventions have been amusing the people by resolutions in relation to the public domain and the forfeiture of land grants. We pass such resolutions and then go home and read them to the people. Therefore I desire now that we should accomplish once for all what can be accomplished.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not wish to embarrass the Senator from Nebraska, but I ask him if he is willing to modify his amendment so that it will be perfectly clear that his amendment will apply only to unearned lands, to use that term, to lands adjacent to uncompleted road, and let us take the vote on that proposition, and then take the vote on the further amendment of the Senator from Nebraska or some other Senator?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I supposed I had fixed the amendment to suit every Senator. I have been amending it and reamending it and amending it back again, so as to get it entirely satisfactory, and as it stands now it ought to be adopted.

It is about time that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and their friends should be a little just; I would not ask them to be generous.

Now, look for a moment. These gentlemen say that this land to be forfeited across the Cascade branch is worthless, and the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] says it is not worth a cent an acre. Then it is of no value to us and no loss to the railroad company, except what? They want it as a basis for bonds! The bonds are none the better with this land, are they? Are bonds any better on land worth only a cent an acre? They say nothing to us; and the representatives of the people rise on this floor and solemnly tell this nation that the lands are of no value to them. They lose nothing if they are forfeited. Then of what value are they to the railroad company? A basis for bonds!

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I might imagine this: I do not know anything about it; I presume the lands are mortgaged all the way along, and bonds have been issued for so many acres of land, and Congress comes along and says some of the land must be taken away. Might not that be seized as grounds for breaking up the whole arrangement?

Mr. VAN WYCK. These mortgagees can read and write; they are ordinarily sensible people, and it will be a very easy thing to tell them, "You have not lost anything." The Government, it is said, does not lose anything by giving up that land, and you have not lost anything; it does not make your bonds a bit better, and you can point to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and show them what a distinguished Senator said on this floor, that that portion of the public land was not worth a cent an acre. That will satisfy the bondholders.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. Is there any difference between the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company and the Northern Pacific as to our right and duty of forfeiture that the Senate can understand? I assume that there is not. Then I want to ask him why the House of Representatives passed a bill on the 23d of February, 1886, and sent it to the Senate, and the Senate passed the bill, using this language:

That all the lands, excepting the right of way, heretofore granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company by an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast," approved July 27, 1866, and subsequent acts and joint resolutions of Congress, which are adjacent to and coterminous with the uncompleted portions of the main line of said road, embraced within both the granted and indemnity limits, as contemplated to be constructed under and by the provisions of the said act of July 27, 1866, and acts and joint resolutions subsequent thereto and relating to the construction of said road and telegraph, be, and the same are hereby, declared forfeited and restored to the public domain.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is right.

Mr. BECK. Now I understand the proposition is in the case of the Northern Pacific to forfeit all the lands alleged to have been earned since 1879?

Mr. VAN WYCK. If my friend did me the honor to listen to what I said I stated distinctly——

Mr. BECK. As to the first amendment of the Senator from Nebraska as to the 75 uncompleted miles, I see no reason at all why that portion of the grant should not be forfeited; but when you come to extend it back to 1879, why do you not apply the same rule to the one road as to the other, is the question I ask.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not now call to mind the date when the grant of the Atlantic and Pacific expired.

Mr. BECK. It expired some time ago.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not remember as to the exact time.

Mr. BECK. There have been several hundred miles built since the expiration of the time.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That does not interfere with my position.

Mr. BECK. Why did not the Committee on Public Lands, of which the Senator is a distinguished member, give the same opportunity over that which he is giving now?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I would do so. I will say to my friend when the time expired for the completion of that road by the original act and subsequent acts, I do not remember; but whenever it may have been, I believe that when that time expired the grant was dead, and there was no power except by act of Congress to give it life again, and no matter when the forfeiture declared it should relate back to that time. There is, however, a wide difference of opinion on that matter, and it becomes necessary in order to accomplish something, and have the most of this land restored to the public domain, to have affirmative action, and the extent of that action must be settled by a majority of Congress.

I endeavored to illustrate by this very case what we have lost by not adopting this course. I believe one theory to be right; but the other I am prepared to accept; that is, what the majority of this body say should be the true rule, and end the whole matter. If I can not get from the date of the expiration under the act of incorporation, I will do the next best thing. I will take all the land that is not adjoining the completed road. I trust now my friend is satisfied. I will do either one or the other so as to end the controversy. If in 1876 and 1878 we had acted on that policy we should then have obtained the whole of the Cascade branch. By delay we may lose all but 75 miles, and my notion is that we had better accept even that than lose all by further delay.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 453) to forfeit the lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5862) providing for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal at San Luis Obispo, Cal., agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the said bill and the amendments thereto, and had appointed Mr. CLARDY, Mr. IRION, and Mr. DAVIS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

Mr. BECK. I ask leave to give notice that to-morrow immediately after the close of the morning business I will endeavor to call up the motion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] to reconsider the vote whereby the bill I had the honor to introduce was passed. I will endeavor once more to secure action.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I give notice now that on Friday morning immediately after the conclusion of the morning business I shall call up for action the report of the committee of conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to suggest to my friend from Kansas that it is thought by those who had charge of it that it would be well to have two days for the Calendar, being Thursday and Friday, and I hope it will be equally convenient for the Senator from Kansas to postpone his calling that bill up until Saturday.

Mr. PLUMB. I will only say that I shall be perfectly willing it should go over to Saturday unless there is something to indicate that the debate will be longer than one day; but there are some reasons why the Senate ought to decide the question during this week. I would be glad to take it up sooner, but one Senator who desires to say something about it is absent and will not be back until Wednesday, and in order to give him a sufficient length of time to prepare I have named Friday. If he is perfectly willing, however, that it shall go over until Saturday, if it shall appear then that the debate will not last longer than a day, I shall not object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course it is extremely desirable to get through the Calendar cases to which there is no really serious objection; and after consultation around it was thought desirable that Thursday and Friday should be devoted to that purpose. While we all admit that any appropriation bill is entitled to precedence, and, if the Senator from Kansas insists upon it, we must take Friday for his bill, still if it would be equally convenient to finish that matter on Saturday we have thought it would be better to take Thursday and Friday for the Calendar. But in case that should not occur and the Senator should exert his right, which we all admit he has, to bring it up on Friday, then I should ask that the time of Friday occupied by that should be transferred to Monday for the Calendar.

And while I am up I ask leave to offer a resolution for reference to the Committee on Rules.

MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER.

The resolution of Mr. EDMUNDS was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the last paragraph of the first clause of Rule XIII be amended so as to read as follows:

"Any motion to reconsider may be laid on the table without affecting the question in reference to which the same is made, and if laid on the table it shall be a final disposition of the motion."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say in explanation of that that by some apparent inadvertence the rules now stand in such a way that a motion to reconsider anything is not open to debate; whereas we can all understand that of all things when a motion to reconsider is made and made in good faith and truly, as we must suppose it always is, a motion to reconsider ought to be open to explanation. It has been discovered, however, that in the rules as they now stand discussion on a motion to reconsider can not exist at all. It was brought to my attention in connection with the bill of the Senator from Kentucky which passed without any debate and on which, when it comes up to-morrow, if it does, as I hope it will myself, no debate will be in order except by unanimous consent.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask consent of the Senate that a letter addressed to me, which I hold in my hand, may be referred to the Committee on Commerce and printed. It is a letter from General Q. A. Gillmore, president of the Mississippi River Commission, in relation to the item of appropriation of $2,250,000 contained in the river and harbor appropriation bill for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana asks that the letter sent to the desk be printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce. The Chair hears no objection and it is so ordered.

INLAND WATER MAIL ROUTES.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer the following resolution and ask for its immediate consideration:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to transmit to the Senate a statement showing the inland water routes over which the United States mails are transported, the length of each of the same, the number of trips per week, the amount paid as compensation on each of said routes, and the total expenditures therefor per annum.

Mr. BECK. Is that for action now?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir.

Mr. BECK. Would it not be well to embrace the amount of mail matter carried?

Mr. PLUMB. Very well. I have ascertained that there is no means of determining that, or I should have included it.

Mr. BECK. I should like to have it as near as possible.

Mr. PLUMB. Well, I will insert at the end of the resolution the words:

And the amount of mail matter transported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same for settlement, and for other purposes.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. When the Senator from Nebraska submitted his amendment some days ago, on a cursory examination at the time I was of opinion that some modification perhaps was necessary in order to exempt from the operation of the declaration of forfeiture lands included in the completed branch across the Cascade Mountains. On a careful examination, however, now I am of opinion that the legal effect of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska if adopted would be precisely the same as it would be if my amendment were adopted; and that seems to be the opinion of the lawyers of the Senate with whom I have conversed. Therefore I withdraw my amendment so that the vote may come directly on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. McMILLAN. I desire to say in regard to the amendment now before the Senate that I shall vote against it for the reasons which have been very ably stated, I think, by the Senator from Ohio, the President of the Senate, and the Senators from Oregon.

The Northern Pacific company has completed a portion of the road from Pasco to Puget Sound. The only remaining portion of it uncompleted is 75 miles over the mountain region. The company have completed the road at either side of the mountains. They are already constructing a tunnel through the mountains. The only portion of the land grant forfeited by the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is the portion in place along this uncompleted part of the line. The people of Eastern Washington ought to have access to Puget Sound by this road. It is the only mode of access they have without going around a distance of more than 300 miles following the route of the Columbia River to Portland and taking the road directly north from Portland to Tacoma. To compel the transportation of freight and passengers from all the eastern portion of Washington Territory to go around by this circuitous route is a burden from which they should be relieved.

It may be said that the Northern Pacific road, having already completed a part of the line from Pasco to Tacoma, will go on and complete the remaining portion of it whether the grant is forfeited or not; but in answer to that it is to be said that the Northern Pacific Railroad has communication by rail by the circuitous route to which I have already referred. They can come down the Columbia River to Portland and pass over their own road from Portland up to Tacoma. So there is no immediate necessity for the completion of this gap in the road from Pasco to Tacoma so far as they are concerned, and they may drop that portion of the line; they may permit it to remain unfinished, and no other company even with a reasonable grant could undertake to complete a road from the line of the Northern Pacific up to Puget Sound. This gap completed, it gives direct communication from the town to Lake Superior, and that is what the people of this country want. To adopt the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska would be doing great injustice to the people of Washington Territory. I speak from observation of that country, and I base my judgment upon what I know. Whoever makes the mistake of forfeiting this grant will sooner or later discover his error. There remains now but the 75 miles to be completed over this mountain range and through a tunnel of more than a mile, perhaps 2 miles in length.

For these reasons I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to submit a very few remarks giving the reasons for the vote I shall cast in this case before the vote is taken.

If Jones is the owner of a tract of land, having a better title to it than any one else has, and Smith has a title to the same tract of land which he believes to be good, and he proceeds to erect a valuable building upon it, and Jones has knowledge of the fact that Smith is building under the impression that his title is good, and Jones, with knowledge of the facts, gives no notice that he claims a superior title, but encourages Smith to proceed with the erection of the building, when it is completed and ready for use Jones can not then set up his superior title and take the land with the building from Smith. Having said nothing about his superior title while the erection proceeded, and having encouraged Smith to proceed, Jones is under an equitable estoppel and would not in any court of equity be permitted to recover the premises and oust Smith from the possession.

Now, Mr. President, this case, in my opinion, falls within the rule just stated. The Government of the United States made a large land grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and encouraged it to undertake the hazardous task of constructing a railroad to connect Lake Superior with the Pacific Ocean.

By the terms of the grant the railroad was to be completed within a certain time, and the company held the land grant with the condition-subsequent attached to the grant. On account of numerous embarrassments that always befall a great enterprise of that character, they were delayed and did not get the whole of the line completed within the period mentioned for its completion. By the act of Congress making the grant provision was made for the appointment by the President, under the authority of the act of Congress, of agents of the Government, or commissioners, to inspect the railroad as each 25 miles was completed, and on the favorable certificate of the agents of the Government each section of the road was accepted as complete according to contract, and in much of it patents were, I believe, issued. After the period had been passed within which the road was to be completed, no steps having been taken for the forfeiture of the grant and no complaint having been made by the Government that the road was not completed within the time prescribed, the company proceeded with the construction of the road, and at the completion of each section of 25 miles in length the agents of the Government appointed by the President inspected the road, and when complete to their satisfaction reported it back as all right, and it was accepted as complete in accordance with the contract.

Now, Mr. President, whether there is a legal estoppel here or not, or whether the Government had the superior title or not, as to the land earned by the construction of each section of 25 miles, since the termination of the period within which the road was to be completed, it is to my mind very clear that in any court it would be held that there is an equitable estoppel. The Government gave no notice, as I understand it, that it would insist upon a forfeiture. The company proceeded to expend their money in the construction of the road. The agents of the Government accepted or approved of each section as it was completed, and it was reported to the executive department and no objection was raised. If, then, the Government held the better title, it gave no notice that it would insist on it, but through its agents continued to approve the work by sections as it was completed, just as it had done before the end of the period prescribed in the grant.

The company was therefore proceeding under the belief, as each section was completed and accepted as having been constructed according to contract, that it was entitled to the land grant for that section. In other words, that the terms had been complied with, and as the agents of the Government inspected the section and pronounced upon its proper completion, the Government waived its objection to that section as to the time within which the construction was to be completed. I hold, then, that the Government of the United States would not act in good faith in the teeth of this action of its own agents if it should attempt to forfeit the land grant as to the sections, or any one of them, which have been built, examined by its agents, and accepted as complete in accordance with the contract.

I am in favor, Mr. President, of forfeiting the land grant as to all the lands that have not been earned by the construction of the road and accepted by the agents of the Government as constructed in accordance with the contract, except in case of the 75 miles known as the Cascade branch, where, it seems to me, as forcibly stated by the Senator from Ohio, the Presiding Officer of the Senate, a few days since, that it is clearly to the interest of the Government and the people that we should not forfeit. I understand there are two or three hundred miles at the end next the Pacific that have not been completed according to contract, on what is known as the main stem, or trunk. There I will vote to forfeit every acre of the land, as the railroad has not been constructed nor accepted by the Government as constructed according to the contract, either within the prescribed time, or, indeed, within any time, as little, if anything, has been done in the construction up to the present date.

In case of the portion of the road known as the Cascade branch, I understand this to be the state of things: The Cascade Mountains, a very high and almost impassable range, run through the State of Oregon and the Territory of Washington, dividing that State and Territory into two parts, where it is very difficult for the citizens of one part or section to get across the mountains to the other section. Now, as I understand it, it is about 75 miles from the foot-hills of the Cascade range on one side, over the mountain range, to the foot-hills on the other side, and it is exceedingly difficult to build a road over those mountains. There have to be some very long tunnels and a great deal of bridging and very heavy work, making it very costly. The lands, as I am informed, on the Cascade Mountains, like the lands in most of the great mountain regions of that country, are very inferior. In their present condition they are worth nothing to the Government or to anybody else. When the railroad is constructed, they will be worth very little, as there are no good farming lands on scarcely any of the mountains from one side to the other. Some of the peaks of the mountain range reach to such an altitude as to be covered with perpetual snow.

Now, Mr. President, I think it good policy that the Government should encourage the company to go on and complete this portion of the road. They are now, as I understand it, leasing part of another line to get to the Pacific rather than build the two to three hundred miles of the main trunk that have not been built next to the Pacific. They will doubtless discontinue it or be delayed for a long time in building the Cascade branch if the land grant is withdrawn; for inferior as the lands may be, the number of acres serves as a basis of credit, and will enable them to raise capital in the money market with which to build the road. It seems to me, as an original question, that it would be good policy in the present state of things, if an application were now made to the Government by the company for a land grant for constructing the road through the Cascade Mountains, to make the grant without delay. The land being very inferior, the country being rugged, mountainous, and mostly uninhabitable, and the 75 miles of road being very expensive and very difficult to build, it seems to me it is good policy if no land grant exists to make one in that particular case and encourage the company to push forward the completion of the road. It connects the two sections of the State of Oregon, and it connects the two sections of the Territory of Washington.

It is greatly needed, and would be of immense value to the people; and we can not afford on a sentiment about forfeiture of land grants, though the general idea may be a popular one with the people, and most of the proposed forfeitures just, to do an act so unwise and so unbusiness-like as to forfeit the grant and stop the construction of this great thoroughfare through and under the Cascade Mountains, which is so indispensably necessary to that large section of the Union. For these reasons, Mr. President, I shall vote against forfeiting the land grant to any sections of the road that have been completed by the company and accepted by the Government as constructed according to contract, because I think there the Government is under an equitable estoppel, and has no right to proceed to the forfeiture.

I shall vote against the forfeiture in case of the Cascade branch because I believe it is the interest of the Government and people, if they have not a land grant to give them one through this rugged mountainous country, if they will go on and construct the railroad with its immense tunnels and bridges, and through that rugged and now impassable section of our common country. And I shall vote to forfeit the grant in reference to all that portion of the road that has not been built and accepted by the Government as constructed in accordance with the contract, with the exception of the Cascade branch, where I think it is more to the interest of the people than the company that the grant should be continued.

Mr. President, as a general principle, a representative of the people should apply to public affairs the same rule which a judicious, prudent, honest man would apply in the management of his own affairs. As between two individuals, if one had made a grant to the other as the Government in this case has made a grant to the railroad company, with the condition subsequent, and the grantor, after the time for the completion of the work had expired, had encouraged the grantee to go forward and complete the work and had continued to receive the road by sections as he had done prior to the termination of the period fixed for its completion, thus encouraging the grantee to believe that the forfeiture would not be enforced, it seems to me in a court of law the grantor would not be permitted to enforce the forfeiture; but whether this is true or not, I think it is very clear that in a court of equity he would be under an equitable estoppel. In other words, it would not look like honest, fair dealing as between two private individuals; and if we apply the same rule to the Government which we would apply to the grantor in the case supposed, the Government would be equitably estopped, and could not honestly enforce the forfeiture.

Now apply the same rule again to the transaction of the affairs of the Government in the matter of the Cascade branch that an honest, discreet, and judicious man would apply in the management of his own affairs, and it seems to me the land grant as applied to that section would not be disturbed. The private owner, if placed in the condition the Government is now in, would think it a good trade for him to have the company go on and complete the Cascade branch by building the portion of the railroad which is very expensive and very difficult to build through the Cascade range, and allowing the land grant to be taken of lands located in the rugged cliffs of the Cascade mountains. In other words, the land can not be of much value either to the grantor or grantee, and the completion of a line of railroad through the mountains is a matter of great interest to the Government and the people.

Entertaining these views, I do not feel at all embarrassed as to the course which it is my duty to pursue in the premises.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Mississippi if he wishes to go on now?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not; but, of course, I will go on now if it is the pleasure of the Senate that I should do so.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

A division being called for, the ayes were 23.

Mr. DOLPH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. My colleague [Mr. RANSOM] is absent without a pair. I transfer my pair to him and desire to vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CHACE. I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. CAMERON (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. CAMDEN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. As others are observing their pairs, I ask the colleague of the Senator from Connecticut how he would vote.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. CAMDEN. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MCPHERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). It seems to be a question of a political character, and as I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SEWELL], I withdraw my vote.

Mr. VEST (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

Mr. MILLER (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. I shall have to withdraw my vote, as he is not here.

Mr. VANCE. I will inform the Senator from New York that I have transferred my pair to my colleague, and I have voted.

Mr. MILLER. Then I will let my vote stand.

Mr. PLUMB (after having voted in the negative). As this seems to be a political question, I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. HEARST (after having voted in the affirmative). If this is regarded as a political question I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with my colleague [Mr. STANFORD].

Mr. ALLISON (after having voted in the negative). I am paired on political questions with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], and I am paired with him on some questions connected with this bill, but I did not suppose that I was absolutely required to refrain from voting in favor of or against going into executive session, but as others think this is a political question, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BECK (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] generally, and I withdraw my vote, as this seems to have assumed a political aspect.

Mr. GEORGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE].

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 22; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SAULSBURY. It is a very late hour for the Senator from Mississippi to be compelled to go on with his speech to-night, and therefore I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). My colleague [Mr. RANSOM] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. I vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. GRAY. I was paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE], but I see he is present. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 25; as follows:

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], on which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. DOLPH. If the Senator from Mississippi will give way to me for a moment, as I see he has a large number of books on his desk, and it looks as if he might occupy the Senate for some considerable time and there is an evident disposition on the part of a portion of the Senate to adjourn, I beg to make a suggestion.

This bill has been under discussion now for several days, and a number of Senators are getting impatient about it. If I can have an agreement that we can vote at a fixed hour to-morrow, say at 2 o'clock, I shall not feel disposed to try and sit the bill out this evening. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be taken up after the morning business to-morrow, and that we vote on the pending amendments in their order, and the bill——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to that. We ought to finish this bill to-night. There are a great number of cases on the Calendar.

Mr. CALL. I suggest to the Senator from Oregon that he give notice that he will ask for a vote before the Senate adjourns to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to the arrangement proposed the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has the floor.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from Vermont will withdraw his objection. The Senator from Mississippi ought not to be compelled to make his speech late at night.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We must be kept late at night if we are to do the public business this session. Here we have been days and days on this bill, and the people who profess, as I suppose truly, to be in favor of it seem to be the people who are determined never to come to a vote upon it.

Mr. GEORGE. No accusation of that sort lies at my door.

Mr. SAULSBURY. On Saturday the Senate adjourned at 2 o'clock by a motion from that side of the Chamber. I have seen no purpose of delay on this side of the Chamber about this bill. For one, I regard it as a very important measure, and I believe the country will regard it as an important measure; but I am not in favor of inconsiderate action. I am glad the Senator from Vermont has interposed an objection to the proposal of the Senator from Oregon. But if we are to stay here all night I have no doubt the Senator from Mississippi will make his speech, and if other gentlemen on this side desire to speak they will do it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all right. They certainly ought to; they have not spoken much!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from Mississippi will yield to me, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. GEORGE. I give way to that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. The question is on that motion.

Mr. COKE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. BECK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I understand from his colleague that matters are assuming a party aspect. I will withhold my vote and not announce the pair any more.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SEWELL] on all political matters, and I suppose this is regarded as such. I will not state the fact again.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 20, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—20.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has the floor.

Mr. EUSTIS. I hope the Senator will yield to me to make a motion.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. EUSTIS (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 19, nays 24; as follows:

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if it is the pleasure of the majority of the Senate that I shall proceed, I will do so as well as I can.

I was under the impression when I addressed the Senate on Friday that this land grant was extremely valuable, more than sufficient to build the entire road. I derived my impression from reading the reports which I presented to the Senate on that subject, and also from the debate which took place in the Senate. I supposed that as the American Senate was so anxious I should speak now, there might be at least ordinary silence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will please come to order.

Mr. GEORGE. If any gentleman on the other side does not wish to hear me speak he is at liberty to retire from the Chamber to the cloak-room. I do not desire to be interrupted in the remarks which I propose to submit.

I was proceeding to remark that I had derived my impressions in regard to this grant to some extent from the debate in this body on the occasion of the extension of the time within which the road was to be commenced. I did not read to the Senate then, or cause to be read, all the evidence which I had upon that subject, because I did not then anticipate that the immense value of this grant would be denied by any person. I therefore ask now in the outset of my remarks to have read what the former Senator from Ohio, Mr. Thurman, said in 1870, and I send to the desk his speech made on that occasion and ask the Secretary to read from near the top of page 2570 of the Globe of that session to near the end of the second column on the same page.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi sends to the desk a book from which he wishes an extract to be read. It will be read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Now, what I first wish to call the attention of the Senate to is that these grants are quite enough to build and equip that road, even at the Government price of the land. You give to the road its right of way 400 feet wide, far more than it can have any necessity for. You give it all the materials it needs. You give it all the ground it needs for workshops, depot-stations, water-stations, and the like. You give it all that as a gift, and in addition to that you give it land worth at the lowest Government price $32,000 to the mile, and that to build a road which can be built more cheaply than any road of equal length could be built on the face of the globe. Yes, sir; more cheaply than any road can be built on the face of the globe of equal length, because nature has graded the whole of that road from the Rocky Mountains to Lake Superior. Any man who has passed over the Union Pacific road has seen that nature has done the grading for all these Pacific roads. From Omaha to the foot of the Rocky Mountains there is scarcely a cut 3 feet deep, scarcely a fill 3 feet high, and we are told by the engineers who have been over this Northern Pacific road that the route is better and the road can be more cheaply built than could the Union Pacific. It is a dead level plain almost the whole of the way; no grading to be done, no deep cuts, no great fills, no expense in bridging, but all that is to be done is first to dig the place for the ties, put them down, and put the rails upon them.

The average cost of the railroads in Ohio, of the three thousand and odd miles in Ohio, with all their equipments, with all their expensive depot stations, water stations, and the like, has been about $52,000 to the mile. Of that expense a very large portion was occasioned by the necessity of buying the right of way through a highly cultivated country; another large portion of it by the necessity of buying grounds for depot stations, water stations, warehouses, cattle-yards, and the like; and still another large portion of it by the necessity of feucing their roads required by a statute of the State. And yet with all these elements of cost, and with the immense equipments they have, four or five times as much as this road will need for ten or twenty years to come, the average cost of the roads in Ohio perfectly equipped, and the most of them fenced, according to the last report of the railroad commissioner of that State, made in December last, was $52,000 to the mile; and that with no gift at all of the right of way; no gift of materials, no gift of sites for water stations, depots, cattle-yards, or the like; nothing of this kind whatsoever; and with an equipment enabling them to do the business of the railroads of that State, the great transit State, as it may be called, in the railroad system of the United States.

Why, sir, I affirm, and affirm without fear of successful contradiction, that the grants made by the charter of this company to the company will defray every dollar of expense of building and equipping the road, so that the result of the whole thing is simply that the Government builds and equips this road and gives it to a private corporation. Say what you will about it, argue as much as you please upon it, talk as much as you choose of the advantages to the country of the road, the simple, naked result of the whole thing is that the Government builds and equips the road and gives it to a private corporation to be a monopoly in the hands of that corporation. That is the whole of it.

Mr. President, before we shall grant further privileges to this private corporation, before we shall bestow upon it further gifts, it seems to me we should have good reasons for what we do. When I spoke upon the general subject of railroad grants the other day I gave the figures from some estimates I had seen in unofficial documents of the amount of the grants made by the Government of the United States to railroad companies. I find upon examining the official documents that those estimates were far too low; that the grants were far more than I had supposed they were. Why, sir, what have been the grants to the Pacific railroad companies alone? To four Pacific railroad companies what have been the grants, the Union Pacific, the Central Pacific, the Northern Pacific, and the Atlantic and Pacific, four roads? They are, as the Commissioner of the General Land Office reports in his last report, which is on the desks of Senators, 124,000,000 acres, nearly as much land as there is in the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Michigan. Five times as much land as there is in the State of Ohio has already been granted to four railroad corporations. In addition to that 58,000,000 acres have been granted to other railroad corporations, making 182,000,000 acres in all, a grant in the aggregate more than the entire territory of what we used to call the "Great Northwest."

And now, sir, it is proposed to go still further and make an additional grant and give additional advantages to this road, the Northern Pacific, which of all roads has been the greatest beneficiary of the Government.

That is not all. The promoters of this road, when they asked for it and asked for this enormous grant of land, such a grant as never had been made before, professed that with it, and without any money subsidy, and without any mortgage of the road to defraud anybody, they would go on and make the road. They professed extreme honesty, I infer from the charter that was passed giving them this grant, that they would not put any bonds upon the market by which anybody could be deceived or by which the road could be sold out. They would not ask any money subsidy from the Government at all, but they would raise the necessary capital and go on to build the road, and rely on the land subsidy to reimburse themselves, together with the profits of the road.

Now, sir, what is it that they ask? They ask that Congress shall authorize them to make a morgage, not simply upon the road, but upon every dollar's worth of property, real, personal, or mixed, that they own; and not only that, but upon their corporate franchises and franchise of being a corporation. If that mortgage is given—a mortgage given before there is one single shovelful of earth dug out, before there is anything done whatever; a mortgage put upon this road without any limitation whatsoever as to the price for which the bonds may sell—what, I ask, will be the ultimate fate of the road under such a mortgage—a mortgage unlimited in amount under which $200,000,000 of bonds may be put upon the market without any limitation whatsoever as to the price for which they shall sell or the interest which they shall bear? Does not any man who has the least experience in the history of railroads in this country know that there can be but one outcome to such a mortgage as that, and that is the sale of all this property under that mortgage and its purchase by a ring in the company itself? That is the common history of railroads—the sale of everything under this mortgage and a purchase by a ring among the stockholders themselves. That is to be the long and the short of it.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire the Senate to understand that I am not asking to have extracts read for the purpose of consuming time, but these are extracts which I have marked in their regular order to be presented.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Mississippi to yield to me.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to make some comments on the extracts as read from the speech of the Senator from Ohio, Mr. Thurman. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the facts stated and the prophecies uttered by that Senator who knew, as he said, the line upon which this road was to be built. He said its line was in the main the easiest line on which a road could be built or ever was built in this country. I call the attention of the Senate also to the fact that this great Senator, perfectly familiar with this question in all its details, stated that at $1.25 per acre the land grant was more than sufficient to build the whole road from Lake Superior to the Pacific Ocean, the result of which, as expressed by Mr. Thurman, would be a building of that magnificent line of road by the United States, they paying all the expenses of construction and equipment, and then making a present of over 2,000 miles of road to this company. I want the country to understand that that was the result of the legislation at that time understood, and understood by one of the greatest men of this country.

In that connection I desire to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that railroad iron which entered most largely on account of the level grades over which this road was built into the cost of the construction of the road was then about three times higher in the market price than now, and so it has been for several years past.

So the country can understand that there was some method in the madness of this corporation, some method in its contempt of the authority of the Union and of Congress in prescribing the time in which it was to comply with its contract. There was going on all the time, as was shown by the paper which I had read the other day and incorporated in my speech, a general and certain fall year by year in the cost of railroad iron, and therefore a decrease in the cost of construction of this road, and therefore also this company in refusing to comply with the conditions upon which this magnificent grant was made to them were all the time making money.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator now yield to me?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GEORGE. It is not necessary to consume time. I hope the motion will be withdrawn. I will go on.

Mr. CALL. No; I insist on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. Otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 21, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Berry,	Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Teller,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	Maxey,	Walthall,
Brown,	Gibson,	Payne,	Whitthorne.
Call,	Gorman,	Plumb,

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 15, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 14, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DOUGHERTY, for to-day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. JONES, of Alabama, until June 25, on account of important business.

CORRECTION.

Mr. EVERHART. I wish to ask a correction on page 5630 of the RECORD.

I rose, before the call commenced, to move, if in order, that the committee rise, with the manual in my hand open at the page, and the clause marked in which it is said that a motion for the committee to rise is equivalent to a motion to adjourn in the House, and is always in order.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

TITLE TO CERTAIN LANDS, RANDOLPH COUNTY, ILLINOIS.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 334) granting the title of the United States to certain lands to the county of Randoph, in the State of Illinois, on certain conditions, and put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all lands in the Mississippi bottom, between the line of bluffs and the Mississippi River, in the county of Randolph and State of Illinois, be, and the same are hereby, granted to the said county of Randolph: Provided, That the legal authorities of said county, on the discovery of any such lands within said boundaries, shall have the same surveyed at the expense of said county, and file plats of said surveys with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, at Washington, D. C. If, upon examination by said Commissioner, it shall appear that the title of the United States has not heretofore been alienated in any tract shown on said plat or plats, he shall so notify the authorities of said county; and upon payment by the authorities of said county into the Treasury of the United States of the sum of $1.25 for every acre shown on said plat or plats, it shall be the duty of said Commissioner of the General Land Office to prepare and have executed patents for every tract so paid for, and to deliver the same on application to the legal authorities of said county: Provided further, That nothibg in this act shall be so construed as to include any accretions formed to lands bordering on the Mississippi River and owned by private individuals.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Reserving the right to object, I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. PAYSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, having under consideration House bill 334, report the same back with the recommendation that it pass, and adopt the report as to facts made to the Forty-seventh Congress, from the Committee on the Public Lands, on the subject, as follows:

Your committee, having had under consideration papers on the subject of granting to the county of Randolph, in the State of Illinois, certain public unsurveyed lands within said county, on certain conditions, beg leave to report:

An examination on this subject, as well as bills introduced in former Congresses having the same general objects, and the testimony and papers relating to the subject discloses the fact that there are in Randolph County, Illinois, quite a number of small, unsurveyed tracts of public land lying in what is known as the Mississippi River bottom. These lands are subject to overflow and are, in every sense, "swamp and overflowed lands." Most of the lands along the Mississipi River in Randolph County were granted by charters from the French Government to purchasers or settlers, by metes and bounds, and little attention was paid to the description or lines of former grants. Settlers in selecting their lands chose those that were not subject to overflow; hence it occurred that quite a number of small pieces of land, of every imaginable shape, were left unsettled and unsold, and, being comparatively valueless, have never been surveyed by the Government. These intervening, odd-shaped pieces of land have been the cause of protracted litigation, and are a fruitful source of contention between contiguous owners and non-resident land speculators and sharks.

The bill reported provides that said lands shall be surveyed by Randolph County, the surveys reported to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and that such lands shall then be sold to Randolph County for the price of $1.25 per acre.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office recommends the passage of the bill, as he says that the lands are not of sufficient value to justify the Government in surveying them, and they should be disposed of in some way so as to subject them to taxation.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

KANSAS CITY, FORT SCOTT AND GULF RAILWAY.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged motion. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 6391) to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, which passed the House some time back, but on request of the House was returned by the President.

The SPEAKER. Was the bill recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. PEEL. It was not. There are certain amendments which should be incorporated in the bill, and I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also the vote by which it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. PEEL. I now desire, Mr. Speaker, to move the adoption of the amendments which I send to the desk. These are amendments recommended by the Department of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 19, strike out the word "branches."

On page 3, line 3, strike out the words "said Cherokee Nation" and insert "any of the Indian nations;" and in line 4 add the letter "s" to the word "tribe," so as to make it read "any of the Indian nations or tribes."

On page 4, line 25, after the word "Arkansas," insert "or at the district court for the district of Kansas."

Also, same page, line 40, after "Arkansas," insert "or the district court for the district of Kansas;" and on the same line add "s" to the word "court."

On page 6, section 5, lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "Cherokee Nation or tribe" and insert "particular nations or tribes through whose lands said line may be located."

Same page, line 9, strike out the words "said nation or tribe" and insert the words "either of the nations or tribes."

Page 7, line 31, strike out "between the United States and said Cherokee Nation" and insert "amongst the different nations and tribes."

Line 35, same page, add "s" to the word "nation;" strike out the word "or" and substitute "and," and add "s" to the word "tribe."

Page 8, line 4, strike out the words "Cherokee Nation" and insert "each of the nations." Same page, line 5, add "s" to the word "tribe."

Same page, section 8, line 2, after the words "for the" insert the words "district of Kansas and the."

Page 9, line 6, add an "s" to the word "nation" and also to the word "tribe," immediately following the same amendment. Line 10, same amendment, section 9, line 5, after the word "road" insert the word "fences."

Page 10, line 7, add "s" to the word "nation," and insert immediately thereafter the words "or tribes."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BEACH. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the regular order will be the call of States and Territories; but on Saturday last a bill which was called up by the gentleman from Indiana from the Committee on the Public Lands was postponed until this morning, the motion being to concur in the Senate amendments to the bill.

The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 453) to forfeit the lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Do I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana is to take up only the morning hour; and will the regular order of business of the District of Columbia be in order at the conclusion of that hour?

The SPEAKER. The right of the Committee on the District of Columbia does not accrue until after the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions.

Mr. BARBOUR. I only asked the question because I desire to insist upon the regular order at the proper time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill the title of which has been read.

Mr. MCRAE. I understood this bill was postponed until this morning for the purpose of discussion.

The SPEAKER. For consideration; but if nobody addresses the House of course the Chair will submit the question on the amendments.

Mr. COBB. I should like to have some understanding about the amount of time to be occupied in this discussion. I ask my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE], how much time he requires?

Mr. MCRAE. I do not know. I will get through as soon as I can.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] has an hour under the rules of the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 6395) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 3037) relating to the licensing of vessels engaged in towing to carry persons in addition to their crews.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1916) authorizing the removal of the Southern Ute Indians from the State of Colorado to the Territory of Utah; and

A bill (S. 2313) defining the service of a stevedore as a maritime service, and creating a maritime lien in his favor therefor.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Public Lands, from whom this measure comes, I can not without a protest on my part permit it to become a law. It will be remembered that when this bill was before the House on the 17th and 23d days of February of this year I offered a substitute for it seeking to forfeit the entire grant except that completed within the time fixed in the granting act.

CONSTRUCTION OF ACT OF APRIL 20, 1871.

I believe that this substitute would have been adopted but for the act of April 20, 1871. At that time I discussed this act, and will not do so again further than to say that in my opinion it does not prevent Congress from declaring the grant forfeited and to cite in further support of the position I then assumed as to the effect of it the following from the majority report of the committee who now insist that because of the act we should agree to the Senate amendment:

The granting act was silent upon the authority of the company to mortgage its grant. And it is insisted that doubts were entertained among capitalists as to whether the company could make a mortgage without this authority was expressed by Congress, and this greatly embarrassed and prevented the utilization of the grant to raise money for the construction of the road. Hence, the company urged Congress to pass an act on April 20, 1871 (Stat., vol. 17, p. 19) granting express authority to the company to so mortgage. And after asking and getting this act passed, which was said to be so necessary to aid the company in raising money to build the road, it is now insisted that it presents an additional reason that it was intended by Congress to create a trust fund to build this road with conditions that if the company did not apply the fund to the prescribed use within a specified time, or if the mortgages of the said company did not so apply the same within another specified time, that then the Government might take any and all steps to secure its intended application, so far as it had not previously been applied.

This is a strange construction to be placed upon the act. Not a single authority is cited by the able counsel for the company in support of it; and we venture to assert none can be found in any respectable law book in the land. No trust is created, either express or implied, in the act; no trustee is named or provided for, for none exists, and we will not, therefore, waste time in producing argument and citing authorities against this misconstruction.

After giving the express right to mortgage, the act of April 20, 1871, above referred to, contains the following proviso:

"Provided, That if the company shall hereafter suffer any breach of the conditions of the act above referred to, under which it is organized, the rights of those claiming under any mortgage made by the company to the lands granted to it by said act shall extend only to as much thereof as shall be coterminous with or appertain to that part of said road which shall have been constructed at the time of the foreclosure of said mortgage."

The attorneys for the trustees of the bondholders under the first mortgage made by the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company assume: First. That this proviso is equivalent to a declaration that on default made by the company in complying with any of the conditions of the grant, the mortgagees should have the right to all the lands embraced in the grant which were conterminous with the completed road at the time of foreclosure.

If this construction is the correct one, and, as we have shown, the mortgageors and mortgagees are the Saint Louis and San Francisco and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Companies, and that these two companies have constructed and are operating and controlling all the road which has been completed (except the 34 miles), then they have complete control of the grant. They can hold it for a hundred years without completing another mile of road, and the Government can do nothing, no matter how many breaches of the contract may be committed.

We do not agree with the learned counsel in this construction of the proviso. If they are correct why should Congress say "that if the company suffer any breach of the conditions of the act" under which it was organized the rights of those claiming under any mortgage made by the company should extend only to the lands conterminous with completed road? Why not have said that the right of those claiming under any mortgage made by the company to the lands granted to it by said act shall extend only to so much thereof as is conterminous with the completed road at the time of the foreclosure of said mortgage?

If this language had been used and none other the construction contended for would be correct. But this language was substantially used, and also the other language set forth in the proviso, which destroys the construction placed upon it by the attorneys of the mortgagees; and which, in the opinion of your committee, clearly shows that it was the legislative intent to limit the rights of the mortgagees to the lands conterminous with the completed road at the date of the breach of conditions set forth in the original act, and not at the date of the foreclosure of the mortgage. This we think is the clear legal expression of the act. Any other construction would destroy the effect of one-half of the language in the proviso by treating it as surplusage. This can not be done here without violating the rules of construction and thereby doing great injustice to the Government.

If the construction thus placed upon this proviso be correct Congress has the right to forfeit all the lands granted without regard to the mortgage, for it was executed after breach of the conditions subsequent had occurred. The mortgagees acquired no rights under the mortgage which could prevent Congress from declaring a forfeiture. They knew of the breach and took their chances.

But it is further insisted that this act of Congress last referred to authorized the company to execute a mortgage on its property and franchises, and issue bonds, and is therefore in the nature of a waiver or bar to the power of Congress to do any act by which the interests of the mortgagees may be affected detrimentally.

This position is not tenable. Congress, by the passage of said act, did not authorize the company to mortgage the unconditional fee; but, upon the contrary, expressly reserved all the conditions expressed in the original act. The company did not own the unconditional fee in the lands granted. It owned the fee charged with the conditions subsequent, and it could mortgage and the mortgagees could only take under the mortgage such estate as the company owned at the time the mortgage was executed.

The mortgagees must be held to have known that they were taking an estate which was defeasible upon condition broken. They stand in the place of the mortgageor. There being a breach of the conditions subsequent by the failure of the company to complete its road within the time fixed by the grant, the mortgagees must take whatever consequences a forfeiture imposes, which is the loss of the defeasible estate in so much of the lands granted by the third section of the granting act as the bill accompanying this report provides for. They will still retain if the bill passes their lien on the right of way, &c., granted by the second section of said act.

That we are right in these conclusions we think the authorities abundantly show. In Kent (volume 4, page 125) the rule is laid down as follows:

"Persons who have an estate or freehold subject to a condition are seized and may convey, though the estate will continue defeasible until the condition be performed or released, or is barred by the statute of limitation, or by estoppel."

Greenleaf's Cruise on Real Property (volume 2, pages 44, 52) thus lays down the doctrine:

"Where a person enters for a condition broken the estate becomes void ab initio; the person who enters is again seized of his original estate in the same manner as if he had never conveyed it away. And as the entry of the feoffer on the feoffee for a condition broken defeats the estate to which the condition was annexed, so it defeats all rights and incidents annexed to that estate together with all charges and incumbrances created by the feoffee during his possession; for upon the entry of the feoffer he becomes seized of an estate paramount to that which was subject to these charges."

Washburn on Real Property is to the same effect (volume 2, page 11 [marginal page 45]):

"When such entry had been made the effect was to reduce the estate to the same plight and to cause it to be held in the same terms as if the estate to which the condition was annexed had not been granted.

To save intact the rights of the United States to the lands not forfeited the committee proposed and the House agreed to the following amendment:

And provided, That nothing in this act shall be held to impair any right that the United States may have in or to the lands not forfeited by this act.

EFFECT OF SUCH AMENDMENT.

The Senate amendment proposes to strike out this proviso. The majority of the committee have recommended that the House concur. Now, I am opposed to it and hope that the members will hear me while I attempt to state some of my reasons for my course. That my position may be understood I shall refer to some extent to the Atlantic and Pacific grant and the conduct of the company created by the act making it. It is important that we should understand all the material facts before voting what I believe to be a confirmation of the title to the best and most valuable part of this immense grant of land. An affirmative vote on this amendment in my opinion means nothing less than a confirmation notwithstanding we call the measure "a bill to forfeit."

The amendment is not what we want and will not be satisfactory to the country. The only reason the majority of the committee have furnished for their action is that the other branch of this department will not pass it in any other shape. It may be true that the bill will fail unless the House does concur, but I earnestly submit that this is no reason why it should. It would be far better for the United States and the people along the line of this road that nothing should be done than to give away all the rights of the Government for an empty and landless forfeiture. Let this House do its duty and leave the responsibility of a failure with those who do not. Except that the lands are in a State reservation and not opened to settlement non-action will not affect the rights of the United States. With the present Secretary of the Interior and General Land Commissioner there is no danger of any more patents being issued. But if patents should be issued the right of forfeiture is not lost. The title depends upon the grant and not upon the patent, which is only evidence of title when properly and legally issued. By delay we lose no legal rights. The same right of forfeiture will continue unimpaired.

The United States can only speak by an act of Congress, and as long as it is silent no harm can come. Laches can never be imputed to the Government, and if by the action of the Senate we are unable to invoke the full power of Congress to do that which we believe ought to be done, then we certainly ought to have the courage, exercising the legitimate power of the House, to prevent the doing of that which we believe to be unjust to the United States. If this Congress fails to do its duty in respect to this and other land grants, it does not follow that those of the future will also fail. The time will come when the proper laws will be passed if the immediate representatives of the people will only prevent the passage of confirmatory acts such as the one now under discussion.

INCORPORATION AND ORGANIZATION.

I have gone to some trouble to get all the facts in relation to this grant, and will give them to the House. By the act approved July 27, 1866 (14 Statutes at Large, 293), the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company was created with all the powers, privileges, and immunities necessary to lay out, locate, and construct, furnish, maintain, and enjoy a continuous railroad and telegraph line from the city of Springfield, in the State of Missouri, to the Pacific Ocean, the main line passing through the Indian Territory, Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and California, a distance estimated at 2,126 miles, with a branch of about 300 miles from the Canadian River eastward to Van Buren, Ark.

For the purpose of aiding in the construction of the road Congress, by the said act, granted, in addition to the right of way, every alternate section of public land, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of twenty sections per mile on each side of said line in the Territories and ten sections per mile on each side in the States through which it passed, with indemnity for any public lands previously disposed of to be selected in odd-numbered sections not more than 10 miles beyond the limit of said alternate sections. The grant was made by Congress and accepted by the company upon the expressed conditions that work should be commenced on the road within two years, and for every year after the second not less than 50 miles should be completed; and also that the main line of the entire road should be completed and equipped by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1878. There was no time fixed for the completion of the branch to Van Buren.

By a resolution of the board of directors the company accepted the grant, and on the 27th day of November, 1866, filed its acceptance in writing in the Interior Department. The $1,000,000 bona fide stock required by section 19 of the granting act was subscribed, and 10 per cent. thereof was paid, as will appear from the following extract from the proceedings of the board of directors:

SAINT LOUIS, October 5, 1866.

Pursuant to the instructions of the board of commissioners in a resolution passed at their meeting in Turner Hall, October 1, 1866, the president and secretary opened the books for subscription to the capital stock of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company at parlor No. 6 in the Southern Hotel, in the city of Saint Louis, October 2, A. D. 1866, at 10 o'clock a. m. Said books remained open until Friday, October 5, A. D. 1866, when the amount necessary by law having been subscribed and the sum of $10 per share paid over to the treasurer, the books were then closed.

The following is a correct copy of the subscription-book and the subscriptions thereto:

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY—SUBSCRIPTIONS TO THE CAPITAL STOCK.

"We, the undersigned, hereby subscribe to the capital stock of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation created by act of Congress entitled 'An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific Ocean,' approved July 27, 1866, in such sums and number of shares as appear opposite our names respectively, hereby binding ourselves, our administrators, executors, and assigns to the payment of such subscriptions, in such installments as the said act requires, and as the board of commissioners, created by said act, or the board of trustees or directors to succeed such commissioners, may from time to time require. In pursuance of a resolution passed at a meeting of the board of commissioners held the 1st day of October, 1866, authorizing books for subscriptions to be opened this day.

LOCATION OF ROUTE.

No map of the general route of the whole main line of this road was ever filed.

Maps of definite location were filed by sections in the General Land Office on the main line as follows:

For that part from Springfield, Mo., to the western boundary of the State, December 17, 1866.

For that part from the Missouri State line to the mouth of the King-fisher Creek, in Indian Territory, December 2, 1871.

For that part from the mouth of King-fisher Creek to the eastern boundary of New Mexico Territory, February 7, 1872.

For that part through the Territory of New Mexico, March 12, 1872.

For that part through the Territory of Arizona, March 12, 1872.

For that part from San Francisco, Cal., to San Miguel, Cal., in township 25 south, range 12, Mount Diablo meridian, California, March 12, 1872.

For that part from western boundary of Los Angeles County, California, to a point in township 7 north, range 7 east, San Bernardino meridian, California, March 15, 1872.

For that part from San Miguel Mission, in township 25 south, range 12 east, Mount Diablo meridian, to the Los Angeles County line, April 16, 1874.

For that part from a point in township 7 north, range 7 east, San Bernardino meridian, California, to the Colorado River, April 16, 1874.

On branch line from Van Buren, near western boundary of Arkansas, to a point in the valley of the Canadian River near the meridian of 96° west longitude, Indian Territory, duplicate map was filed December 1, 1871, and February 7, 1872.

From a point on the Canadian River near 96° west longitude to an intersection with the main line in the valley of the Canadian River map was filed February 7, 1872. Except for that part in the State of Missouri no maps of the route were filed for about five years after the act passed.

TIME OF CONSTRUCTION.

It is not very clear just when construction began. The company insists that it commenced July 4, 1868. But the affidavit of the engineer shows that the first 25 miles of the road was not finished until September 27, 1870. To have complied with the law at least 100 miles should have been completed at that date. That part of the road between Springfield and Pierce City, in the State of Missouri, was built by the Pacific and Southern Branch Railroad Company. That part from Springfield, Mo., to Vinita, Ind. T., was completed in 1870 and 1871, and the same reported to and approved by the President, and patents afterward issued to the land conterminous therewith, amounting in the aggregate to over one-half million acres.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What part of these lands do you propose to forfeit?

Mr. McRAE. I want to forfeit them all except for that part of the road completed in time. The red line on the map west of Springfield will show what I would give them land for.

Eighty-nine miles of this portion of the road are in the State of Missouri and on the line of another road in aid of which lands had been previously granted to the State of Missouri by the act of June 10, 1852. This was examined and accepted as part of the Atlantic and Pacific under the act of July 27, 1866. The governor of Missouri certified that about 75 miles thereof were completed under the grant of 1852. Under the Attorney-General's opinion of October 26, 1880, the first section was accepted and patents issued for 23,037.36 acres. During the years 1880, 1881, and 1882 the road was constructed from Isleta, N. Mex., to The Needles, on the Colorado River, a distance of 550 miles. In 1882 it constructed 50 miles between Vinita and Red Fork, Ind. T.

The tracings on the map that I have here will show the line of the route as contemplated by Congress. The red lines show that actually constructed to date and the blue lines that which is yet unconstructed. The section west of Springfield, which is shown by the red line, shows that which was constructed within time less 50 miles. Only about one-third of the main line has been completed, and only 125 miles of that within the time fixed by the granting act. Look at the map and answer by your votes if that is a substantial compliance with the terms of the grant. Although the company has long since forfeited its rights by refusing to complete the road it insists on having the benefit of the grant to the extent of construction, and in the hope that Congress might so declare it has caused the work to be done on such sections of the road as would give it the greatest quantity and best quality of lands, and entirely neglected such parts as have no adjacent public lands, notably in the Indian Territory and Texas, and also through the Colorado Desert, where it is of little or no value.

The granting act required the road to be built to the Pacific Ocean as near as practicable along the thirty-fifth parallel of latitude. There is very little probability that the road will ever be extended beyond the present western terminus. The officials of the company do not hesitate to say that the land along this route from "The Needles" to San Buenaventura on the Pacific coast is of very little value. It is almost all desert lands. So the company has permanently abandoned it and bought or leased that part of the line of the Southern Pacific between "The Needles" and Mojave Junction, and there makes friendly connection with the main line of the Southern Pacific. The company has not yet made a claim for lands on account of this road so purchased, but I have no doubt that it will do so if this amendment is passed and the Southern Pacific grant is forfeited. Whether the lands are allowed to it or to the Southern Pacific, it will be the beneficiary.

If the Southern Pacific should fail to get the grant, then this company will assert its claim under this act, insisting that it constructed the road in the meaning of the law. The company in my opinion should lose this grant, if for no other reason, on account of the fraudulent claim made to and withdrawal of the land along the coast from San Buenaventura to San Francisco, Cal. There was no foundation for such claim, and yet the lands were withdrawn from homestead settlers at the company's request. It is to the credit of the present honorable Secretary of the Interior that he, in March of the present year, decided that no grant was made to the company for that line, the extent of which is indicated by this map.

In the year 1870 the Atlantic and Pacific Company, although hopelessly insolvent, purchased from the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company the road from Springfield to a point near Saint Louis, and mortgaged the road and the land grant in Missouri. Default was made, I think, in the first annual installment of interest, and the property, including the land grant, was sold, and the Saint Louis and San Francisco Company became the owner.

No more work was done on the Atlantic and Pacific until 1880, long after the time for the completion of the whole line had expired. The Atlantic and Pacific had neither money nor credit, and yet the temptation to hold this large land grant was too strong for resistance, and as the result of a well-organized plan to "gobble it up" we have what is called the tripartite agreement between the Atchison, Topeka and Sante Fé, the Saint Louis and San Francisco, and the Atlantic and Pacific Railway Companies. This agreement, which I here refer to and will print as an appendix hereto, provided for the completion of the western division of the Atlantic and Pacific. The owners of the two solvent companies furnished the money, took the stock and bonds, and are in fact the real owners of the whole thing. The corporate existence of the Atlantic and Pacific is merely nominal, and kept up so as to control this land grant.

IMPORTANT SECTIONS OF THE GRANTING ACT.

The third section of the act is as follows:

That there be, and hereby is, granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company * * * every alternate section of public lands, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, &c.

I will read at length the fifth, eighth, and ninth sections of the act:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad shall be constructed in a substantial and workmanlike manner, with all the necessary draws, culverts, bridges, viaducts, crossings, turn-outs, stations and watering-places, and all other appurtenances, including furniture and rolling-stock, equal in all respects to railroads of the first class when prepared for business, with rails of the best quality, manufactured from American iron. And a uniform gauge shall be established throughout the entire length of the road. And there shall be constructed a telegraph line, of the most substantial and approved description, to be operated along the entire line: Provided, That the said company shall not charge the Government higher rates than they do individuals for like transportation and telegraphic service. And it shall be the duty of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company to permit any other railroad which shall be authorized to be built by the United States, or by the Legislature of any Territory or State in which the same may be situated, to form running connections with it, on fair and equitable terms.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to and accepted by said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: That the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from the approval of this act by the President, and shall complete not less than 50 miles per year after the second year, and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the main line of the whole road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1878.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the United States make the several conditional grants herein, and that the said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company accept the same, upon the further condition that if the said company make any breach of the conditions hereof, and allow the same to continue for upward of one year, then, in such case, at any time hereafter, the United States may do any and all acts and things which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of the said road.

Mr. BAYNE. What does the bill propose?

Mr. McRAE. The bill proposes to give to the company the lands for all that portion of the road completed up to the time of the passage of it (indicated by the red lines on the map) and to forfeit the remainder. I propose to forfeit all of it except for the portion of the road which was completed in time. The difference between the proposition made by the bill and mine is shown by the red line on the map between Isleta and "The Needles." I would forfeit, and the majority would give the railroad all the lands granted in Arizona and more than half in New Mexico.

When the question was pending upon my substitute we were met by these same gentlemen who insisted that the proposition ought not to be adopted because by this amendment, which had been made by the committee, all the rights of the United States were protected. They seek now to vote the same out. The desire of the committee was to protect the rights of the United States so that if Congress at any time in the future should so desire it could forfeit those lands not forfeited and then go into court and test the mortgages. It appears now that we must concede almost all the company wants without any judicial interpretation of the act of April 20, 1871, and without a conference. It is none of our business to construe statutes, but to pass them.

If the House adopts the Senate amendment the title of the railroad company is confirmed and the right of the United States is gone, and all you have saved is this little strip shown by the red line east of Isleta. That is the case squarely submitted.

Mr. TRIGG. Is that the strip through New Mexico?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir. So I say that if they construct between the two red lines [indicating on the map], they get but little more lands. This portion of the line is through Texas, and they get no lands there because it belongs to that State. This is through the Indian Territory and does not belong to the Government to be disposed of in that way.

Mr. PAYSON. I wish to ask the gentleman a question, in order that he may be clearly understood here. Does not the gentleman know that the railway company has always claimed the benefit of the land grant through the Indian Territory subject only to the right of occupancy of the Indians? That is to say, they claim that when the Indian title shall be extinguished their title attaches to the grant in that Territory.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman is a member of the committee that reported this bill——

Mr. PAYSON. I am simply asking the question so that the position of the gentleman from Arkansas may be squarely understood by the House.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman is a member of the committeee that reported this bill. In the majority report, which he sanctions (and the substance of it has been pending here for about four years), they say that until five or six years ago the railway company never claimed an acre there, and the present attorney of the company, General Williamson, as Commissioner of the Land Office, decided that they had no such right.

Mr. PAYSON. I agree with the views the gentleman is expressing here now. I do not believe that they have a title to any of these lands in the Indian Nation, but I am asking the gentleman if he does not know that the company do claim it?

Mr. McRAE. Oh, they claim everything. Why, Mr. Speaker, although this grant authorized them to go upon the thirty-fifth parallel to the Pacific Ocean they had the audacity when they got to San Buenaventura to claim a grant from there to San Francisco up the Pacific coast a distance of several hundred miles. Then they changed the line after filing these maps, and I am of the opinion that the company will claim the grant in consequence of the purchase from the Southern Pacific. If the rule insisted upon here by the majority is adopted by Congress one or the other of them will get it, and it makes no difference which because it will inure to the benefit of this company claiming to be the owner of the line and will be lost to the people. Sir, I hold that there is no danger of the Government losing anything in the Indian nation and no danger of their losing anything in Texas. The fact that the company has built no road there shows that it has no faith in the claim.

Now, take the facts of this case, take the time of the construction and the dickering of the company into consideration, and determine what should be done about it. It is alleged that this company became bankrupt years ago, that its nominal existence is now maintained only by the agreement entered into with the Saint Louis and San Francisco, and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé companies, and that these companies have upheld its nominal existence merely for the purpose of fraudulently getting this grant from the United States. The company is simply pretending to earn this land grant, when in fact it is said that these other companies are now operating the road in connection with their own lines.

Without taking up the time of the House to read them, I desire to submit some tables which I will print with my remarks, and will now make some general remarks upon the subject of railroad forfeitures.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him what part of the line is in operation?

Mr. McRAE. The red line on this map indicates the part of the road that is in operation. One portion is operated, as I understand, by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé, and another by the Saint Louis and San Francisco company.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Is there any dispute as to whether this portion of the line [indicating] was or was not built in time?

Mr. McRAE. None at all. It was built in 1880–'83, although the grant expired July 4, 1878. It was built, therefore, several years after the expiration of the time. From the time this little strip [indicating it on the map] was built it was ten years before another lick was struck upon the road. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Representatives, who are pledged by their political platforms to the forfeiture of these unearned land grants, to take this map, look at the facts of this case, and tell me if this forfeiture ought not to be declared. If it is not declared, I tell you that our course will excite great dissatisfaction throughout that portion of the country. In the early period, when the policy of making land grants to aid in the construction of railroads was adopted, we granted only 6 miles upon each side of the line; but that was increased from time to time until it got up to 20 miles, and sometimes much more.

Now, estimate 20 miles upon each side of this line through New Mexico and Arizona and you have a very large part of the lands in those Territories given to this company for a road which was built seven or eight years out of time and after the settlement of them. In the present attitude the only protection for the Government is for this House to refuse to concur in the Senate amendment. If the bill must pass, pass it as the House passed it. I ask the House to assert its manhood and to refuse to yield one single iota on this point. I have endeavored in my argument to show that simply by delay the Government can lose nothing, and that by adhering to this amendment (although it is not as strong as it ought to be nor what I first struggled to get) the rights of the United States will be reserved, and in the future, when you have a Congress that has the will to declare the forfeiture, the Government can recover its lands. But by the other policy we lose everything. Now, if any other gentleman desires to ask me any question in connection with this subject I think I am prepared to answer it, and will gladly attempt to do so.

Mr. PLUMB. I understand the gentleman to say that from this point [indicating on the map] to this point [indicating] the road was constructed out of time?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. While that portion of the road was being constructed out of time was there any notice to the railroad company, from any quarter, indicating that there would be opposition to confirming the grant?

Mr. McRAE. I do not know who was authorized to serve such notice except Congress, and it has been trying to forfeit the grant for several years. Bills were introduced in Congress and have been pending, I believe, ever since the Forty-seventh Congress, to forfeit this grant.

I do not know whether the company ever had any direct notice that the grant would be disputed, but they were bound to take notice of the conditions of the act, and hence knew that their time had expired. The act required the whole of the main line to be completed by July 4, 1878. The part you refer to was not commenced until 1880 or afterward—more than two years after the time had expired.

If they knew their rights under the grant which they accepted, and they were in law bound to know, they knew that they took the grant subject to the right of Congress to forfeit for breach of the conditions. It was a mere matter of grace that Congress should make the grant, and so it is as to the forfeiture. Remember that not a dollar, as I understand, except the 10 per cent. required by the nineteenth section, was ever paid by the corporators of this company; and if the Government should declare the whole of the grant forfeited, it would violate no principle of either law or equity.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I understand the gentleman's answer to be substantially that bills for the forfeiture of the lands were introduced here before this road was constructed or during its construction?

Mr. McRAE. Yes; that is my understanding.

So far as the executive department is concerned it seems that it permitted railroad companies to build wherever and whenever they wished, to file locations wherever and whenever they wished, and to withdraw lands whenever they wanted them withdrawn. All the rulings of the executive department for years past have been in favor of the companies. To illustrate: For years all these lands [illustrating on the map] were withdrawn under pretense that this company was entitled to them, and they remained withdrawn until Mr. Secretary Lamar overruled the order of withdrawal in the month of March of this year.

Mr. LINDSLEY. Was the road inspected from time to time as constructed?

Mr. McRAE. A great deal of it has been inspected; and several inspectors have reported that it has been constructed as the law required, except that it has been done out of time.

A MEMBER. Have patents been issued to the company?

Mr. McRAE. No patent for an acre has ever been issued except here [indicating on the map], as I understand.

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman is mistaken about that. Patents have been issued west of the Atchison, Topeka and Sante Fé road in New Mexico to the extent of nearly 600,000 acres.

Mr. McRAE. I would like the gentleman's authority for that statement, because I have my facts from the Land Office and Railroad Commissioner's Office, and I have nothing showing any patent for lands on the western division. If such facts exist I should like to have them now, but if I am mistaken it does not alter the case.

Mr. PAYSON. I shall be pleased to give the gentleman the facts in a few minutes when my time shall come.

Mr. McRAE. Less than 1,000,000 acres have been patented, as I understand, and I am sure that over on the eastern division and in Missouri something over 500,000 acres have been patented, and these lands thus patented are here, as I understand [indicating on the map]. If any lands have been patented over there [indicating] I have no information of it, and certainly there have not been 600,000 acres patented there.

A MEMBER. The Government has inspected the road?

Mr. McRAE. The completed portions of it have been inspected by the proper authority, but this is no acceptance. The inspection does not bind the United States, but only furnishes the facts as to the time and manner of the construction.

Mr. Speaker, since the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] controverts to some extent the facts as stated by me, I desire to call attention to a summary of the facts as made by the majority of the committee, and they come here without his dissent:

(1) That the Atlantic and Pacific company never completed but 34 miles of the road which it now claims to own.

(2) That at the time when the main line should have been completed (July 4, 1878), there was uncompleted 2,267 miles of that line.

(3) That said company at no time since its creation has been, and is not now, able to complete the road.

(4) That the stockholders of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé and the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railroad Companies own most of its capital stock.

(9) That these corporations caused the mortgages to be executed on the franchises, rights, and property, including the land grant, and caused the bonds to be issued and guaranteed their payment, and took the bonds when so issued and now hold them.

(6) That they virtually own and control the Atlantic and Pacific company and all its property, together with its mortgage and bonded indebtedness; and are holding them and allowing the company to maintain a mere nominal existence.

Is there anything in this that calls for equity?

LEGAL PRINCIPLES.

There is but little or no difference of opinion as to the legal principles involved in the grant and the contemplated forfeiture, except as to the effect of the act of April 20, 1871.

All agree that the company became seized at the date of the granting act of an estate in præsenti upon conditions subsequent; that it requires an act of Congress to forfeit and restore the title to the United States; that as the conditions of the grant were expressed there is no necessity of an express reservation of the right of entry for breach of the condition declared in section 8. Congress has the power to declare a forfeiture of the whole grant; that the grant does not constitute an absolute dedication of the lands for the purpose of constructing the road. For authority in support of these propositions I will refer to the able reports from the Public Lands Committee in this and the Northern Pacific and Southern Pacific companies.

That section 9 is only cumulative to section 8 and provides for a further condition subsequent, for the failure to keep which Congress may do all things necessary to insure the completion of the road and thus protect the Government.

To prove that this must be the proper construction let us suppose that the road was constructed within the time fixed and all the conditions of section 5 broken, what power has the United States unless it is derived from section 9? So we see that section 8 must stand independent of 9.

If section 9 only limits 8, then the effect would be to extend the time for the completion of the road for one year, and adds no additional obligation or liability on the company. No such thing was intended, and to insist upon it is to violate that principle of law which requires such grants to be strictly construed as against the grantee.

WHAT HAS BEEN THE POLICY OF THE PAST AND WHAT IT SHOULD BE IN THE FUTURE.

It may be that on account of the corporate phlegm now temporarily lodged in the pharynx of the people in the shape of the representatives of railroads and other corporations that their wishes can not be spoken into law, but at the same time we should not despair. I have a strong and abiding faith in the institutions bequeathed us by our fathers. I believe that there yet remains life enough in this old body-politic to expectorate, and that such injurious matter will be spewed out and the voice of the people again be heard in the shape of acts or resolutions of Congress upon this subject.

The policy of granting lands to aid in the construction of railroads was initiated in 1850 by the passage of the act to aid the Illinois Central Railroad (3 Statutes at Large, 466), and since that time has been very liberally indulged in. Until the year 1862 it was the universal practice of Congress to make the grants of 6 miles on each side to the States in trust for the roads. Since then the practice has been to greatly enlarge the limits and to grant directly to railroad companies, and hence a great deal of our present trouble in forfeiting the unearned lands held by them. The following table will show by what administration made and the extent of these grants, and how much has been patented to the companies:

	Acres.
During President Fillmore's administration there were grants to the States in trust for the railroads aggregating	8,198,593.73
Of which there have been patented	7,372,883.85
During President Pierce's administration there were grants to the States in trust for the railroads aggregating	19,678,179.79
Of which there have been patented	14,886,396.47
During President Lincoln's administration there were grants directly to railroad companies aggregating	74,395,801.61
Of which there have been patented	17,164,270.87
During President Johnson's administration there were grants directly to railroad companies aggregating	34,001,297.77
Of which there have been patented	5,020,107.20
During President Grant's administration there were grants directly to railroad companies aggregating	19,231,121.69
Of which there have been patented	1,203,689.09
The total grants	155,504,994.59
The total patented	45,647,347.48

At this late day I will not undertake to pass upon its wisdom. Many of the best and ablest leaders of public thought of those times, including Hon. Stephen A. Douglas and Hon. Lewis Cass, favored the policy; but whether right or wrong we will all agree that it should now be abandoned. The time has come for us to take our bearings and see where we are drifting. Our population is increasing with wonderful rapidity. The landless and homeless are to be found all around us, while our public domain is being absorbed by railroad corporations, cattle and foreign syndicates. The grand object to be accomplished by such a policy was to secure an early completion of the roads through and the development of the great Western States and Territories, to people them and unite their commerce with that of the Eastern and Middle States. The policy did not accomplish this result. It might well be doubted if the policy materially aided in what has been done.

Eighty grants covering 155,504,994 acres have been made to companies that have altogether constructed less than 20,000 miles of road, while during the same time over 100,000 miles have been constructed by other companies without the aid of land grants, and not a few in the undeveloped West were built far in advance of and before the completion of those aided by large and valuable grants. In many cases the construction of the land grant roads appear to have been purposely delayed until the country through which the routes were projected had been settled to a sufficient extent to justify the building without aid. Under the law and practice of the Interior Department in permitting the lands to be withdrawn as soon as maps were filed the railroads lost nothing by such delay. They paid no taxes, and the land was all the time increasing in value. It was a very profitable business for them.

They have been allowed to build wherever and whenever they desired, either within or without the limit, and often allowed to change the route to suit their desires.

There are many railroads uncompleted to-day to aid which land grants were made nearly twenty-five years ago, and when the time fixed in the granting act for completion has long since expired, and yet the lands are still withdrawn from sale and settlement and the legal title in the company, with no power in the executive department to restore them to the public domain. Patents have issued to 55,000,000 or more acres, and there remains subject to forfeiture something over 100,000,000 acres. Of the eighty roads receiving grants forty-seven were completed within the time; twelve have been completed out of time; eight are in course of construction; nine were partly completed but construction suspended, and four no part has ever been constructed. Congress has the option of saving these lands for the people or giving them to the faithless railroad companies. The question is fairly before the people and the settlement can not be avoided. Shall we abondon our position in the first contest with the other branch of this Department? Our action to-day will become a precedent either for or against our policy. Both of the great political parties are squarely committed to the policy of declaring these forfeitures and restoring the lands to the public domain. The only question about which there can be an honest difference is as to the quantity "earned." The following table will show the roads subject to forfeiture.

Statement showing States and corporations to which grants have been made to aid in the construction of railroads which have not been completed within the time required by law.

State.	Date of act.	Mile limits.	Name of road.	Length of road.	Number of miles of road completed before expiration of grant.	Number of miles of road uncompleted at expiration of grant.	Number of miles of road completed after expiration of grant.	Number of miles of road now uncompleted.	Number of acres certified or patented.

* No grant in Indian Territory or Texas, but roads required to be built as part of the system.

It is insisted by some that we have no power to forfeit a number of these grants; that the grants were and are absolute and irrevocable appropriations and dedications of the lands to and for the purpose of completing the roads. In my judgment there is nothing in this. The policy of the committee of which I have the honor to be a member is not in sympathy with this idea. The committee has uniformly held that Congress has such power. At the same time the committee is divided and the recommendations hardly consistent upon the proposition as to whether or not Congress should forfeit the entire grant when there has been part performance by part construction. To illustrate, in the Southern Pacific, where the grant was made at the same time and upon the same conditions as in this case, the recommendation is to forfeit the entire grant. This I think right.

In the Northern Pacific under a grant almost identical the recommendation is to forfeit all except that which is conterminous with road constructed within time; while in the case under consideration the recommendation is to forfeit only that which is conterminous with the uncompleted portions of the road, whether built in or out of time. So in each case the House must determine the extent of the forfeiture, and to the end that fairness may be done I have made these general remarks. I respectfully submit that when the conditions have never been performed and especially when the road has never been completed, Congress should assert the title of the United States to the whole estate as if no grant had ever been made. I shall insist upon the Government's right of re-entry in every case where the road has not been completed, and hope that this policy will be adopted by the House.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time to be used later in the discussion, if I should desire to do so.

APPENDIX.

Agreement of sale of railroad from the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, August 20, 1884.

This indenture made and entered into this 20th day of August, A. D. 1884, by and between The Southern Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation duly incorporated and organized under and in pursuance of the statutes of the State of California, of the first part; The Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation created and organized under the acts of Congress of the United States of America, of the second part; The Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, a corporation incorporated and organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, of the third part, and The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company, a corporation incorporated, organized, and existing under the laws of the Territory and the State of Kansas of the fourth part.

Whereas the party of the first part is the owner of a line of railway in the State of California two hundred and forty-two $\frac{37}{100}$ miles in length, hereinafter particularly described;

And whereas it has been agreed by and between the parties hereto that such line of railway shall be sold by the party of the first part, and purchased by the party of the second part, upon the terms and conditions hereinafter stated;

And whereas in consequence of the lien existing upon such line of railway under the mortgage made and executed by the party of the first part, and bearing date the first day of April, A. D. 1875, the party of the first part can not at present make clear title to such line of railway, and it has been agreed that until clear title can be made thereto such line of railway shall be leased by the party of the first part to the party of the second part upon the terms and conditions hereinafter stated;

And whereas the parties of the third and fourth part are largely interested pecuniarily in the acquisition of such line of railway by the party of the second part by lease and purchase as aforesaid;

Now, therefore, this instrument witnesseth, that in consideration of the premises and the mutual undertakings and agreements hereinafter stated, and other good and valuable considerations, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, the parties hereto have undertaken, covenanted, and agreed, and do hereby undertake, covenant, and agree, to and with each other as follows, that is to say:

First. The party of the first part has agreed to sell to the party of the second part, and the party of the second part has agreed to purchase from the party of first part, the said line of railroad of the party of the first part from the west end of the bridge over Colorado River at or near the Needles, in the State of California, two hundred and forty-two and thirty-seven one-hundredths miles or thereabouts, to the eastern margin of the grounds or yards of the party of the first part, used in connection with the Mojave Junction Station, or with the main line of road of said party of the first part between Goshen and Yuma, together with the right of way of said railroad company therefor, two hundred feet in width, and the switches, sidings, and turnouts and the station buildings, section houses, turntables, and other appurtenances to said line of railway (except that this is not to be construed to include equipment or to interfere with the right of way and depot grounds of the party of the first part at the said Mojave Junction, but the party of the second part is to have the right to make a physical connection between its tracks and the tracks of the party of the first part at that point, at and for the price of thirty thousand dollars a mile of said railway, that is to say, seven million two hundred and seventy-one thousand one hundred dollars ($7,271,100), of which purchase price one-sixth part therof, that is to say, one million two hundred eleven thousand eight hundred and fifty dollars ($1,211,850), is to be paid by said party of the second part to said party of the first part in cash, and the remainder thereof, viz, six million and fifty-nine thousand two hundred and fifty dollars ($6,059,250), is to be paid by said party of the second part to said prrty of the first part, either in cash or in first-mortgage six per cent. bonds of the party of the second part issued under and secured by its first-mortgage bearing date first day of July, 1880, and the prompt payment of the principal and interest of which shall have been legally guaranteed by the parties of the third and fourth parts, respectively; it being understood and agreed that such sale is to be consummated, and the purchase price of such line of railway paid, whenever the party of the first part is able to make clear title to said line of railway, discharged from the lien of its first mortgage bearing date the first day of April, 1875, hereinbefore referred to, and from all other liens existing thereon at the day of the date of these presents, or which may be imposed thereon by the party of the first part at any time from the day of the date of these presents to the consummation of such sale.

Second. In the meantime, and until the consummation of such sale and payment of the purchase price as aforesaid, the party of the first part has leased and demised to said party of the second part, and said party of the second part has hired from said party of the first part from the first day of October, 1884, the said line of railway from the west end of the bridge over the Colorado River to such easterly margin of such grounds or yards of the party of the first part as above described, together with the other appurtenances thereto hereinbefore agreed to be sold (but excluding equipment), at and for the annual rental of eighteen hundred dollars per mile of such railway, to wit, four hundred and thirty-six thousand two hundred and sixty-six dollars ($436,266), payable semi-annually during the continuance of such lease, and the said party of the second part has covenanted and agreed, and hereby covenants and agrees, to and with said party of the first part, that the said party of the second part will, and its successors and assigns shall, pay to the said party of the first part, its successors and assigns, as rental for such line of railway and appurtenances until the time of the consummation of such sale and the payment of the purchase price thereof as aforesaid, the sum of two hundred and eighteen thousand one hundred and thirty-three dollars ($218,133), on the first day of April and October in each and every year, and that it, the said party of the second part, will, and its successors and assigns shall further promptly pay and discharge all taxes and assessments which shall hereafter become due upon said property or any part thereof, or may become in any wise due or owing in respect to the same, and will maintain, repair, and replace such property so that the same may at all times be and remain in substantially as good plight and condition as that in which it now is, the nature and character of the property being considered.

Third. In case default shall be made in the payment of any installment of such rental at the time hereinbefore stipulated for the payment thereof, and such default shall continue for thirty days, then and in that event the said party of the first part, its successors and assigns, may thereupon, and without demand or other formality, enter upon and take possession of all and singular the demised premises, with their appurtenances, and it or they shall be thereafter entitled to hold, retain, and enjoy the same as of its original estate therein; but notwithstanding such entry the said party of the second part, its successors and assigns, shall be liable to said party of the first part, its successors and assigns, for any and all damages in any wise resulting from the non-fulfillment of this agreement, or any wrongful acts or omissions of said party of the second part, its successors or assigns, in respect to the demised premises or any part thereof. In case of the happening of any such default in respect to the payment of rental for said demised premises, and the continuance of such default for thirty days as aforesaid, then and in that event at the election of said party of the first part, its successors or assigns, the right of the party of the second part to purchase said premises under the foregoing provisions of this agreement shall cease and determine.

Fourth. The party of the third part and the party of the fourth part, for themselves and their respective successors and assigns, in consideration of their pecuniary interest in the stock and securities of the said party of the second part, and their interest in the opening and maintenance of a through line of freight and passenger traffic over their respective lines of railway and the line of railway now owned by, and the line of railway herein agreed to be leased and sold to, the said party of the second part, and for other good and valuable considerations, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, have guaranteed, and do hereby guarantee, to the said party of the first part, its successors and assigns, the prompt payment to said party of the first part, its successors and assigns, of the several installments of rental, and of the purchase price hereinbefore agreed to be paid by the said party of the second part to the said party of the first part, and in case default shall be made by said party of the second part in the payment of such installments of rent, or any thereof, or in the payment of such purchase price, at the time or times hereinbefore stipulated for the payment thereof, will promptly pay to said party of the first part upon demand, any and all amounts in respect of which said party of the second part shall make such default, which amounts so paid by said party of the third or fourth part shall be justly chargeable by the party paying the same against all amounts then due or which may become due from it to said party of the second part for traffic over such leased line, or any line of said party of the second part, and shall be otherwise enforceable as a debt of said party of the second part to said party of the third or fourth part who may have paid the same; but it is understood and agreed that the said parties of the third and fourth parts shall not be liable in solido for the amounts hereinbefore expressed, but each of such parties shall be liable only for the one-half part of the several installments of rent and the purchase price hereinbefore expressed to be guaranteed by it.

Fifth. The party of the second part at any time during the continuance of the foregoing lease may, at its own cost and expense, and upon proper indemnification of the party of the first part, use the name of the party of the first part to defend possession of the demised premises against others than the party of the first part, its successors or assigns, and to acquire right of way for the railroad above described in case of change of the alignment thereof. In case the party of the second part shall be evicted from the demised premises by paramount title, then and in that event the party of the first part will pay to the party of the second part the fair value to the party of the first part, at the time of such eviction, of any additional sidings along the line of said railroad, and buildings, structures, and machinery along such line necessary and proper for the operation of the road, which may have been constructed by the party of the second part after the day of the date of these presents and before such eviction.

Sixth. So long as the undertakings and obligations on the part of the party of the second part, as hereinbefore expressed, shall be performed and fulfilled, the party of the first part will not impose any additional lien upon said demised premises by second mortgage or otherwise, except by the issuing of additional bonds under its existing first mortgage, if the party of the first part should desire so to do.

Seventh. For the purpose of determining the present condition and state of repair of the above-described property at the time possession thereof is transferred under this indenture, A. A. Robinson, James Dun, and George E. Gray, engineers, are hereby designated to examine and inspect the same, and make full report in writing upon said condition and state of repair to each of the parties hereto. Said report shall be made within thirty days from the date of this indenture, and shall be conclusive evidence for and against each of the parties hereto in all cases and controversies hereafter arising under this agreement, and the cost of such examination, inspection, and report shall be borne equally by the parties of the first and second parts hereto. If the report is not unanimous, such engineers shall select a disinterested engineer, whose decision shall be final.

Eighth. The said party of the first part covenants and agrees to and with the party of the second part that, upon the arrival of the time for the consummation of the sale hereinbefore agreed upon, it will convey the property sold to the party of the second part, by good and sufficient deed, with usual covenants of warranty, and that during the term of said lease, the rent reserved being paid and all other terms of said lease being fulfilled, it will warrant and defend the peaceful occupation and enjoyment of the demised premises, and of every part thereof to the party of the second part against the lawful claims of all persons.

Ninth. In case disagreements of any kind shall arise at any time between any two of the parties hereto, as to any act or omission to act under this agreement, or any damages claimed to have been suffered by reason of any violation thereof, or as to the meaning of any clause or provision thereof, at the request of either of such parties, an arbitrator shall be appointed by each of the parties so disagreeing, and a third arbitrator shall be chosen by the two so appointed, and the decision of said arbitrators, or a majority of them, given after a hearing, of which both parties shall be duly notified, and at which they shall have an opportunity to be heard, shall be final and binding upon both parties as to the matter or matters in issue between them, and in case of such arbitration, each party to this agreement hereby covenants for itself, its successors and assigns, with each of the other parties to this agreement, and its successors and assigns, that it will forthwith, upon the rendering of any decision as aforesaid, upon any arbitration to which it was a party, comply with and perform the requirements thereof and pay any sum or sums of money which it may be required to pay by such award.

Tenth. In the event that the road and property of the party of the second part shall be taken possession of for breach of condition of any mortgage made by it, or shall pass into the hands of a receiver then in that event, at the joint election of the parties of the third and fourth part, or in case of their failure to agree so to elect, then at the separate election of either one of them (either such election to be signified and notified in writing to the party of the first part, and also to the party of the second part), all right, interest, and estate of the party of the second part under this contract shall cease and determine, and the same shall be at once vested in the parties or party so electing, and the parties or party so electing shall become bound by the undertakings and covenants on the part of the party of the second part hereinbefore expressed, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as if the demise and contract of sale herein made had been originally made with the parties or party so electing. In such case, the party of the second part shall make and execute to the parties or party so electing all such assignments and conveyances, if any, as may be deemed desirable for the confirmation of their title.

Eleventh. In the event of any default in the performance of the terms of the first mortgage of the party of the first part hereinbefore referred to, entitling the mortgagee to elect to avoid this contract, and such default continuing for a period of eighteen months, the party of the second part shall thereupon become entitled to the like election, to be exercised within thirty days after the expiration of such period of eighteen months, and, in case of its electing to avoid the contract, shall, upon giving notice in writing thereof to the party of the first part, and at the same time tendering the rent then accrued, pro rata, and delivering or tendering possession of the property covered by the contract, be discharged from all liability or obligation under the same.

Twelfth. Each and all of the covenants herein contained, binding or inuring to the benefit of any party hereto, shall also bind or innure to the benefit of the successors and assigns of such party.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have caused their respective corporate seals to be hereunto affixed, and these presents to be signed on their behalf, respectively.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, a few statements which have been made by my colleague upon the committee [Mr. MCRAE] ought not to go unnoticed; and that which seems to me the most important matter to be considered in connection with this amendment has escaped his attention altogether. The grant to this corporation for the building of this line of road, which, as he says, was made in 1866, provided for the construction of a line of road which, according to the map of definite location thereafter filed by the corporation, was 2,429 miles in length. Provision was made that grants of land to the amount of twenty sections per mile on either side of the road in States and forty sections in the Territories, and in alternate sections, should be made in aid of the construction of the road. The work of construction was begun. A panic came on in 1869 or 1870, affecting the affairs of this company so that they were unable to raise the funds to go on with the construction, and in 1870 they came to Congress asking permission to do something that they had not the right to do theretofore, namely, to mortgage the road and the land grant which Congress had made to them. The act of Congress passed at that time in pursuance of the application of the company is found on page 19 of the seventeenth volume of the Statutes at Large, and I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act to enable the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company to mortgage its road.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, organized under act of Congress of July 27, 1866, is hereby authorized to make and issue its bonds in such form and manner, for such sums, payable at such times and bearing such rate of interest, and to dispose of them on such terms as its directors may deem advisable; and to secure said bonds the said company may mortgage its road, equipment, lands, franchises, privileges, and other rights and property, subject to such terms, conditions, and limitations as its directors may prescribe. As proof and notice of the legal execution and effectual delivery of any mortgage hereafter made by said company, it shall be filed and recorded in the office of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That if the company shall hereafter suffer any breach of the conditions of the act above referred to, under which it is organized, the rights of those claiming under any mortgage made by the company to the lands granted to it by said act shall extend only to so much thereof as shall be conterminous with or appertain to that part of said road which shall have been constructed at the time of the foreclosure of said mortgage.

Approved, April 20, 1871.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, bear in mind until the passage of that act the company had no authority to execute any mortgage upon its land grants or its franchise, but under that authority mortgages of the railroad company have been executed, securing bonds now in circulation to the amount of $25,000 per mile of land-grant mortgage bonds upon the land-grant land, and what are known as income bonds of $18,750 per mile; making a total of incumbrances upon each mile of constructed road upon this land grant, the road, and its franchises estimated at $43,750 for each mile of constructed road.

Mr. MCRAE. I ask the gentleman, when he says that they did not have a right to mortgage, whether, in fact, they had not mortgaged the road before 1871?

Mr. PAYSON. They had not. The first mortgage given by the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company upon the land affected by this bill or its franchises was given under the authority of the act of 1871; and those mortgages are outstanding to-day. Gentlemen will especially bear in mind that the provisions in this act provide when a breach of the conditions of the grant may be made, if any breach shall occur the rights of parties claiming under mortgages given by the corporation after the passage of the act shall extend to and operate upon the lands that lie conterminous to the constructed road. Hence, making that statement as emphatic as though I had repeated it twenty times, what has the company done? They have under the original act and under this act constructed 725 miles of road. On that 725 miles these mortgages are operating to-day. And the gist of this bill with the Senate amendments is to allow the railroad company and its mortgagees to have the benefit of the lands lying opposite the constructed road, but declares the forfeiture and restore to the public domain every acre of the land lying within the limits of this grant opposite to the road at this time not constructed.

That is the plain statement of what the effect of this bill with the Senate amendments is, and when the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] says this bill as it comes from the Senate is an empty and insignificant forfeiture, may I have the attention of the House for a moment to give a few figures in regard to this matter?

The total amount of land in this grant, Mr. Speaker, as estimated by the company and as found in the official documents which come to this House, is 50,688,000 acres. This bill as it is proposed and recommended now by the committee of this House will declare a forfeiture of 33,868,800 acres, as the company has estimated its grant. It may be the gentleman from Arkansas regards that as empty and insignificant. I regard it as substantial and worthy of attention.

Mr. MCRAE. Will the gentleman now state what the land grant is as estimated by the Land Department.

Mr. PAYSON. I am going to give the figures as they appear in this executive document from the Interior Department which I hold in my hand.

Mr. MCRAE. What document does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. PAYSON. I refer to Miscellaneous Document No. 10, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, which is a letter from the Auditor of Railroad Accounts relative to land grants made by the United States to aid in the construction of the Pacific Railroads. In that document, on page 20, it is stated the number of acres of land granted amounted to 51,840,000 acres.

Mr. MCRAE rose.

Mr. PAYSON. I have precisely the same document the gentleman has in his hands, and I will state the facts just as they appear.

I read, page 20:

The length of road and extent of land grant for the whole line included in the charter act may be stated approximately as follows, viz:

State or Territory.	From—	To—	Miles.	Acres per mile.	Acres granted.
Missouri	Springfield	West line	90	12,800	1,152,000
Indian	East line	do	400	25,600	10,240,000
Do	do	Canadian River	300	25,600	7,680,000
Texas	do	West line	200	12,800	2,560,000
New Mexico	do	do	450	25,600	11,520,000
Arizona	do	do	400	25,600	10,240,000
California	do	San Francisco	655	12,800	8,384,000
Arkansas	West line	Van Buren	5	12,800	64,000

The company's estimate of the above is 2,472.98 miles of road and 49,244,803 acres of land. The estimate of the General Land Office is 2,544.65 miles of road and 50,067,690 acres of land.

The United States having no public lands in the State of Texas, and the lands in the Indian Territory having been "otherwise appropriated" at the date of the grant, there must be deducted from the above total 20,480,000 acres, which leaves 31,360,000 acres actually granted, from which is likewise to be deducted the following, namely:

	Acres.
1. Lands in Missouri previously disposed of	645,184
2. Lands in New Mexico, "mineral" and otherwise disposed of, estimated at one-half of the grant	5,760,000
3. Lands in Arizona, "mineral" and otherwise disposed of, estimated at one-half of the grant	5,120,000
4. Lands in California of the same character, estimated at one-third of the grant	2,794,666
5. Lands in Arkansas otherwise disposed of	32,000
Total deductions, additional	14,351,850

After all of these deductions are made the quantity of the land remaining for the use of the railroad company would be but 17,008,150 acres, and of this quantity the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company received in 1876 about 300,000 acres, and there had been disposed of by the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, prior to 1876, about 200,000 acres, the proceeds of which were applied to the construction of the road in Missouri; so that, in round numbers, about 16,500,000 acres of land are only available for the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, to aid in the construction of its railroad of more than 2,000 miles from Seneca, Mo., through the Indian Territory, Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and California, to the Pacific Ocean or San Francisco.

I ask the gentleman whether I am right, and whether I have not read from the same report he holds in his hands?

I again ask the gentleman whether I am not reading from the same report to which he refers and which he holds in his hand?

Mr. McRAE. Yes; but I ask if it does not show the fact that but 16,500,000 acres of land are available to this road; and how can you get a forfeiture of 33,000,000 acres out of 16,000,000 and a little over?

Mr. PAYSON. If the gentleman from Arkansas will not anticipate my argument I will try to make myself clearly understood before I get through. I do not assume infallible knowledge with reference to these matters. I am liable to some mistake, and as much as any other man. But I do assume to know something with reference to these questions; and if the gentleman will listen and not anticipate me, I will try to make the points clearly understood.

This estimate which the gentleman alludes to as to the extent of the limits of this grant and the amount affected by the operation of this bill is, as I have said, much less than the estimate of the Government at first and that fully appearing in later documents, and it will be borne in mind that the estimate of the Interior Department I have read is based upon the assumption that the railroad companies get no land in the Indian Territory.

This should be borne in mind at the outset. The amount of land involved there, if they are entitled to any land in the Indian Territory (which I question), amounts to 17,920,000 acres. The Interior Department assumed that land is not affected by the grant; but the language of the granting act is: "That there be, and hereby is, granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company every alternate section of land, &c., to the amount of twenty sections of land on either side of its road," &c., not only through the Territories of the United States but in the Indian Territory. And it would raise the legal question whether or not the United States has such an interest in the lands within the limits of the Indian Territory as that when the Indian title thereto shall be extinguished, when the right of Indian occupancy has gone, and the lands are back under the control of the United States, whether or not under the language of the granting act the railroad company is not entitled to the land in the Territory covered by the granting act. I shall not go into the question whether they are entitled to that land as a matter of right or not; it is not essential to settle that now; it is enough for the purpose of this argument to say that the railroad company by its own action and by the claims of its attorneys and agents is claiming the right; and that claim has been tacitly agreed to by Attorney-General Devens. The question for Congress to deal with now is to consider the contingency which may arise when this question gets into the courts after the road is constructed, and they make their claim if this bill should fail; and the courts should decide that they are entitled to the lands; in which case the lands will be gone and the jurisdiction of the Government will be terminated.

Now, this bill sets the question entirely at rest by declaring the grant there forfeited, restoring to the General Government all the rights that it had more or less and which are necessary to protect itself, and the question will not be affected if the bill passes by the construction of any road by the company hereafter through that Territory. They are now progressing with the construction of this road as rapidly as may be through the Indian Territory. A portion of the road has been constructed. They have built already some 90 miles, down to the Canadian River, and a large and very expensive bridge has been built within the last five months across that stream. The construction, therefore, is progressing as rapidly as possible through the Indian Territory, and beyond on toward the borders of the Territory of New Mexico, and they will soon connect with a road already constructed by which they will have an outlet to the Pacific Ocean. If the Senate amendments be concurred in, it will set at rest the debated question which I have already cited. As to what my opinion may be worth in the matter one way or the other, it is only the opinion of a lawyer; but I do not believe they had the right to the lands in the Indian Territory. Other lawyers think they have. The courts will probably give it to them unless the whole question is settled by Congress. That is the object of the present bill.

It is important for another reason, Mr. Speaker. If gentlemen will take occasion to examine the precise phraseology of this granting act, they will find it is one of that species of grants which is called among the land lawyers a grant in "quantity." It is not limited to land in a locality, but the language is "that there be, and is hereby, granted to this company of the public lands of the United States to the amount of twenty alternate sections on either side of the road in States," &c. It is well known among land lawyers, and it is the uniform practice of the Interior Department, that in such cases the mode of determining the amount of the grant of land to railroads is equivalent to multiplying the length of the road by the number of sections per mile of the grant. If the grant under such circumstances covers more land than is contained in the remaining sections in the granted limits, then the indemnity lands are given equal to the land to which the road is entitled, and these lands may be taken. So as to mineral lands in Arkansas or New Mexico or the Indian Territory which are excepted from the grant. These mineral lands are ordinarily excluded from railroad grants.

But in a grant of "quantity" they are compensated for out of indemnity lands. Therefore, if the courts shall decide this is a grant in "quantity," the railroad company would be entitled to the aggregate number of acres without regard to the quality of the lands, and there is a possibility of the company being entitled, if they complete the road through the Indian Territory, to fifty millions and some odd thousand acres under this grant, and upon that basis the amount of land affected by the bill and restored to the public domain is 33,868,800 acres.

The later estimate of the Department makes the amount of land that this bill will restore 23,871,360 acres.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] said, as I understood him, that no lands in New Mexico had been patented to the company, and that only about 400,000 or 500,000 acres had been patented. In this he is mistaken. The facts are the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railroad Company received about 300,000 acres of this grant and the Atlantic and Pacific prior to 1876 received about 200,000 acres, all for the benefit of the eastern part of its line in the State of Missouri.

There have been patented to the company 959,206 acres, the most of which are in New Mexico, outside that just stated. This was patented on account of road built "after time" in New Mexico on an application made to raise the question whether the company was entitled to it on such construction, full details of which will be found in an official document which I hold in my hand, House Executive Document No. 29, Forty-seventh Congress, second session.

Attorney-General Devens held that the company was entitled to the land for road built out of time, and the list of lands selected for patent by the company was approved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, January 3, 1881, the first approved list being for 23,037 acres, and followed by others. Without being able to state at the moment actually the amount of acres patented west of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad, it is enough to say that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] is mistaken in his statement, the total amount now patented being 959,206 acres.

Recapitulating, the estimate of the company as to the amount of land to which it will be entitled is, in substance:

	Miles.	Acres.
In the Indian Territory	400	10,240,000
In the Indian Territory to Canadian River	300	7,680,000
In New Mexico	450	11,520,000
In Arizona	400	10,240,000
In California	655	8,384,000
In Arkansas	5	64,000
Claim for Texas on ground that the grant is "of quantity"		2,560,000

The last estimate of the General Land Office is 40,690,560 acres. (See Executive Document No. 90, first session Forty-eighth Congress, page 135.)

The amount of land "earned" by construction is 16,819,200 acres, so that by this bill there is forfeited 33,868,800 acres by the company's estimate or 23,871,360 acres by the official estimate, assuming the grant to be one "of quantity," as the language of the act would pretty clearly indicate and as is claimed by the company.

The company has constructed from Springfield, Mo., to Vinita, Ind. T., and to the Canadian River, southwest of that point, about 175 miles; from Isleta, on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad, to the Needles, on the Colorado River, 550 miles—167 miles in New Mexico and 383 miles in Arizona—in all, 725 miles of road. Leaving unbuilt, San Francisco to the Needles, 686 miles; Isleta, east, across the rest of New Mexico, Texas, and the Indian Territory, to the point southwest of Vinita, 718 miles; the branch line in the Territory, 300 miles; in all, 1,704 miles not built.

Mr. Speaker, this is the largest land grant ever made to a corporation by the United States. And believing, as I do, in the effort that is being made in Congress to-day in response to a public sentiment that amounts to a positive demand on the part of the people of this Union, that whatever of these lands may be properly restored shall be restored to the public domain, and knowing what the feeling is at the other end of the Capitol with reference to this kind of legislation, and knowing this bill only gives the railroad company the land which lies opposite to the constructed road, and which is covered by a mortgage three times its value, I feel myself constrained to assent to the proposition which is made by the chairman of the committee, that we concur in the Senate amendments. By so doing we restore to the public domain these 23,871,760 acres of public land at least. We set at rest forever these debatable questions as to the lands in the Indian Territory and in New Mexico and California. We close the books, and save what we have now left. Suppose this is not done, suppose the railroad goes on with the process of construction in which it is now engaged in the Indian Territory, and runs its line to Albuquerque, in New Mexico, does any gentleman believe that under the authority of the act of 1871, with the sentiment prevailing at the other end of the Capitol, a single acre of this land in that Territory will be restored? Nobody will pretend that that will occur; and therefore the opportunity being presented to settle the matter now and here, I support the proposition to concur in the Senate amendments. If there is anything as to any question of facts involved in the case on which I have failed to be understood, I shall be glad to answer any questions that may be addressed to me.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I understand that this is a question of concurrence in the Senate amendment?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Have the Senate amendments been concurred in by your committee?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir. There are only two members of the committee who do not concur with the sentiments I have expressed.

Mr. McRAE. I ask the gentleman if the whole committee did not agree to add these words which the Senate want to strike out?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir; when the original bill was reported, but since the bill has come back, and been referred to the committee with the Senate amendments and we have acted upon the Senate amendments, only two gentlemen non-concur in them, as I understand the sentiments of the individual members of the committee.

Mr. COBB. This bill went to the Senate and comes back from the Senate with amendments which we think to be immaterial, with the exception of two members of the committee, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] being one of them. This corporation by its original charter was authorized to run a line of railroad from Springfield, Mo., to the Pacific Ocean. Afterward it bought the Saint Louis and San Francisco Company's interests in its road, which starts 17 or 18 miles west of Saint Louis and goes to Springfield. It gave a mortgage on that road. The mortgage also extended over the line of road from Springfield to the west line of Missouri. They failed to pay their mortgage. The Saint Louis and San Francisco Company foreclosed their mortgage and bought in the mortgaged property, which gave them the right to this road.

In 1871, as has been stated, the company came here and asked Congress to give them the right to mortgage their road, whether they had the right to do it before or not. Congress passed an act giving the company the right to mortgage their lands together with the road-bed and franchises. The company went on and mortgaged these lands. That act gave the mortgagees a lien upon all the lands conterminous with the completed road at the time of the foreclosure. They have gone on and mortgaged their road and the lands for $43,000 per mile. Now, we insist that when that mortgage is foreclosed or satisfied there will be nothing left for the Government to act upon; in other words, that all of the lands covered by this lien will be absorbed in payment of the debt. It will be to the interest of the company to do it.

There is nothing which we need to contend for in connection with the Senate amendment. The Senate strikes out the provision which we put in the bill I believe at the suggestion of the gentleman from Arkansas. To satisfy him we put a provision in the bill as it passed the House, reserving the right to forfeit any land that might be left after the lien was satisfied. The Senate strikes that out. I think this bill with the Senate amendments practically gives us all we can hope to get. It forfeits all the lands which are not conterminous with the completed road. It wipes out what the company is contending for, the lands which are in the Indian Territory. This bill wipes out any interest the company can have in those lands. Consequently, we get by this bill with the Senate amendments all we ever can get. We have thought it best, therefore, to concur in the Senate amendments and let the bill become a law as speedily as possible, so as to prevent the company going on and constructing this road and claiming the lands conterminous with the constructed road. We passed a bill two years ago to forfeit these lands, and that bill went to the Senate and slept the sleep of death. In the mean time the railroad corporation has gone on and completed its road to which the lien has attached. We can not reach it until that lien is satisfied. Every mile of the road became a lien.

Now, we see that it is important to pass this bill at once and stop this company from acquiring a lien upon the lands along the road as it is completed, and thereby save to the people of this country a heritage which may be worth something in the future. Suppose we refuse to concur in the Senate amendment, and this matter goes over to another Congress, and this company complete 100 additional miles of their road, they will get the lands on each side of that 100 miles of road. My friend from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] and colleague from the committee insists upon delay. I insist upon immediate action. Every day's delay jeopardizes so much more of our public lands along the line of this road. I do not wish to take up the time of the House in discussing this matter further, having discussed it quite fully before.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Does the gentleman claim that the act of 1871 was equivalent to an extension of the time fixed in the original grant?

Mr. COBB. About five or six years.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Then by Congress sleeping upon their rights they have deprived the people of twenty sections of land to the mile along the portion of the road that has since been completed.

Mr. COBB. Certainly. That is the effect of it. The company have been working all these years to complete their road, and under the act of 1871, according as the road is completed, the lien attaches to the conterminous lands.

Mr. PAYSON. And let me suggest to the gentleman that the act of 1871 clearly contemplated that the road would be built out of time, because it provided that in case of a breach of any of the conditions in the granting act then the rights of parties claiming under the mortgage shall be restricted to lands conterminous with the constructed road.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Still, the right of the Government to forfeit lands existed up to 1871?

Mr. COBB. Certainly.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. And if Congress had done its duty these lands would have been saved to the people?

Mr. COBB. Certainly; and now we want to do our duty.

Mr. McRAE. I wish the gentleman would tell us what principle of law prevents our declaring the forfeiture of those lands now.

Mr. COBB. You might do it; but what would it amount to? I ask the gentleman what it would amount to practically to declare a forfeiture of those lands with the existing lien of $43,000 a mile on the road? What practical result is there in it? I was in favor of doing that, and this House was in favor of it. We passed a bill for that purpose and it went to the Senate, but they struck out that provision. There is nothing practical in that course now, and I say we ought to let it go and save what we have got.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman is mistaken when he says that the House passed a bill at the last session to forfeit the whole of this grant. You passed a bill at the last session just like this bill with the exception of this amendment.

Mr. COBB. I do not care what the gentleman says about it. I was here and he was not, but I will not controvert his statement.

Mr. HERMANN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana if there is any limitation in the act of 1871 as to the time when the right of the company to take these lands shall cease?

Mr. COBB. No limitation whatever. Let the law remain as it is now, and if the company should go on and complete any portion of their road a hundred years from now under the act of 1871 their right to the conterminous lands would attach upon the completion of that portion.

Mr. MILLS. If we do not pass this bill now, will not the company go on and finish more miles of road and will not the Government lose more land?

Mr. COBB. In all probability that will be the result. That is what the company desire. They want time so that they can go on and finish the road and take the lands, and that is just what we do not desire.

Mr. HERMANN. I will ask the gentleman whether his last remark does not apply also to the Northern Pacific grant—to the 214-mile portion of the line between Wallula and Portland, in Oregon? Why does he not favor forfeiting this independent of the other conditions in his forfeiture bill?

Mr. COBB. No, sir; the law is very different in the two cases. There is no act of 1871 giving the mortgagees of the completed portions of the Northern Pacific road a lien upon the lands. The act of 1871, with reference to the Atlantic and Pacific, does that. That is the difference between the two cases. I will say to the gentleman, as a legal proposition, that there is nothing in the way of our forfeiting the entire grant of the Northern Pacific. The act of 1871 does not apply to the Northern Pacific, nor to any other road that I know of, except the Atlantic and Pacific, the bill for the forfeiture of which is now under consideration. There is no such provision of law with reference to any of the others. We will discuss the case of the Northern Pacific from a legal standpoint when it comes up. I can show by the decisions, if gentlemen desire to go that far, that we have the power to forfeit every acre of the grant of the Northern Pacific company, but our bill does not provide for that; it provides only for forfeiture of the grant west of Bismarck.

Mr. HERMANN. I would say to the gentleman that there is a delay at the other end of the Capitol. In relation to the forfeiture of the land on that 214-mile portion of the road there can be no delay, as the same questions do not arise. It is within our power to afford immediate relief as to this portion. Let us have it.

Mr. COBB. It does not make one particle of difference. The gentleman is on the wrong trail. He is in favor of the Northern Pacific grant, I suppose. I will tell him what the law is. Unless there is some affirmative action of the Government to the contrary, it may delay forfeiture for years and may forfeit the Northern Pacific grant forty years hence.

Mr. HERMANN. Even assuming that, I say to the gentleman that I am not in favor of the interest to the extent which he suggests, but I am in favor of obtaining early relief for the settlers on the 214 miles of road, and who seem to be indefinitely postponed as to their rights by reason of the action of the majority of the committee insisting on a forfeiture of the grant westward of Bismarck, which is antagonized at the other end of the Capitol. There is no hope for these settlers unless they are separated from the bill and this portion of the unearned grant considered on its merits.

Mr. COBB. Oh, we shall take care of the settlers. The gentleman need not give himself any trouble on that question. We try to take care of the Government and the people first, and then of the settlers. The gentleman need not hinge his opposition on that. We will protect the settlers to the extent that they ought to be protected.

Mr. Speaker, I do not care to discuss the bill further, and I now move the previous question.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I reserved the portion of my time that I did not use.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] secured the floor in his own right, and has called the previous question.

Mr. McRAE. If I am to be treated in this way, I ask the House to vote down the call for the previous question and allow me to be heard in reply to what these gentlemen have stated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will see that if any other rule prevailed than that which the Chair is now enforcing debate could be prolonged indefinitely by gentlemen obtaining the floor, speaking for a few minutes, and then reserving the remainder of their time.

Mr. McRAE. I call the attention of the House to the fact that gentlemen who are supporting the proposition to concur in these amendments of the Senate refuse to allow full debate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. McRAE. I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the report which these gentlemen themselves made upon the question of title to land in Indian Territory.

Mr. COBB. I object; it has already been published twice.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. McRAE. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed ten minutes further time for discussion of this question.

Mr. COBB. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. McRAE. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Are separate votes demanded on these amendments?

Mr. McRAE. I do not care anything about separate votes; but I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. If no separate vote be demanded, the question will be on concurring in the amendments of the Senate, on which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. McRAE (while the Speaker was counting the vote in favor of ordering the yeas and nays) said: I wish we had some way to put on record the names of these gentleman who stand up. They seem to be the only men who stand with the people against the railroad companies.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. Only twelve members—not a sufficient number—have voted in favor of ordering the yeas and nays; and they are refused.

The amendments of the Senate were then concurred in.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BARBOUR. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions for printing and reference without debate, on which call joint and concurrent resolutions and memorials of State and Territorial Legistures may be presented and appropriately referred, and resolutions of inquiry directed to the heads of the Executive Departments are also in order for reference to appropriate committees.

EDWIN M. STANTON.

Mr. WHEELER introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Whereas on Tuesday, June 8, Hon. WILLIAM D. KELLEY introduced a resolution directing the Public Printer to omit from the permanent RECORD a certain speech delivered by Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama; and

Whereas the resolution was so framed or constructed as to render it exceedingly improbable that the House would feel justified in taking affirmative action thereon; and

Whereas, unless further action be promptly taken, the speech will be printed in full in the permanent RECORD; and

Whereas it has been alleged upon this floor that said speech contains unjust reflections upon, and otherwise does injustice to, Hon. Edwin M. Stanton: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a special committee of three members of this House be appointed, the mover of this resolution not to be a member of such committee, and that such committee when so appointed shall have authority, and they are hereby instructed, without delay, to direct the Public Printer to omit from the permanent RECORD any and all allegations or expressions of Mr. WHEELER in said speech which unjustly reflect upon or otherwise do injustice to Hon. Edwin M. Stanton; and as it has been further alleged that said speech reflects upon Mr. Lincoln, if the committee find in said speech any expressions or references to Mr. Lincoln which are other than commendatory and eulogistic, they will direct the Public Printer to omit all such expressions or references from the permanent RECORD. And the committee will report to the House what portions of said speech they have directed to be omitted from the permanent RECORD.

RICHARD D. LAMB AND IRA M. LAMB.

Mr. DUNN (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 9385) for the relief of Richard D. Lamb and Ira M. Lamb; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF INVENTORS.

Mr. MORROW (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 9386) to encourage inventors; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL EMIGRATION STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois (by request), introduced a bill (H. R. 9387) to incorporate the United States and Congo National Emigration Steamship Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

HIRAM SOMERVILLE.

Mr. TOWNSHEND introduced a bill (H. R. 9388) for the relief of Hiram Somerville; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SALLY POWELL.

Mr. TOWNSHEND also introduced a bill (H. R. 9389) granting a pension to Sally Powell, widow of James W. Powell, late of Company G, Seventh Regiment Illinois Cavalry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ESTHER M. ARMSTRONG.

Mr. NEECE introduced a bill (H. R. 9390) granting a pension to Esther M. Armstrong; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN F. THOMAS.

Mr. NEECE also introduced a bill (H. R. 9391) granting a pension to John F. Thomas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO RULE XXI.

Mr. SPRINGER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Rule XXI, clause 3, be amended by adding thereto the following:

"Provided, That it shall be in order in such bills to reduce the number and compensation of the officers and employés drawing pay from the United States."

WILLIAM SIMMONS.

Mr. OWEN introduced a bill (H. R. 9392) granting a pension to William Simmons; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

FORT BROWN, TEXAS.

Mr. HOLMAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Whereas it appears by an act passed March, 1885, the sum of $160,000 was appropriated to enable the Secretary of War to acquire a good and valid title for the United States to the Fort Brown reservation, Texas, and to pay and extinguish all claims for the use and occupation of said reservation; provided that no part of this sum should be paid until a complete title be vested in the United States.

Whereas it is alleged that disputes have arisen between the claimants as to their respective shares of this appropriation, and that the Secretary of War has not paid any part of said amount;

Whereas by an act of Congress passed in 1875 the sum of $25,000 was appropriated for the purchase of the grounds and payment of the said Fort Brown, and the report of General Sherman as to the sufficiency of the said sum; it is alleged that the payment of $160,000 therefor would be a fraud on the Government;

Whereas it is alleged that it will appear from the documentary evidence in the War Department, the Quartermaster-General's Office, also the evidence of officials now in Washington who have served at said post, likewise the testimony of other citizens which can be obtained, that the sum of $50,000 would be a large price to pay for said reservation, including rent for the use and occupation of the same: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to investigate the subject-matter herein named, with authority to send for persons and papers; also to inquire into and report as to what necessity exists, if any, for a military post at said point and the cost to the United States of said post since 1865.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to withhold the payment of any part of said sum of $160,000 for the grounds and rents of the said Fort Brown reservation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have submitted this resolution by request, and I am not personally cognizant of the facts stated.

AMENDMENT TO RULE XXI.

Mr. HOLMAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

HANSON VS. UNITED STATES.

Mr. CONGER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Whereas in open court, on the 14th day of April, A. D. 1885, the honorable judge of the United States for the northern district of the State of Florida, in the cause entitled "John M. Hanson vs. The United States, decree for survey," did decree and order the surveyor-general for the State of Florida "to forthwith survey, make, and file in this cause a plat and map of such survey;" and

Whereas it appears that the surveyor-general aforesaid, not having money in his hands to execute the said order, referred it to the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office. The honorable Commissioner, in a communication under date of July 14, 1885, to the surveyor-general, decides "that the survey of the grant would have to be deferred until Congress made appropriation for the same."

Resolved, That the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office be requested at earliest day possible to furnish this House copies of the order of the honorable judge of the court aforesaid of April 14, 1885, and a copy of his instructions to the surveyor-general aforesaid of July 14, 1885, and an estimate of the amount of money required to survey said grant in accordance with the decree of the court, and such other information as may be necessary to the fulfillment of said order of the court aforesaid.

Amend section 4, Rule XXIII, by adding after the word "harbors," in line 4, the following words:

"And bills for the reorganization of, or retrenchment of expenditure in, any branch of the legislative, executive, or judicial departments of the Government."

ANNIVERSARY OF FOUNDATION OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. HEWITT submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Whereas the centennial anniversary of the organization of the Constitutional Government of the United States, of the first meeting of Congress, and of the inauguration of George Washington as President of the United States in the city of New York, will occur on the 30th day of April, A. D. 1889; and

Whereas it is appropriate that the anniversary of these great events should be properly celebrated; and

Whereas the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York have already taken action looking to such celebration in the city where the Federal Government was established: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a joint special committee, consisting of three Senators, to be named by the presiding officer of the Senate, and of five Representatives, to be named by the Speaker of the House, be constituted, whose duty it shall be to consider in what manner the centennial anniversary of the foundation of the Government shall be celebrated, so as to preserve and transmit to succeeding generations the memory of the wisdom and patriotism of the fathers of the Republic in framing the Constitution, which has secured to their descendants the blessings of liberty, and under which the perpetuity of the Federal Government has been firmly established, through the indissoluble union of sovereign States, capable of indefinite expansion without impairing the right to local self-government, for which other peoples had struggled in vain.

PAY OF UNITED STATES TREASURER, ETC.

Mr. HEWITT also introduced a bill (H. R. 9429) to fix the pay of the Treasurer of the United States, the assistant treasurers, and the clerks and messengers in the offices of the Treasurer and the assistant treasurers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

COMMERCIAL AGENTS.

Mr. JAMES submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules.

Whereas the following is among the statutes of the District of Columbia:

"SEC. 21. Every person whose business it is to offer for sale goods, wares, or merchandise by sample, catalogue, or otherwise shall be regarded as a commercial agent (known as commercial traveler), and shall pay annually $200; commission merchants shall pay annually $40. Every person except commercial agents, whose business it is as agent for others to negotiate sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be regarded as a commission merchant, or to make sales for or to aid any commercial agent or dealer by sample who has not taken out a license: Provided, however, That license as a commission merchant shall not be construed to grant the right to buy and sell goods outside the office or store of said commission merchant."

Whereas although this statute is somewhat unintelligible and ambiguous, yet it is deemed to be authority for exacting a license fee of $200 annually from commercial travelers; and

Whereas the income to the District from the seven thousand commercial travelers who visited it for business purposes last year should have aggregated a large sum, possibly reaching nearly a half million dollars; besides, if properly interpreted, the law would exact the same license fee from salesmen of firms doing business in the District who "offer for sale goods, wares, or merchandise by sample, catalogue, or otherwise;" and

Whereas the records of the assessor's office show that only thirty-eight licenses were taken out during the year, and that those who took them were brokers, who have a system whereby they sublet the said licenses to the said commercial travelers or otherwise arrange with them, whereby the law is evaded, to the great pecuniary advantage of the said brokers and to the injury of the District; and

Whereas the system is fraught with evil, and, withal, is extremely demoralizing in many ways, and sometimes leads to collusion between officials and the said commercial travelers: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a special committee of three members of this House to investigate the facts, with power to send for persons and papers, and to make report thereon, with such recommendations as they may deem wise; and that such expenditures as there may be in carrying out this investigation, not exceeding $1,000, be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

ALLEGED VIOLATION OF IMMIGRATION LAWS.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Wheres it is alleged that on April 24, 1886, the steamer Warwick, of the Bristol line, of England, arrived at the port of New York, bringing as passengers eight boys from twelve to fifteen years of age, all of whom were inmates of a reform institution in Bristol, England, for a period of four or more years, committed under the laws of Great Britain, and were by order of the magistrate of Bristol taken from said reform institution and placed on board the steamer Warwick and transported to America, with instructions to Charles E. Bruce, of the Children's Aid Society of the city of New York, to find them homes in the United States; and

Whereas it is alleged that the board of commissioners of emigration of the State of New York by a unanimous vote prohibited the landing of any of said boys as in violation of the act of Congress approved August 3, 1882; and

Whereas it is alleged that the action of said board was, on application for a writ of habeas corpus made by the agent of the steamer Warwick, duly confirmed by the decision of Judge Addison Brown, of the United States court, dismissing the writ and remanding the eight boys to the custody of the commissioners of emigration for return to Great Britain; and

Whereas it is alleged that the said board of commissioners of emigration subsequently reversed their former decision and permitted the said eight boys to land, notwithstanding the decision of the said Judge Addison Brown and the act of Congress forbidding the landing of such persons in the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be, and they are hereby, directed to immediately investigate these allegations, and in doing so they are hereby authorized to send for persons and papers and report the facts elicited by such inquiry to the House.

Mr. COLLINS introduced a bill (H. R. 9468) in relation to evidence to quiet titles; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ARREARS OF TAXES.

Mr. MATSON (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 9469) relating to arrears of taxes in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS ANDERSON.

Mr. RYAN introduced a bill (H. R. 9470) to grant a pension to Thomas Anderson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. COBB introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas Congress has on several occasions directed the executive branches of the Government to take steps looking to the protection of the United States in connection with the various railroad companies to which grants in bonds and lands have been made, and this House is without information respecting proceedings ordered in two specific cases: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be requested to inform the House what action was taken under the joint resolution of April 10, 1869, entitled "Joint resolution for the protection of the interests of the United States in the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes;" also, what action was taken under section 4 of the act approved March 3, 1873, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1872, and for other purposes," and with what results.

SPECIAL PENSIONS.

Mr. BLANCHARD submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public service, to inform the House how many persons are now drawing pensions from the Government of the United States by reason of special pension acts having been passed in their behalf; and what amount of money is required annually to meet the obligations incurred by the Government to this class of pensions.

SALARIES OF CLERKS.

Mr. SPRINGER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules, and ordered to be printed:

Whereas great inequalities are alleged and believed to exist in respect to the salaries of the officers, clerks, and employés of the House of Representatives, especially as compared with the salaries of the officers, clerks, and employés of the Senate; and

Whereas if these inequalities exist as alleged gross injustice is done said officers, clerks, and employés, as well as the Government; and

Whereas it has been held that these injustices can not be corrected by amending the law in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; and

Whereas the public interests will be promoted by a careful inquiry as to the duties, labors, and responsibilities of the several officers, clerks, and employés of the House, whether or not a reduction may be made in the number and compensation of the clerks and employés, and also whether an increase in number or compensation is required in any branch of the service of the House, with the view of the better organization of such service: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That a select committee of five members of the House be appointed, with leave to sit during the coming recess at the Capitol, with authority to inquire fully as to the number of clerks and employés required for the proper dispatch of the business of the House, and the nature and extent of their duties and work and what compensation should be paid therefor; what useless offices if any can be abolished, and what consolidations if any can be properly made with a view of securing greater economy and efficiency in such service, with leave to said committee to report for consideration by bill or otherwise on or before the 20th of December next. And the Clerk of the House is hereby directed to detail on the request of said committee any clerk in his employ, who shall act as clerk of said committee.

HOWARD T. BUNCH.

Mr. JOHN M. TAYLOR introduced a bill (H. R. 9471) for the relief of Howard T. Bunch; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ANDREW J. KIRBY.

Mr. WHEELER introduced a bill (H. R. 9472) for the relief of Andrew J. Kirby; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSE, SAN LUIS OBISPO.

Mr. MORRISON. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the business coming from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLARDY. I ask the gentleman to permit me to submit a report from the Committee on Commerce which will take but a few minutes.

Mr. BARBOUR. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. CLARDY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report back, with the amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 5862) providing for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal at San Luis Obispo, Cal., with the recommendation that the amendments be nonconcurred in and the House agree to the request of the Senate for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. RANDALL. The amendments had better be read so we may know what they are.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. Enough has been read to see that the object of the Senate is to bunch everything together to make a sort of omnibus bill of the one sent to them.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is this a privileged question, so that it can be called up here to take precedence of other business?

The SPEAKER. It is not strictly of a privileged character, although the Senate ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and it has been usual to agree to such requests as a mere matter of courtesy.

Mr. McMILLIN. This seems to be a sort of omnibus proceeding.

Mr. CLARDY. I have been directed by the Committee on Commerce to move non-concurrence in the Senate amendments and that the request of the Senate for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses be agreed to.

The Senate amendments were non-concurred in, and the request of the Senate for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses was agreed to.

The Speaker appointed as managers of said conference on the part of the House Mr. CLARDY, Mr. IRION, and Mr. DAVIS.

YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN HOME.

Mr. BARBOUR. I now ask to call up the business of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. What bill does the gentleman call up?

Mr. BARBOUR. The last District day when the House adjourned it had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7083) to incorporate the trustees of the Young Women's Christian Home in Washington. The yeas and nays were taken on the passage of the bill on demand of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT]. I ask the gentleman whether he insists on pressing that motion at this time?

Mr. BENNETT. In answer to the gentleman from Virginia I have to say that I do not insist on the call of a quorum, but I do desire to be heard for a few minutes in respect to the merits of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays were ordered on the passage of the bill and they were taken, but no quorum appeared. If the yeas and nays are dispensed with it must be by unanimous consent.

Mr. BARBOUR. I ask by unanimous consent the order for the yeas and nays be set aside.

Mr. CANNON. I think the vote had better be taken.

Mr. BARBOUR. I ask the gentleman to postpone that demand until the merits of the bill can be considered.

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made by several gentlemen.

Mr. CANNON. I withdraw my demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Does any other gentleman demand the taking of the vote by yeas and nays.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; I renew it.

Mr. BENNETT. If this bill in its present state is debatable I should like to be heard upon it.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has not been ordered. The bill has been ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and the question is on its passage, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. COBB. I have some amendments which I wish to offer to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill has just been taken up. It is the same bill which was before the House four weeks ago.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I believe in the equality of all persons before the law, and in the just incidence of taxation upon the property of all persons alike. The objection I have to this bill is to that part of it embodied in the proviso which reads:

Provided, That the property, whether real or personal, owned by the said corporation, and used exclusively for the charitable purposes of the said organization, shall be exempt from taxation.

By the census of 1880 the property of the United States for all purposes of taxation was assessed at about $17,000,000,000. The total tribute laid upon the people of this country annually by way of taxation by the Government of the United States, exclusive of State, county, and municipal taxation, reached the enormous total of $350,000,000.

This makes the taxation paid to the General Government upon the entire taxable property of the Union $1.45 on the hundred dollars of valuation. In this estimate we do not include the taxes taken from the people by the States, counties, cities, towns, and other municipalities for State or local purposes. The message sent to Congress on the 7th day of December, 1875, by President Grant—who has made himself more acceptable to the people of this Government by the heroic manner in which for six months he looked steadily into the face of death upon the summit of Mount McGregor, having eyes himself to see death and the terrors of hereafter—contains this recommendation:

As we are now about to enter upon our second centennial—commencing our manhood as a nation—it is well to look back upon the past and study what will be best to preserve and advance our future greatness. From the fall of Adam for his transgression to the present day no nation has ever been free from threatened danger to its prosperity and happiness. We should look to the dangers threatening us, and remedy them so far as lies in our power. We are a republic, whereof one man is as good as another before the law.

In connection with this important question I would also call your attention to the importance of correcting an evil that, if permitted to continue, will probably lead to great trouble in our land before the close of the nineteenth century: it is the accumulation of vast amounts of untaxed church property.

In 1850 I believe the church property of the United States which paid no tax, municipal or State, amounted to about $83,000,000. In 1860 the amount had doubled; in 1875 it is about $1,000,000,000. By 1900, without check, it is safe to say this property will reach a sum exceeding $3,000,000,000. So vast a sum, receiving all the protection and benefits of government without bearing its proportion of the burdens and expenses of the same, will not be looked upon acquiescently by those who have to pay the taxes. In a growing country, where real estate enhances so rapidly with time as in the United States, there is scarcely a limit to the wealth that may be acquired by corporations, religious or otherwise, if allowed to retain real estate without taxation. The contemplation of so vast a property as here alluded to without taxation may lead to sequestration without constitutional authority and through blood.

I would not commit myself to the advanced position of the message, or as favorable to the course recommended at that time by the President, but there is much food for reflection in his recommendations in this regard.

By the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia, page 17, section 147, the following property is exempted from taxation:

All churches, school-houses, and all buildings, grounds, and property pertinent thereto and used in connection therewith in this District, and any cemetery therein held and owned by any religious society having a regularly known place of worship, or by any incorporated association, shall be exempt from any and all taxes and assessments, national or municipal.

Such is the act, Mr. Speaker, of the 17th of June, 1870. I speak subject to correction, of course, but I am informed that the Young Men's Christian Association of this District is compelled under the law to pay taxes upon the greater part, if not all, of its property.

By the act of 1878, page 342, of Richardson's Digest, it is provided:

That Congress shall appropriate 50 per cent. of the estimates approved by the Secretary of the Treasury for the expenses of this District, the remainder to be collected by taxes out of the property of the citizens of the District.

And the section which I read says:

That such 50 per cent. shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property of the said District other than the property of the United States and of the District of Columbia.

I have made an extended and somewhat careful search of the current of legislation in respect to this and kindred matters, and if there is any consistent policy to be gathered from such legislation it is that exemption from taxation should not be extended beyond churches, cemeteries, property of the General Government, property of the District of Colnmbia, and the public schools. The provision of the bill to which I object exempts the property of the association contemplated in the bill to the assessed valuation of $200,000. It is hardly worth while for me to say in the presence of this experienced body that it is equivalent to exempting property fairly worth in the market $500,000.

We have a great public debt which is exempted in the wisdom of Congress from taxation. There is a public debt in this District which enjoys a like immunity from taxation; there are public securities all over the States, from one end of the Union to the other, from sunrise around to sunrise, which enjoy the same immunity from taxation. When you exempt the property of A from a given tax imposed for the Government in its discretion as for the common defense and general welfare of the people, you increase the difficulty which B, or any other citizens of equal wealth and claim to consideration has in making his way and his living. The peculiar character of this institution, no doubt, will be brought out and a delicate nerve of sympathy will be touched in behalf of it, not upon the cold logic and facts and merits of the case, but by an appeal to the humanities, because of these unfortunate people contemplated to be benefited

The ostensible object is to incorporate the trustees of the Young Woman's Christian Home, and declares:

That the object, purposes, and powers of said corporation shall be, and the same are hereby, limited to providing temporary home for young women coming to and being in the District of Columbia who shall, from any cause, be in want of and willing to accept temporary home, care, and assistance in the said District.

Of course, upon the cold facts of the case, the judgment of the business men who sit here could not be swayed to the support of this measure. It seems a little ungracious, Mr. Speaker, to oppose it, but it establishes a principle which will add to the burdens of the "plundered plowmen and beggared yeomanry" of this country. That principle is wrong, vicious. It is as revolting as the spectacle of a humble man unjustly deprived of his rights and hurt in his good name and repute. And I mean against this and every other bill of like character to raise the standard of revolt, and let the House, standing as it does now at the parting of the ways upon the subject, act with full information on the subject.

If I have any time left I reserve it.

Mr. GAY. This is simply a question of granting an act of incorporation to certain benevolent individuals who want to establish in the District of Columbia a young woman's Christian reformatory home. This principle has commended itself to the careful consideration of the Committee on the District of Columbia, who have unanimously reported in favor of this bill.

These parties ask that property to the extent of $200,000 shall be exempted from taxation; but the committee have restricted it to the actual amount in the use of the association for the purposes named. If benevolent persons contribute only $50,000 for buildings for this purpose, that will be the extent of the property exempted from taxation. It is more likely to stop at that figure than go beyond the amount named. The amount of $200,000 is entirely dependent on their obtaining and using continuously property of that value for this purpose. I think it is a measure so plain, and commending itself to this House so forcibly, that unless some other gentleman desires to make remarks I will call for the previous question.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Before the previous question is called I desire to say a word or two.

The proviso to which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT] objects is as follows:

Provided, That the property, whether real or personal, owned by the said corporation, and used exclusively for the charitable purposes of the said organization, shall be exempt from taxation.

That proviso was inserted by the committee so as to prevent any other property than that which is in actual occupation and use by this corporation from being exempted from taxation. But the gentleman from North Carolina makes a point against the exemption to the amount of $200,000. That is the extreme limit of the amount of property which they have the right to own in this District. This is a question which affects not the whole of the United States, but solely the District of Columbia; because, under the law which the gentleman from North Carolina has read, the people of the United States are responsible for one-half of the taxes of this District, and the people of the District are responsible for the other half; and it is immaterial to the people of the United States at large whether the taxes which the District pays are raised off the whole of the property of the District of Columbia or not.

I say that these gentlemen and these ladies, so far as I know them, who have petitioned Congress for the privilege of establishing this charitable work are responsible people in this community; and there has been no objection made to this bill by any person living in this District; and the people of the District are the only persons who can be in the slightest degree affected by the release of taxation on this property. I will say also that this is in accordance with the universal rule which has prevailed in this country, that where people are charitably disposed, and have the inclination as well as the purse to go into a charitable work of this kind, the Government will lend them the aid of its power to the extent of releasing them from taxation. And as no person among those who might be expected to object, if there was any ground for it, has done so, since those who are affected by this are willing and anxious that this privilege should be granted, I hope the House will adopt the unanimous report of the committee. I therefore call for the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the roll be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the order heretofore made for calling the yeas and nays on the passage of this bill be reconsidered.

Mr. HOPKINS. I object.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered. As I understand, the motion to reconsider can be made at any time within two days after the motion which it is proposed to reconsider has been agreed to, and we have not had two days for the Committee on the District of Columbia since this order was made.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest that the yeas and nays were ordered on this bill not because they were desired but in order to obtain a quorum. The House was so thin that a quorum could not be obtained without the yeas and nays being called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the motion to reconsider is too late. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 203, nays 7, not voting 113; as follows:

Mr. BAYNE and Mr. DOUGHERTY were announced as paired on this vote.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I see that I am still paired with Mr. HALL on political questions, but not regarding this as a political question, I have voted.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BARBOUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POOL SELLING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, the next bill that I desire to call up is the bill (H. R. 5044) to prohibit pool-selling in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds upon examination of the Journal that this bill has been ordered already to be engrossed and read a third time, and the question is upon its passage.

Mr. BARBOUR. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. That can be done only by reconsidering, by unanimous consent, the vote ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BARBOUR. The amendment which I desire to offer is proposed by the commissioners of the District.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which this bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time in order that he may offer an amendment.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I would like to hear the amendment read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment which the gentleman from Virginia proposes to offer if his request for unanimous consent is granted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"Provided, however, That the commissioners may issue permits to the National Jockey Club of said District for pool-selling or making books at its grounds not exceeding twice in each year nor exceeding one week at a time."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to reconsider the vote ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time so that this amendment may be voted upon.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I object.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, there were—ayes 74, noes 23.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will order tellers.

Mr. HEPBURN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 44 voting in favor thereof.

Mr. BARBOUR. Is it in order for me now to make a few remarks?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is. The previous question has not been ordered on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to put myself right in regard to this bill. If the amendment which I desired to submit proposing an exemption for the benefit of the Jockey Club of this District had been adopted I should have voted for the bill. I do not wish to be understood as favoring in any degree any measure which looks to the encouragement of gaming. I regard the Jockey Club as an institution gotten up for the encouragement of the proper breeding and training of that noble animal the horse; and I think some consideration ought to be given to an association of this kind in which so many people are interested. Horse-racing I regard as something not only of national importance for improving the breed of horses, but something which the people enjoy.

Mr. REAGAN. I suggest that the gentleman move to reconsider the vote on the amendment. I think the House voted it down without understanding what it was.

Mr. BARBOUR. I believe that in passing too severe a bill of this kind we would be breaking in upon the proper enjoyment of the people.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I wish to ask this question: Does this bill prohibit horse-racing or only betting upon horse-races?

Mr. BARBOUR. As I understand, it prohibits pool-selling at races; but, as everybody knows, you can not keep up this popular amusement unless some little privilege be accorded. [Laughter.] For that reason I think that by too severe restrictions in this respect we would infringe upon popular rights. Nobody will want to go to a horse-race if he can not have a little interest in the way of speculating on the result of the race. [Laughter.]

Mr. REAGAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia was rejected. I voted against the amendment.

The SPEAKER. There was no vote on the amendment. The bill had been ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. The gentleman from Virginia asked unanimous consent to reconsider that vote in order that he might offer the amendment, but there was objection, and therefore the amendment could not be entertained. The gentleman from Virginia is entitled to the floor to continue his remarks.

Mr. BARBOUR. I have said all that I care to say on this subject.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, it is fair to say that when this bill was before the Committee on the District of Columbia it was referred to the District commissioners for the purpose of obtaining their opinion upon it; and they unanimously approved the bill, except that they desired there should be a provision in it which would exempt from its operation at certain times the Jockey Club of this District——

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] has the floor, and can not be taken from it except by a point of order.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Then I make this point of order: that the previous question is pending on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken. The previous question has not been demanded or ordered.

Mr. BARBOUR. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order now to move to recommit the bill?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] yield for that purpose?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, sir; I can not yield for that motion. As I have said, the District commissioners approved this bill unanimously, except that they suggested the insertion of a proviso which would exempt the Jockey Club of this District from its operation at the time of their races—twice a year for one week at a time. It seemed to the District Committee (and my recollection is we were unanimous on that point), that if a bill of this kind was to do any good we could not give to one person or persons a privilege which was denied to others.

Mr. BARBOUR. The committee was not unanimous at all.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not say the committee was unanimous in favor of this bill, but I say, according to my recollection the members were unanimous on the point that if there is to be a denial of this privilege to some people the denial should be made general.

Mr. BARBOUR. I think not.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I may be misinformed on that point; but that is my recollection of what took place in the committee a month or two ago.

Mr. BARBOUR. I know that several members of the committee objected to that construction and reserved the right to oppose the bill in the House.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Undoubtedly it is the fact that several gentlemen—and the gentleman from Virginia was one of them—reserved the right to oppose the bill in the House. They were opposed to the whole thing, as I understand.

Mr. BARBOUR. No, sir.

Mr. HEMPHILL. But, so far as my recollection goes, they did not advocate that the Jockey Club should be entitled to any more consideration in this District than anybody else.

The question here is simply this: whether a law which is in operation in a large number, if not all, of the States of this Union shall be put into operation in this District. That is the only question. Everybody knows they have these laws on the statute-books of the various States, and if these people are entitled to as much encouragement in morality as the people in the various States, then they ought to have this law.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Are these laws not all evaded?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The fact that a law upon the statute-book against stealing is evaded is no good reason why a man found guilty of stealing should not be convicted.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Is it not a fact that notwithstanding this law on the various statute-books betting is continually carried on?

Mr. HEMPHILL. It may be that the law is evaded, but that is not the question for the House. The question with us is whether we are going to do our duty by putting it in the power of the commissioners of this District to execute, what every man on this floor will admit to be perfectly legitimate, a law for the prevention of betting on the race-course in the District of Columbia. That is the question for us. If the people here violate the law, if they do that knowing it to be wrong, that is no excuse why we should not pass this bill, which is known to be right. This is supposed to be a Christian Government, with some idea of morality and uprightness, and they should put the stamp of their disapproval upon this thing which is known to be wrong and iniquitous.

So far as I am concerned, personally, I did not object to the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to except this jockey club. I expect to vote against it if the question comes before the House; but I do not deny the House the right to vote its conviction. I am willing the amendment shall be submitted to the consideration of the House, while at the same time I think the bill should pass without it. I did not introduce it. It came to me in the regular course of business, and I reported it to the House. I think it should pass. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BARBOUR. Is that debatable?

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman from Virginia wishes to be heard I will yield to him.

Mr. BARBOUR. As the question has passed from the power of the House to vote on the amendment, I can only give notice I will move to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order at this time.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I must say that I did not yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right at this stage of the bill to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do so for the special purpose of allowing that amendment to come in.

Mr. HEPBURN. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to recommit.

The House divided, and there were ayes 31.

The SPEAKER. Not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. BARBOUR. Count the other side.

The other side was counted, and there were noes 97.

So the yeas and nays were ordered, more than one-fifth having voted in favor thereof.

Mr. BEACH. Did the gentleman move to recommit with instructions?

The SPEAKER. He stated what his purpose was in moving to recommit.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 62, nays 139, not voting 122; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

On motion of Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, by unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. HOUK, for the rest of the day.

Mr. DANIEL with Mr. LIBBEY.

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts.

Mr. PINDAR with Mr. LEHLBACH.

Mr. BYNUM with Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska, on this question. If Mr. BYNUM were present, he would vote for, and Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska, against, the motion.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. The yeas and nays have been ordered upon the passage of the bill, but I suppose it was intended to have a test vote, which has already been taken on the motion to recommit. I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

The demand for the yeas and nays was withdrawn.

The bill was passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON CABLE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BARBOUR. Under instructions from the committee I am directed to call up the bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BEACH. That bill, I understand, is in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It is in the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HEARD. I move that the committee be discharged from its further consideration and that it be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BEACH. Then I object. It ought to be considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEARD. Then I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill the title of which has been read.

Mr. HEARD. I will ask that the bill be read.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Has the Clerk read the original bill, or the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk read the bill H. R. 8976, which is the substitute bill.

Mr. COBB. Is the bill open now for amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The first reading of the bill is for information, after which the general debate will follow. The bill will then be open for debate and amendment under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, unless some gentleman desires the reading of the report, I wish to have read for information some amendments which I shall offer at the proper time.

Mr. HOPKINS. With the indulgence of the gentleman I would like to have the report read, in order to find what reasons are assigned for this franchise.

Mr. HEARD. If the report can be read without taking it out of my time I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be read by unanimous consent unless some gentleman who desires to have it read is recognized and has it taken out of his time. The Chair will cause the report to be read in the time of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HEARD. I have not asked to have it read.

Mr. PARKER. If the Chair will give me recognition I will ask to have it read in my time.

Mr. HEARD. In order to save time I will ask to have the report read in my time.

The report (by Mr. HEARD) is as follows:

The purpose of the bill is the organization of a company to operate an improved system of street-railway by cable, that will furnish to the inhabitants of Washington rapid and cheap transportation to and from all parts of the city.

The present facilities afforded by the horse railroads are entirely inadequate for the needs of the present population, and in some way the growing requirements of the present and future must be provided for, and this bill, made up in part of two separate propositions included in two bills previously considered by this committee, with such changes, modifications, and restrictions as have seemed to the committee best calculated to perfect the measure as a work of legislation, is presented, after the most careful consideration, as embodying its views as to what will meet in practical operation the public needs.

The provisions of the bill guarantee the best known method of passenger transit through city streets, insuring speed, safety, cleanliness, and a uniformly cheap service.

The cable method of traction is not recommended by the committee as an experiment, but as the one shown by the experience of other cities of this country to be the best known.

The cable system, as contemplated under the provisions of this bill, will rid the streets of the present unsightly, annoying, and frequently dangerous horse-car rail, leaving the surface of the street from curb to curb smooth and even, thus giving to the owners of vehicles of every kind a safe and comfortable roadway. The danger and annoyance that attends the use of streets where the rail is necessarily in use where horse railroads are run is well known, and the fact that the cable system does away with such inconvenience altogether commends it for use in this city.

From a sanitary point of view the cable system has much to commend it, ridding, as it does, the city of stables, the streets of filth, and the air of noxious smells.

The committee, while mindful of the great desirability of the improved method of passenger transit contemplated by this bill, has carefully considered the rights of existing corporations, and so far as it is consistent with the public interest amended and modified the routes over which the proposed cable system will pass, so as to infringe as little as possible on the lines already in use by present roads and only touching them where public exigency rendered it imperative.

Restrictive clauses have been added by the committee that are intended to secure compliance, on the part of the incorporators, with all reasonable requirements of the public. A uniform fare of 5 cents to and from any points on the various lines is provided for. It is the testimony of disinterested citizens generally that the operation of such a system of cable roads will meet a great public want, and at the same time bring into existence as a contributory element a large amount of property now valueless for purposes of taxation.

The financial ability and good faith of the incorporators named in this bill is assured, and the speedy completion of the work provided for under the guidance and control of the proper local authorities.

Mr. HEARD. There are certain amendments to which I have already alluded which I will offer to make the bill conform to the present views of the incorporators and accord with the map before the House, which amendments I gave notice that I would offer at the proper time.

Since this bill was reported, Mr. Chairman, the promoters of the enterprise have, in order to avoid some opposition where the streets were narrow, proposed to change the route as mentioned in said amendments, so as to provide for a single track at such places instead of the double track. The amendments to which I refer go to that point, and I will offer them when that part of the bill is reached in consideration.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask that he present the amendments now and have them read for information, as there are other gentlemen who have amendments which his amendments may obviate the necessity of offering.

Mr. HEARD. The amendments which I shall offer are for the purpose to which I have just referred, simply allowing a change of route for the purpose stated.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is that the only amendment you propose to make?

Mr. HEARD. That is all I propose to offer.

Mr. HOPKINS. Are there any amendments that the committee propose to offer?

Mr. HEARD. The committee have no amendments to offer. I wish to state that I offer the amendments in the interest of the projectors of this enterprise and independently as a member, not from the committee.

I do not propose to detain the committee at any great length, indeed only so long as I may deem necessary to present to the understanding of the committee the reasons which actuated the Committee on the District of Columbia in commending to the favorable consideration of this body the bill now pending before us.

We believe, Mr. Chairman, that the improved facilities for street travel in this city offered by this bill are needed. We believe further, with the best light before us, that the character of improvement offered is the best known. Believing, then, that increased facilities for travel in the city are needed and that the cable system is the best adapted to provide those improvements, we commend that system to the House.

The question as to whether or not these improvements are needed is a question which every member of this committee will answer for himself—not from any suggestions made by the Committee on the District of Columbia, but from his own knowledge of the existing condition of things in this city, and according to his conception of the needs of the case.

It is stated by those who oppose the bill that the property-holders along the line of the projected road are opposed to it. Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that we have before our committee petitions in favor of this project which purport to be signed by property-owners and people along the line of this road, some seventeen thousand or eighteen thousand in number.

As to whether or not the people of this city need this improvement and whether or not it is the duty of Congress to give it, that is a matter which, as I have said, will present itself to the understanding of each member here, because there is no member of this body who has not been long enough in the city to apprehend with a measurable degree of certainty what is needed in this regard. For myself and for my committee I unhesitatingly take position in the affirmative of both propositions.

Now, as to the other branch of the question, is the cable system for street-railway travel the best system known to-day? I might safely leave that question, Mr. Chairman, if it were possible to get the evidence before this body, to the testimony which would be furnished by the citizens of those cities where they now enjoy those advantages. And as approximating as nearly as we could to obtaining the sentiments of the people best qualified to judge, I have before me either telegrams or letters from the mayors of all the different cities in this country having the cable system in use, except alone the city of New York. That was omitted for the reason that I expected that General VIELE, a member on this floor and a civil engineer of distinction, would be here to-day. He was one of a special committee appointed by the municipality of New York to investigate that system. I have a portion of his report before me, which I will read. I expected him to be here and bear testimony for himself.

I will read now a telegram received from the mayor of Chicago:

To J. T. Heard, Washington, D. C.—

These communications were addressed to me as the chairman of the subcommitte having the matter in charge:

CHICAGO, ILL., May 11, 1886.

J. T. HEARD, Washington, D. C.:

We consider the cable for street-cars a success. It is costly, but satisfactory to the people. There is a new system of cable, claimed to be far less expensive than the one in use.

CARTER H. HARRISON, Mayor.

I will next call the attention of the House to a telegram from the mayor of San Francisco, addressed to Hon. C. N. FELTON, a member on this floor:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 11, 1886.

Hon. C. N. FELTON, House of Representatives:

Cable railways are infinitely superior to horse-car lines for comfort, convenience, cleanliness, and popularity. This is the universal opinion of the people of this city.

WASHINGTON BARTLETT, Mayor.

I shall next call attention to a letter received from Hon. William B. Smith, mayor of Philadelphia, which covers this point and some others. It is objected by the opponents of this measure that this system will interfere with the operation of horse-car lines. In that connection also I ask attention to the letter of Mr. Smith:

MAYOR'S OFFCE, CITY OF PHILADELPHIA, April 7, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: I am familiar with the tracks of the Philadelphia Traction Company in this city, and have ridden over them many times. The operation of cable lines does not interrupt or interfere with horse-car lines crossing or even running on the same tracks. I have no hesitation in saying that I consider the conveyance of passengers by means of cars propelled by cable power as being far superior to that by horse power. I base my opinion upon personal observation and experience.

I address this communication to you at the request of my friend and neighbor Col. Z. P. Boyer, whom I can commend to you as a gentleman of the strictest integrity, and one who has a wide and successful business experience.

Yours, very respectfully,

WILLIAM B. SMITH, Mayor.

Hon. JOHN T. HEARD,
Chairman Subcommittee District of Columbia,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

I may state in that connection that Colonel Boyer is the owner of the patent on which this system of road is proposed to be built. I next call the attention of the committee to a letter received from Hon. David R. Francis, mayor of Saint Louis:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, MAYOR'S OFFICE,
Saint Louis, May 8, 1886.

DEAR SIR: The cable road of this city, which is being operated under the Boyer patents, is, I understand, giving the best of satisfaction to all concerned, and is considered a great improvement upon the horse-car method of transportation. Great doubt was expressed before the starting of the road as to the efficiency of this cable, but its success up to this time has been as gratifying to its friends and the public as its has been disappointing to those who looked for its failure.

Respectfully,

D. R. FRANCIS.

JOHN T. HEARD, M. C., Washington, D. C.

I now ask the consideration of the committee to a letter received by me from Hon. Henry C. Kumpf, mayor of Kansas City:

KANSAS CITY, MO., June 7, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 3d instant is received. In answer I have to say that the cable car is decidedly the conveyance of the future, enabling the poor man to live in the suburbs of a city and enjoying pure air. The cable road in this city runs from the Union depot to the eastern limits, and is liberally patronized from early morning till midnight. A ride in a cable car is a luxury, and the horse and mule cars are completely "played out." Five more lines are contemplated this summer, and work on two of them has already commenced.

I can say most emphatically that by encouraging and voting for cable lines where the streets are wide enough you are sure of the thanks of the people.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY C. KUMPF, Mayor.

Hon. JOHN T. HEARD,
Member of Congress, Sixth District of Missouri,
Washington, D. C.

This, Mr. Chairman, is the testimony of the mayors of the principal cities of this Union in which the cable system for street-cars is in actual operation.

Mr. REED, of Maine. May I interrupt the gentleman with a question?

Mr. HEARD. Certainly.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The testimony is that where the streets are wide enough the cable road has been very satisfactory?

Mr. HEARD. Yes.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Do all these streets through which these cars are to run comply with that condition?

Mr. HEARD. I think they do. The amendments which I gave notice that I would offer are designed to change the provisions in regard to some of the streets which were considered too narrow for a double track, making the track single on those streets.

Mr. BEACH. What is the width of street occupied by a double track.

Mr. HEARD. I can not answer that definitely. It would be conditioned, of course, upon the width of the gauge. The gauge of this line, as I understand it, is to be similar to that which is adopted by the other roads here. This double track I believe will not take up any more space than those now in use in this city.

Mr. BEACH. But you do not know that fact.

Mr. HEARD. That is my understanding.

Mr. LONG. How much will this road cost per mile?

Mr. HEARD. I am coming to that. In this connection, though I will say that statistics show that the cost of cable roads averages from about $100,000 to $105,000 per mile. It is claimed, however, by the promoters of this scheme that with their patents this line can be constructed for less, just how much less I am unable to say.

Mr. LONG. I asked the question because the bill provides for the payment of only 10 per cent. in cash. I trust you will recur to that point before you sit down.

Mr. HEARD. I shall do so, most assuredly. This bill further provides that a payment of 10 per cent. shall be made on subscription to the stock. I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact, with which he as a lawyer is doubtless familiar, that in almost every State in this Union—in all of them so far as I have examined their incorporation laws—the amount required to be paid in on the subscription of stock is 10 per cent.

Mr. LONG. That is all that this bill requires to be paid in cash.

Mr. HEARD. It provides that the remainder may be paid according to the needs of construction.

Mr. LONG. In the discretion of the directors. But I will not interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. HEARD. It is no interruption. The matter may as well be discussed now. If gentlemen who wish to perfect this bill think it desirable to amend it so as to make it conform to the general incorporation law of this District, then the parties subscribing to this stock would be required to pay the whole subscription within two years, or substantially so, as I am informed.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The whole amount?

Mr. HEARD. That is my information. But I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] that if it is the judgment of the House that some provision, reasonable in its character and not designed to be prohibitory is required to perfect this bill, it certainly shall have fair consideration on my part. I have no desire to favor or assist anything which will give to any individual or corporation improper advantages at the expense of the public. I am heartily in favor of this measure. I know its merits or rather the merits of the system to which it belongs. I am, therefore, heartily in favor of giving to this city the benefit of that system, but I also desire that it shall be only given under such restrictions as will properly protect the rights of the public.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will the gentleman indulge me a moment?

Mr. HEARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I would be glad if the gentleman at this point would show the precise location of this proposed road with regard to other lines. That would indicate the necessity for the road. Then, as to the rates and limitations imposed, I think those are matters about which the House desires information.

Mr. HEARD. With regard to the first proposition suggested by the gentleman, I have to say that it would be impossible for me to keep in memory the exact relation, at all points, of this proposed system to the existing systems. The map, however, is designed to show what its relations to the existing systems will be when the bill is perfected by the adoption of the amendments which I shall propose and to which I have before alluded. Those amendments leave the bill substantially as it is, the only change being that narrow streets will be relieved from the double track.

As to the rates and limitations, the rate of fare fixed in the bill is not to exceed 5 cents, and that fare is good for the carriage of a passenger over the entire system, 32 miles in length, either as between the termini of the main line, or between either terminus and any point on the branch lines. Members will observe that the last clause in the bill is a saving clause, which reserves to Congress absolutely the power to alter, regulate, or repeal this charter at its pleasure. The rate of fare fixed in the bill is not to exceed 5 cents a mile, the rate charged by the existing roads. The proposed company is not permitted, under this bill, to charge more than 5 cents fare. Any future general law which will operate for the reduction of fares on any of the roads here (even though it might not affect the existing roads, for I do not know whether they are exempt by their charters or not) would apply to this road, and in no case can this company become exempt in this regard or any other from the control of Congress.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Do you provide for the sale of tickets?

Mr. HEARD. That is a matter of detail that is left to the company's regulations.

Mr. COBB. Does this bill provide for transfers from one line to another?

Mr. HEARD. It provides for a trip over the entire line of road for a single fare. You can travel from any point between the Navy Yard and Georgetown or any point on the branches for a single fare. I will not discuss the power of Congress to order this corporation to transfer with other lines, but they are compelled by this act to make a single fare good over all their own lines. I may remind gentlemen also that there are several transportation lines in this city now that do not transfer.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to inquire of the gentleman if the 10 per cent. which this requires to be paid in and the amount that the line is permitted to be bonded for are supposed to be sufficient to construct the road.

Mr. HEARD. Ten per cent.? Most assuredly not.

Mr. CANNON. What is the estimate of the cost of the road and its equipments?

Mr. HEARD. I have heard various estimates. The best information given to our committee, as I remember, is that the road can be built for $60,000 per mile. But according to statistics with regard to the construction of cable roads now in existence in other parts of the country the average cost has been about $105,000 per mile.

Mr. CANNON. For a double or a single track?

Mr. HEARD. For a single track; and in San Francisco, as I am advised by the gentleman from that city [Mr. FELTON], the cable roads have cost in some instances as high as $160,000 per mile for a single track. The average cost of these roads in other parts of the country has been, as I have said, about $105,000 per mile. The people interested in this company claim to be able to build this road for less. If they do so it will be so much better for them, so much better for the stockholders, and none the worse for the public.

Mr. COBB. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. This bill provides, I believe, for incorporating this company with a capital stock of $2,000,000, but there is no provision requiring more than 10 per cent. of this amount to be paid in. Though a larger percentage may be called for by the board of directors, the bill does not require it. Then it is further provided in the bill, as I understand, that the company may issue bonds, but to what limit the bill, I believe, does not prescribe. Ought there not to be some limit in that respect?

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, that is a question which the gentleman from Indiana can decide as well as I can. As I remarked a while ago, if it is the desire of any member here to impose a limitation in that respect let him offer an amendment and test the sense of the House upon it. But upon examination of the bill the gentleman will find that there is a limit to the amount of bonds they may issue, which is $40,000 per mile. As a friend of this bill, and representing on this floor the Committee on the District of Columbia, I shall make as sturdy a fight as I can against any proposition which in its nature may be designed to prohibit the building of this road; but I shall not oppose any measure which is intended simply to protect the public. If this House should regard it as necessary to adopt an amendment to this bill requiring the capital stock to be paid in absolutely within a given time, though I think such a requirement would be extraordinary, yet I would yield to the sense of the House.

Mr. COBB. Would it not be right that every subscriber to stock should pay in the amount of his subscription to the extent necessary to construct the road, instead of raising money by issuing bonds, for which the stockholders would not have paid a dollar? Is not that a fair proposition?

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman's proposition is not fairly stated, for no man can have an interest in this road who has not paid a dollar.

Mr. COBB. But your bill provides for the payment of only 10 per cent. on the capital stock.

Mr. HEARD. Very good; that would cover more than a dollar. The gentleman spoke of not paying a dollar.

Mr. COBB. I meant for the amount of bonds issued.

Mr. HEARD. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon consuming my time. I have aimed to make myself understood upon this proposition. If it is the sense of the House that these people should be made to pay more than 10 per cent. upon the stock subscription, though that is the proportion required to be paid in similar cases by the law of my State, by the law of Michigan, and, as I am advised, of many other States, that is a question for the judgment of this House.

If it is the judgment of the House that this bill should compel the subscribers to the stock of this company to pay up their subscriptions within a year or two years or any other specified time, let some gentleman friendly to the purpose of the bill offer an amendment of that kind.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The question is not so much as to the amount to be paid on the subscriptions of stock, for 10 per cent. I believe is the usual proportion required——

Mr. HEARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But the question is whether any stock shall be issued that has not been paid for at par.

Mr. HEARD. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will say, and I hope I shall not be interrupted again on this point, for I have consumed a great deal of my time, that I should not favor in this case a requirement that the whole capital stock be paid in cash. In the first place, there are very few enterprises of this description—street-car roads, railroads, or anything of that kind—which are built absolutely on a cash basis.

I will say further, without wishing to reflect on those who are interested in the horse car-roads of this city to-day (and there are 58 miles of such roads in operation here), there is none of that stock which is paid up in full to-day. There is the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, organized fourteen years ago, which, up to date, has only paid in about 40 per cent. Its capital stock, I believe, is $500,000. It has a mortgage debt on the road of $25,000 a mile, which is probably the entire cost of constructing the road.

Mr. COBB. What became of the money raised upon the bonded debt? Was it put into the pockets of the corporators, or was it expended upon the road?

Mr. HEARD. As these gentlemen who constitute these horse-car companies claim to be patriots, and have taken pains to advise the House upon its duty in this matter, I suppose the proceeds of the issue of those bonds was donated to some charitable institution, though that may be a violent presumption.

Mr. HOPKINS. But the gentleman, as I understand, does not approve of the legislation which permitted the horse-car companies to do just what he has stated?

Mr. HEARD. Let me state my case for myself.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman can answer directly.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman assumes to put into my mouth a statement which I do not accept. I stated that it would not be fair to demand that this proposed rival system for accommodating the business of the city should be constructed on a different pecuniary basis from that which has been required of every street-car line in the city, for the reason—and I ask the attention of every member present to this point—that the last section of this bill provides in express terms that the act may at any time be altered, amended, or repealed by Congress.

Mr. BEACH. That does not amount to anything.

Mr. HEARD. I will show the gentleman that it does amount to a great deal. It amounts to this: That any general incorporation act intended to operate upon the franchises of the different corporations of this city would act upon this company without any limit, and I submit in all fairness that it would not be proper to impose upon this company burdens which you have not imposed and do not propose to impose upon others.

Mr. PAYSON. May I ask the gentleman one question?

Mr. HEARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYSON. What is the value of the stock of the local corporations, to which the gentleman has adverted, now operating the street-railways of this city?

Mr. HEARD. I am not able to tell.

Mr. PAYSON. Is it not right the House should know, in order to determine whether the limitation on fares is right now?

Mr. HEARD. I have said nothing about the limitation of fares.

Mr. PAYSON. Your bill does, and in answer to the gentleman from Indiana you said there was a limitation.

Mr. HEARD. Most assuredly; and if the gentleman from Illinois or any other gentleman present desires to offer an amendment to limit the rate of fare he can do so.

Mr. PAYSON. I am simply asking for information.

Mr. HEARD. And I am giving you the information the best I can.

Mr. PAYSON. Why do you fix the limit in the bill as to the amount of capital stock which shall be paid in to 10 per cent. alone? Why is that amount fixed unless it is the desire——

Mr. HEARD. It is not designed to be a limitation. It is a requirement they shall not do it for less. The subscription is void without such payment.

Mr. PAYSON. Why not fix it at 50 or 60 per cent.?

Mr. HEARD. That is a matter of judgment for the House.

Mr. PAYSON. But why does the committee fix it at 10 per cent.?

Mr. HEARD. Because it is usual to fix it in the different States. And I apprehend there is no demand of the people here or from the gentleman from Illinois or anybody else for a limitation on the proposed road which is not placed on the present railroads of the District. I understand the Georgetown Railroad up to date has paid up only 40 per cent. of its capital stock, and yet it has a mortgage debt for every dollar it has expended in construction.

Mr. HOPKINS. Do you believe in legislation that will permit such a thing to be done in the District of Columbia?

Mr. HEARD. But does it do so?

Mr. HOPKINS. Does the gentleman approve of such vicious legislation?

Mr. HEARD. The committee do not propose in this bill to regulate the affairs on all the roads in this city, nor do they propose to put on this road burdens which the other roads in this city do not bear.

Mr. HOPKINS. Do I understand the gentleman to say, because some former Congress permitted such vicious legislation he will permit it here in this bill?

Mr. HEARD. This bill is presented by the committee as embodying their views of fairness on that point for the action of the House.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEARD. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. The question I wish to ask the gentleman is, why has this committee presented a bill permitting such vicious legislation?

Mr. HEARD. I do not admit that this is vicious legislation. But I say, on the part of the committee, it could be easily determined by a vote here whether it is considered by the House as vicious legislation or not. That is a matter of opinion, Mr. Chairman, and I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me any further with such questions as involve nothing more than his opinion on the ethics of legislation.

Mr. HOPKINS rose.

Mr. HEARD. If the gentleman has any speech to make on this subject I hope he will make it in his own time, and not interrupt me any further.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman has not yet answered my question why the committee has permitted this character of vicious legislation to be presented?

Mr. HEARD. I ask the gentleman to take his seat and allow me to proceed.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I think the gentleman is legitimately trying to get information in reference to the pending measure.

Mr. HEARD. He will get it whenever I am allowed to proceed with my remarks.

Mr. FELTON. Let me ask the gentleman from Missouri whether there is anything in this bill to prevent the board of directors calling for other installments in addition to the 10 per cent. of stock to be paid on subscription?

Mr. HEARD. Not at all.

Mr. BEACH. Will the gentleman permit me to move an amendment prohibiting the issuing of the capital stock until it has been paid in cash to that amount? Will you agree to allow me to offer such an amendment?

Mr. HEARD. When the amendment is offered I will act on it as I think it deserves, but I am not authorized to accept it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are in this city already in operation 58 miles of road, and the committee do not in this bill propose to impose any burdens upon the company provided for in the pending bill that have not been imposed upon the companies already in existence.

Mr. FELTON. To do so would have the effect to establish the roads already in existence as a monopoly favored by this legislation.

Mr. HEARD. That certainly would be the effect by giving them the rights and privileges denied by Congress to this road. It certainly is not the intention of Congress to keep all the carrying business in this city confined to the 58 miles of road already constructed, regardless of the accommodation of the public. What it is fair to extend to the roads now existing it is also fair to allow to the road provided for in this bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I understand the gentleman to say that there is reserved in this bill to Congress to alter, amend, or repeal this charter. Now, I would ask the gentleman if the same power is reserved to Congress in the charters of other roads in this city?

Mr. HEARD. I do not know. I have not examined that question.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I asked the question so we may know.

Mr. HEARD. I do not know that it is; and that is the reason why I argue that it should not be put upon one without being put upon the others. I think, Mr. Chairman, that in making a provision of law like that in question it should be made to operate alike upon all, and the reservation in this bill takes out of all question the power of Congress to impose such a tax upon this road.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Another question, with the consent of my colleague. If the reservation is not contained in the granting act bestowing the franchises, what right then has Congress, what power, to make or impose such limitations upon their franchises?

Mr. HEARD. Well, that is a question which has been asked a hundred times in such controversies. It goes down to the very root of the broad question of eminent domain, and is a question about which lawyers essentially differ. For myself, I hold that Congress has such power.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I assume, and the action of the committee assumes, that this legislation is needed, otherwise we would not feel warranted in recommending the granting of the franchises. We further assume that these people, to whom the franchise is sought to be granted, if they construct the road, will render a full equivalent for the privileges bestowed upon them.

Now I wish the members who are present to pay attention to the statement that in the construction of a cable road, costing four or five times as much as a horse road, the measure of taxation that will follow per mile is in the same ratio with the increase of cost of construction; and, therefore, these 32 miles of road, if they be constructed, will be taxable to an amount in excess of the 120 miles of the horse roads, and, therefore, in all probability the tax derived from this source in this city would be almost or quite double that derived from all the existing lines. In other words, according to the estimates made and furnished the committee, it will reach about $50,000 a year from this source.

But that is but a small proportion of what the people will derive in the way of taxation from the construction of this road. The extension of the road into the outlying districts not now supplied with horse-railways will largely enhance the value of property and, thereby increasing the volume of property, relieve the people of the District and the country largely in the matter of taxation.

Now, I propose to notice some of the objections which have been made to the bill. As to whether or not it is needed I shall have nothing further to say at present. It is said by some of the opponents of the bill that it will impair the streets of the city. Let me say that with any man who has ever seen a cable railroad such an objection will have no weight.

The system of cable roads, so far as the impairment or the disfigurement of the appearance of the streets is concerned, bears no comparison to the injury done by the horse railroads, for the reason that the rails are laid level with the top of the streets, which are paved smoothly, and they are not disfigured by the cobble-stones placed in the middle of the tracks as we see them on the lines of our horse-railways. These horse lines now have the middle of the streets disfigured, the lines of cable are laid, and the rails come up flush with the top line of the pavement, and you can drive a vehicle across a line of cable road and not realize that you are crossing a track at all.

But, sir, beyond that we are appealed to by those who oppose the measure under consideration not to suffer further impairment of the streets. In opposition to this statement let me inform you that the existing lines of horse-railroads to-day in this city are before the House with bills asking permission to extend their lines for 83 squares, and there are innumerable propositions for the granting of new franchises to other companies.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Has any such bill been reported?

Mr. HEARD. No, sir; but the point I seek to make is that although the people who have horse roads to-day insist that this cable company should not be allowed to construct a road on the ground of impairing the streets, they have asked that they may be permitted to extend their roads 83 squares and impair the streets immeasurably more than by the plan suggested here.

Now, as to the further suggestion of the opponents of the bill that the franchise should be sold for its full value, I belong to that class of people who believe that all franchises should be taxed. If I mistake not, the State of Pennsylvania—I know it was the case some years ago—levies no tax upon real estate, but her taxes are derived in a large measure from privileges and franchises. I believe they ought to be taxed. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not consent to the proposition that you may tax the rival road proposed in any peculiar way, and derive revenue for the benefit of those now in existence which are exempt from such taxation. We have reserved in this bill the power of Congress to tax this road to any extent whenever a general law for such purpose shall be deemed proper, and I hold that such general legislation as would effect that object would be proper now if made to operate on all alike. But such law should have no favorites and no victims.

Mr. GLOVER. Let me ask my friend a question. I notice the second section includes a provision for the taxation of this property. It is expressly provided that said road shall be deemed real estate. What I wish to ask is how the stock is to be taxed under the provision. Is it to be taxed as personalty or realty?

Mr. HEARD. I understand it is to be taxed as personalty.

Mr. GLOVER. What reason was in the mind of the committee for discrimination, for saying that the road shall be taxed as real estate and the stock as personalty?

Mr. HEARD. So far as I am concerned no reason has occurred to my mind for it. If there is a discrimination, so far as I am concerned I have not observed it.

Mr. GLOVER. Does the gentleman find any reason in the suggestion that the difficulty of collecting the tax on stock as personalty might be very great?

Mr. HEARD. I have not thought of that; but I believe the gentlemen will find this is an exact transcript of other charters here in that respect.

Mr. PAYSON. I understood the gentleman to say that the committee were in favor of subjecting the franchises of this road to taxation.

Mr. HEARD. I did not say that. I do not speak for the committee. I said that personally I am in favor of taxing the franchises. I think taxes should be laid on all valuable franchises.

Mr. PAYSON. Does the committee agree with the gentleman?

Mr. HEARD. I do not assume to say so, because I do not know that that matter was ever discussed in the committee.

Mr. PAYSON. My reason for asking the question is that in section 2 of this bill that proposition is studiously evaded. It is expressly omitted from section 2.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HEMPHILL. How does the gentleman know that this was studiously evaded?

Mr. PAYSON. I say it is conspicuously evaded.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not know that the gentleman has any right to assume anything of the kind.

Mr. PAYSON. I will at the proper time call attention to what is the practice in my own State in this respect.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Perhaps your State is not a model for the people here.

Mr. HEARD. I say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] in all kindness, it is perfectly competent for him to offer the provision he indicates, if he so desires; but I do not propose that he shall consume my time just now by discussing that point.

Mr. PAYSON. I simply wanted to know what was in the mind of the committee.

Mr. HEARD. I want to be heard further on that point, and I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] will listen.

Mr. PAYSON. Certainly. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. HEARD. When this bill was before the committee, I think it is not in violation of the propriety of the case in speaking of the committee's action to say a proposition was considered to require a certain percentage on the business of the road to be paid to the District of Columbia as a kind of tax or consideration for the franchise. That was discouraged for two reasons: First, that we desired to reserve in the hands of Congress absolutely—and that applies also to the sale of the charter—the power to control and regulate this thing. And beyond that, the power of taxation being reserved, Congress may devise a better plan of taxation than to retain a certain per cent., because the retention of a certain per cent. generally affects the book-keeping more than it does the Treasury.

One objection is made to this bill that the permission of Congress to this company or any other to bond its road without having paid up its capital stock authorizes a speculation. To what extent Congress will authorize such speculation is a matter for it to determine. Certain it is, however, that in every charter of the kind granted in the District there has been no such burden imposed as is proposed to be placed upon this road. But beyond that it is said that bonds enough will be issued to build the road and enable these parties to pocket the stock. I call the attention of gentleman, especially of lawyers, to the fact that the stock does not belong to the incorporators; they are but trustees for the stockholders; and any gentleman who has the money to pay for the stock is able to buy it, and if he buys it whatever benefit accrues, whether from liberal bonding or otherwise, results not to the incorporators or directors, who are but trustees, but to him and to the other stockholders in the company.

I believe the objections which have been made and which I have discussed in a cursory way cover the greater part of what I want to notice now. I now yield the floor, reserving the balance of my time.

Mr. HOPKINS. Before the gentleman resumes his seat I desire to ask him a question. Is there any provision in the bill to compensate the property-owners along the line of the proposed road for any damage done to their property?

Mr. HEARD. There is not. We do not contemplate damaging anybody's property, nor do we demand from anybody pay for the advantage we give their property. It is not contemplated by the committee that this will damage anybody's property, but largely enhance its value where it is affected at all.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I desire to oppose this bill both on account of the scheme it proposes and on account of the defects of the bill if the scheme were a proper one. I start out with the proposition that there is no necessity for the further obstruction of the streets of this city for the purpose of facilitating rapid transit. That car lines within any city are an obstruction to the travel and a disturbance to the beauty and the general pleasure of a city is an admitted fact. It is only in great business centers, where constant travel and rapid transit are demanded, that the people in cities have been willing to submit to the inconvenience to themselves, the injury to property, and the destruction of streets by railroads. There is no such condition of affairs existing in this city. It is not a commercial city; it is not a city requiring quick and rapid transit. The travel as a rule is only at stated times, morning and evening, and the city has now by its horse-cars and by other modes of traveling all the communication it wants and all it needs from one part of the city to another.

There are are already in this city 58 miles of street railway, comparatively destroying every street in which they have been laid, and now it is proposed by this bill to go into the narrower streets, that have been reserved for ordinary travel, and put down railway lines, not only single track, but double track, utterly destroying those streets for every purpose except the purpose of this corporation. They not only propose that in this bill, but they do not even ask the consent of the people whose property abuts along the line of this proposed railway, nor is there any proposition to compensate the property-owners for damage done to their property.

Mr. DUNHAM. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is Congress in the habit of asking the consent of the people of the District of Columbia when it desires to do something?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, sir. Not only this Congress but every legislative body should protect the vested rights of the people. It is a well-known principle of law that every man who owns a lot owns the right not only to every foot of the street in front of him, but to every foot of street laid down on the plat; yet here is a proposition to take up and occupy the streets of the city for the purposes of this private corporation without making any provision for compensating the property-owners.

Mr. DUNHAM. Do you say that every man who owns a piece of property owns the street?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNHAM. Could he fence it up?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No, sir; not only can he not do that, but the town council can not fence it up.

Mr. GROUT. Whether he owns it or not depends entirely upon the terms of the grant.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I state that where there is a plat filed and on record laying off the streets of a city, and a party owns a lot in that city, he owns the use of every street on that plat.

Mr. FELTON. Yes; and of every other street in the city.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. And of every other street in the city.

Mr. STRUBLE. Does his right to the use of those streets result from his ownership of the lot?

Mr. DUNHAM. I want to ask the gentleman another question. Has the man who owns property abutting on a street any more right to the use of the street than a man has who does not own any property at all in the city?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, sir, he has.

Mr. Chairman, I would say to these gentlemen, if they want to ascertain the law of this question let them go into the Library and look at Mr. Cooley's work, and he will enlighten them. Now, this is one of the defects of this bill, that it proposes to take possession of these streets for purposes for which they are not needed, and to take possession of them without making any compensation whatever to the people whose property will be injured by such use of the streets.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has that been usual in any city?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Further than that, wherever rights have been granted to a private company and injury to property has resulted therefrom damages have been recovered from the company, but is it proper for Congress, in dealing with a bill of this kind when they have the power to protect the rights of the people and to protect vested interests, to leave the parties concerned to such protection as they may have under the common-law right to the enjoyment of their property?

There are other things in this bill that make it totally defective. For example, there is no provision whatever in the bill for the protection of the public interests, except the one limiting the fare to 5 cents. There are no rules laid down, there are no details in the bill, but simply a general requirement that the company shall do things in a proper manner.

One of the remarkable features in this bill is, that it leaves it absolutely to the discretion of the Architect of the Capitol to say what part of the Capitol Grounds this road may occupy. If, under this bill, the company were to buy up the Architect of the Capitol, if he were a corrupt man, or if he were to collude with them, he could allow them to run their cars along the walks and the public grounds right up to the steps of this building, and no power could stop them. Are we to be told that the Congress of the United States, having charge of these magnificent grounds and of this magnificent building, should turn over its control of them to one man and leave them at the mercy of his corruption or his ignorance? As you go along through this bill you find the rights of the people ignored in every line of it. In one respect it is the most remarkable bill I have ever seen. It is the only bill I have ever seen that openly, upon its face, authorizes bids by the stockholders for fraud upon the public. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] says that all the State laws authorize the issuing of stock upon the payment of 10 per cent.——

Mr. HEARD. What I said was that the State laws with which I am familiar, and, according to my information, the laws of almost all the States, allow it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. There is not a solitary State in the Union that allows that. I will show where the gentleman makes a mistake. The statutes of the different States allow the corporators, numbering usually five, to get a charter when they pay 10 per cent. of the stock subscribed; but there is no State in this Union that allows the issuing of stock to stockholders upon the payment of only 10 per cent. of the amount of the subscription.

Mr. BEACH. Ten per cent. must be paid upon filing the articles of corporation.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will say to the gentleman that I know a State that does not require you in that case to pay one cent.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. What State?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The State of South Carolina.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Well, the State of South Carolina has a peculiar way of doing some things anyhow.

Mr. HEMPHILL. One peculiarity is that she sets people right when they are wrong.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If the State of South Carolina authorizes the granting of charters and the issuing of stock without payment for the stock by the parties to whom it is issued, it only shows that the State of South Carolina is greatly in need of reform.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Now the gentleman is entirely shifting the issue. I did not say that we do any such thing as that.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. What is the gentleman's statement?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I say that in our State you have the right to get a charter without paying anything down upon the stock.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. But that is not the proposition in this bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. This bill requires the corporators to pay 10 per cent. down.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. This bill does not require the corporators to pay 10 per cent. down to get the charter.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I know it does not.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. This bill provides that stock to the amount of $2,000,000 may be issued, and for this $2,000,000 of stock only 10 per cent. need be paid.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The bill requires that 10 per cent. shall be paid absolutely, and that the balance shall be paid if demanded by the board of directors for the purpose of building the road.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I understand that; and the directors are the men who will be interested in paying as little as possible upon the $2,000,000 of stock, and interested in the watering process and the swindling of the public.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Do I understand the gentleman to say than any stock is to be issued until it is paid for?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, sir. Under this bill the whole $2,000,000 of stock will be issued upon the payment of only 10 per cent., and the men named in this bill, if they can raise the 10 per cent., can get $2,000,000 of stock, representing property which may be mortgaged for $40,000 a mile, and for the purpose of paying dividends upon which the company will be allowed to tax the public.

If these gentlemen propose in good faith to build this road, why do they not go about it in a business-like way? We are told that they are eminently responsible and able to build the road. Why, then, do they want $2,000,000 worth of stock issued with only 10 per cent. paid upon it? Under this bill a man can pay $10 and get a $100 share of stock. He thus has $90 margin upon which to go into the market and speculate. More than that, though he only pays $10 upon each share that he owns, he expects to tax the public so that he may receive a dividend on $100 per share.

Mr. Chairmain, I believe that neither Congress nor any State Legislature ought from this time forward to grant a charter to any company whatever without an absolute guard against the watering of the stock and the issuing of any certificate of indebtedness to any man, unless he has paid dollar for dollar.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. It is only fair to state in this connection that the tax upon the public is not increased.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. It is increased.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. How?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. It is increased in this way——

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The fares are not increased.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If this company can build a railroad for 10 per cent. of $2,000,000, they have no right to charge a rate of fare which would be equivalent to a just compensation for an expenditure of $2,000,000.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. That is a sound proposition.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. They have no right to use these streets except for the benefit of the public. Common carriers are not private corporations, and have never been held to be such.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I mean to say that the public is paying a 5-cent fare now.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I understand that. Common carriers are only allowed the exercise of the right of eminent domain with a view to the public good; and they have no right by watered stock or by false and fraudulent statements of expenditures to require the public to pay for freight or passenger transportation a rate of tariff which is more than a fair dividend on the amount they have actually expended. To make myself plain, suppose a freight railroad going through any agricultural portion of this country has cost $10,000,000, and the stock is watered so as to represent nominally $100,000,000, which is the proportion in this case. Now if that freight company levies such a toll as to pay a dividend on $100,000,000, it thereby robs the public; it obtains from the people money for which it has never rendered any equivalent.

There are in this bill other clauses equally objectionable. After allowing the issue of $2,000,000 of stock for the purpose of building a road some 32 miles long, the bill allows bonds to be issued and put upon the market at a rate of $40,000 a mile for the single track or $80,000 a mile if there is a double track.

Mr. PERKINS. What will it cost a mile to build the road?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Not that much.

Mr. PERKINS. Can you make an estimate of what it will cost?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I can not make an estimate, but you will find that it will not cost $40,000 a mile to lay a track through these streets.

Mr. BEACH. That is where the little joker comes in.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I understand that, but these gentlemen ought not to come in here and ask for a great public privilege without some statement as to the cost.

Mr. ROWELL. Do you know of any cable railroad having been built in the United States at less cost than $100,000 a mile of single track?

Mr. HOPKINS. Why do not this committee bring in their estimate and demonstrate it is proper?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I will answer the gentleman's question. It is perfectly immaterial what these roads cost when first incorporated.

Mr. ROWELL. What have they cost this year and last year in Kansas City or Philadelphia?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The cost is owing to the royalty for patents; and the men who build this road own the patent and will pay no royalty. If gentlemen say this road can not be built for that, why do you not pass a general law and let all the companies come in and bid for the road? What is it you propose to give? You propose here to turn over a magnificent franchise within the gift of the city; you turn over that franchise worth a million of dollars to these people, laid out and cared for by the public money; you propose to give these men who ask for the passage of this legislation the right to lay their hands across the throat of travel and commerce in this city; to take hold of the rights belonging to the people of this city; to take charge of this magnificent franchise, for which they shall pay no compensation whatever. Why is this? If there is no job in this matter why do you not let it out to public competition?

In New York we heard the same song. When Sharpe was getting his surface railroad they denied there was any job in it, that the public wanted the road, that it was a magnificent public enterprise, but no sooner were the rails laid down than the rottenness of the job rose up and its stench filled the whole country. Here you undertake to turn this road over to another set of men. I do not know who they are and I do not care; you turn over a valuable franchise in this city to these men by name. Other companies would give thousands of dollars for the right to build this road. The tax on that road if it were a turnpike road would help to keep up the public schools in this city, and decrease the annual appropriation which you have to make from the public Treasury for that purpose. Why not use it then for the benefit of the city and for the benefit of the public? Why not use it to keep down taxation? But this committee do nothing of the sort in this bill. They give us two or three names in this bill, and to these gentlemen they give absolute power to go through the streets of the city, to take public lots without paying a solitary cent for them. They give them the right to issue two millions of stock, and, further, they allow them to bond their road to the extent of $40,000 a mile for a single track.

This committee does that, and they do it without presenting any estimate of cost, without a single provision as to how many cars are to be run. Indeed in this bill they could run but one car a day and that would comply with the charter in this bill. There in no check upon them.

Further than that, Mr. Chairman, is it right? What public necessity is there for this road so great as to make it necessary to destroy the vested rights of companies already existing under your laws and by virtue of your action heretofore?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. "Vested rights"—that is the trouble, is it?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If you allow this road to be established would that destroy the monopoly? You give the right to charge 5 cents a mile as on the other roads. You permit them to run parallel lines. You further destroy the streets of the city. Now, there are other people who have rights besides these people who wish to build this road.

I know when your charters were granted for horse-railroads here they were in their infancy. They were a sort of experiment. These people have gone to work in good faith and laid down 58 miles of rail in this city, and now comes a corporation, composed mostly of those living out of the city, and ask you to allow them still further to tax the people here.

Is there any man in the city who can say with truth that he has never been able to pass backward and forward with facility on the existing lines? Have you any lack of transportation here?

Mr. BLAND. A man can ride in these bob-tail horse-cars, perhaps, by standing up and hitching on to the straps. [Laughter.]

Mr. FELTON. What is the question of the gentleman?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I ask is there anybody who has been incommoded, or unable to get backward and forward by reason of a lack of transportation here?

Mr. FELTON. I have been a dozen times; and have tried to have the privilege of paying my fare, but had more than once to get out or stay out and walk rather than submit to being crowded up in a close car where it is impossible to get a seat. The service is not commensurate with the requirements within 33⅓ per cent. of it at times. The gentleman wanted information, and now I have given him the information I possess.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I am obliged to the gentleman from California for the answer, but he is no doubt like many other people, who will persist in getting into crowded cars when they must know they can not get a seat rather than wait a few minutes; and when they find they can not get a seat, then they get out and quarrel about it or stand up and quarrel.

Mr. FELTON. Or go afoot; of course we have that privilege always. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from West Virginia does not undertake, I presume, to be satisfied with the present car service of the city?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No, sir; I have not said that.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Because I should be sorry to have that impression created by the remarks of the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No, sir; I am not satisfied with the present system; but I do say that they can be required to put on more cars without the destruction of their franchises or the impairment of their rights, and without injury to the streets of the city.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. How are their rights to be interfered with by the passage of this bill, unless the new road interferes with them by competition? The gentleman from West Virginia asserts that this proposition is for the purpose of injuring existing corporations. Now, how can it——

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No, sir; I did not say that.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I want to know how the old corporations can be injured unless there be injurious competition.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I did not say that.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I am sure you will find it so when you come to review your remarks.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I said there was to be no benefit to the public, because the proposition embodied here creates no competition, and hence that the public would derive no advantage from it; but if it did, I think in either event it is not proper to let it pass through in this shape.

Mr. HEARD. Do you not think it would be a material benefit to those portions of the city which have not the car service now, and to which this cable road would extend it?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Why, Mr. HEARD, it would be a material benefit to you or to me if we wanted to go to Georgetown in a hurry to have a magnificent Mogul engine and a train of sleepers and fine Pullman cars to take us over instead of a common horse-car; but yet, although we want to travel in that way, is it proper that the streets of the city should be destroyed to enable us to do so?

Mr. HEARD. You do not understand my point. My question was not as to the manner of traveling, but was directed to this point: Is there not a material benefit to be gained by allowing those sections which have not railroad facilities now to have the benefit of this new service, which will extend it to them in the manner proposed?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Why, sir, I tell you frankly I do not believe it is a matter of any benefit to them whatever. I do not believe that there is a householder, a property-holder, or a family living along the streets where you propose to put this road that would not rather ask you to give additional facilities to existing lines than to have the streets torn up. In fact they would rather walk for one or two squares to get to the existing lines than to have this additional service which can be of very little benefit to them. But, further than that, if it be true that these street railroads are a blessing all along your streets, why do not you pass a general law allowing everybody to run cars along the streets?

Mr. HEARD. In response to the gentleman's question I will ask him another: Why don't you introduce a bill if you think it such a benefit to allow that to be done?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Because I do not think it such a benefit. I believe we have street railroads enough in the city, and I do not believe that they ought to be extended. I do not think it necessary to build any others. Why don't you require those that are in existence to perform the service required?

Mr. HEARD. I understood you to say the service was sufficient and satisfactory now.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. That is the true theory after all, I suppose, of the gentleman's argument, that the existing monopoly is not to be interfered with.

Mr. HEARD. And I understood the gentleman to say that the people were satisfied with the present system.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Are you doing this in the same manner that you acted with me in reference to the oleomargarine bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. How do you mean?

Mr. DUNHAM. Are you talking here simply to kill time up to 5 o'clock? [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I do not know how it may be with the gentleman himself, or how he did; but on general principles I can say I am not in the habit of doing anything as he does. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNHAM. But you are sure you will use the time up to 5 o'clock anyhow.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I do not know about that, but if I can defeat this bill I am going to do it.

I was going on to say that there was no reason from the necessities of travel for the construction of this line of railway, and that the people of the city do not want it. There is no recommendation from the commissioners, the governing power of this city, for this line of railway. I want to ask the gentleman who has charge of the bill, if it is one for the benefit of the city, why is it that the commissioners of the city have not recommended and asked for its construction? We have here on that commission a most accomplished engineer, Mr. Ludlow, a gentleman from Philadelphia, where he is familiar with these railways. We have other gentlemen whose business it is to look after the streets and to provide for rapid and comfortable transit over them. And yet there has not been a single recommendation by one of these commissioners to Congress. There is no request made by them. There is no petition here from any citizen of this city. There is no recommendation by a public meeting. All that we know is that the men seeking to build this road come here and ask for its construction. The committee itself, I venture to say, only propounds this as a proposition which has been made to them without any great earnestness or zeal for the construction of this road.

When we come to act on a matter so important as this, covering 32 miles of the streets of this city, the surrender absolutely of their occupation and use to this company and the turning over the homes of the people along that whole line to the annoyance of these railroads, there ought to be some expression of the people who are to be benefited by it and from the governing power of this city. If this city wants it why is it we have not evidence before us of that fact?

Mr. HEARD. As I have already stated, we have petitions from along the line represented to contain seventeen thousand or eighteen thousand names. I have not counted them.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The gentleman stated there was what purported to be a petition——

Mr. HEARD. Before the committee.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. But it has never been before the House. The public have not seen it.

Mr. HEARD. I state emphatically those petitions were before the committee and they are now in the House.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does the gentleman know how those petitions were got up? Is he aware that they do not represent the feeling of the people along the road?

Mr. HEARD. I do not know that.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. What I complain of is that you have not presented those petitions to the House, had them referred, and made them public, so that we could test the question as to whether or not they were genuinely signed.

Mr. HEARD. How can I present them more than I have done? Shall I have them read? They are here, and I have stated before that they were here.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If you had incorporated them in your report and had these names printed we could have tested the fact and understood what weight to attach to them.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman says these petitions have not been referred to the House. I have before me here a petition of eighty property-owners and citizens of the District of Columbia asking for this measure.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Will the gentleman read out the names?

Mr. SPRINGER. This petition was presented April 12. Here are other petitions of a like character from real-estate owners.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I am not satisfied that the gentleman from Illinois should merely stand up and tell me he has a petition with eighty names attached. I want the names.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will read them.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, read them.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will send them to the Clerk's desk to be read. I presume it will be more interesting than the remarks of the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The gentleman can read them himself in my time. I yield part of my time to him.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman yields me a part of his time I will withdraw the petition and make some remarks myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw the names which he has sent to the Clerk's desk?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will withdraw the names and occupy the time myself.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If we had those names we would know who the parties were.

Mr. DUNN. Why not have them read in your own time?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] will not read them.

Mr. DUNN. You can have them read in your own time.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Will the gentleman from Illinois tell me what he has to do with those petitions?

Mr. SPRINGER. They have been here for some weeks. The gentleman professes to be representing the District of Columbia, but from his remarks one would presume he was representing the Georgetown Railway Company. I do not say that, however; I do not assume that.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. It was a very impertinent assumption on your part. [Laughter.] Such remarks should not be made unless gentlemen intend to make them and be responsible for them.

Mr. SPRINGER. I say I do not make those remarks.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Then the gentleman should not have used that language.

Mr. SPRINGER. As the gentleman denied that anybody in the city of Washington had asked for this increase I wanted to present these papers.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I do not know what are the gentleman's habits of representation on this floor. But I have been here for a considerable time; this is my third term; and I have got the first man yet to address me as the representative of any private interest on this floor.

There is not a man connected with any railroad in this city that has ever spoken to me about this matter except a gentleman who is interested in this bill. He asked me to read the bill and give it careful consideration, and I promised him to do so. Therefore it is altogether gratuitous, it is altogether uncalled-for, it is neither dignified nor proper for the gentleman to make such a remark.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw all the remarks to which the gentleman takes exception. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from West Virginia to this provision in the incorporation law of West Virginia, his own State:

At least 10 per cent. at time of subscription. No person is to be considered a stockholder or entitled to a certificate until he has paid this amount. Other installments as required by the directors.

Mr. ROWELL. Just the provision that is in our bill.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The gentleman, unfortunately for himself, has only read what a lawyer in our country calls a "little scrap" of law.

Mr. HEARD. I have read the law of your State.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I deny that it is the law as you state it, and I will explain it to you. We have a general law which provides for the granting of charters to corporations. There must be not less than five incorporators. They must have subscribed the minimum amount of stock. They must then make affidavit that they have paid in 10 per cent. of the subscription, and then the secretary of state grants them a charter and authorizes them to issue stock, but when they issue the stock they must sell it dollar for dollar. If the provision of this bill was like the provision of the law in West Virginia, and simply referred to the incorporators and the 10 per cent. which they are required to pay upon the minimum amount of the stock, the case would be entirely different, but that is not this bill. As to the law of West Virginia, my colleague, Mr. GOFF, knows that it is as I have stated it, and that is the law of every other State, and the trouble with these gentlemen is that they have mixed up the law as to the corporators with the law as to the company after it is incorporated, and they undertake to teach us law when they do not understand it. [Laughter.] Now, I am afraid that I am exhausting the patience of the House, and as it is so near the hour of adjournment, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR].

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, as so little progress has been made with the business of the District of Columbia to-day, I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening with the understanding that this traction railway bill shall not come up for consideration. There are some other matters pertaining to the District that require attention, and as the District has had but two days this session, I trust that we may have an evening session for this purpose.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I move as a substitute for that motion that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. That was the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HEARD. But he put a condition upon it.

The SPEAKER. No, the gentleman simply stated that his purpose was not to call up this bill for the evening session.

Mr. BARBOUR. I hope gentlemen will agree to the suggestion I have made. It is perfectly obvious that if we come here to-night there will be but a small number present, less than a quorum, and there is so much opposition to this traction bill that somebody will be sure to raise the question of a quorum, and we shall be unable to do any business. My suggestion is made with the view of transacting other business relating to the District of Columbia which is pending before the House, and to which I think there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] that this bill is now under consideration in Committee of the Whole, and when the House reassembles at the evening session, if it determines to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on this Calendar, this bill will again come up, unless, by unanimous consent or by a vote of the House, it be postponed.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 71.

Mr. HOPKINS demanded tellers; and tellers were ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. HOPKINS and Mr. HEARD to act as tellers.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, I think that perhaps I can settle this. I ask unanimous consent that next Monday be set apart for business pertaining to the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOPKINS and Mr. MORRISON objected.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, the motion for a recess is withdrawn.

Mr. HEARD. I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock for the consideration of bills reported from Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOPKINS. To that I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House stands adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WISE: Petition of Mrs. James M. Thompson, of Hanover County, and of Mrs. Elizabeth H. Clay, of Chesterfield County, Virginia, requesting that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 15, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presents the petition of Smith Williamson and 100 other prominent citizens of New York city, praying Congress to authorize the Secretary of War to contract with Charles Stoughton and his associates for the building of the Harlem River Canal for a sum not exceeding $1,295,000, including the right of way free to the United States Government, to be completed July 4, 1888. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of 41 citizens of Michigan, praying for the passage of the bill to tax oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a petition of dairymen and buttermakers of Macon City, Mo., and other places in that State, praying for the passage of the bill of the American Agricultural and Dairy Association, introduced by Hon. WARNER MILLER, of New York, in the Senate, and by Hon. W. L. SCOTT, of Pennsylvania, in the House of Representatives, placing the manufacture and sale of all imitations of butter under the control of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the United States, and taxing it 10 cents per pound. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL presented a petition of licensed officers of steamboats employed by the West Jersey Ferry Company, of Camden, N. J., praying for the passage of the bill providing for the refunding of moneys paid by the licensed men throughout the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8676) for the relief of Lafayette Fowler, reported it without amendment.

Mr. COLQUITT, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 279) for the relief of T. H. Triplett, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1059) to grant a pension to Joseph Romiser, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 2342) granting a pension to John D. Holden; and

A bill (H. R. 4219) granting a pension to Daniel Jacks.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, from the Committee on Finance, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 4833) relating to the taxation of fractional parts of a gallon of distilled spirits; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted to the Committee on Finance, that committee having the subject now under consideration.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5179) to prohibit the passage of local or special laws in the Territories of the United States, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1976) to provide for the survey of certain historic grounds, locations, and military works, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

NAVAL VESSELS.

Mr. HAWLEY. A letter of the Secretary of the Navy in response to a resolution of the Senate of March 5, 1886, calling for information with reference to the Boston, Chicago, Atlanta, and Dolphin, was sent to the Senate, and accompanying it were papers of considerable volume. The letter was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the papers to the Committee on Printing. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report in favor of printing the whole mass. It is not very large, not so large as I supposed originally. The total cost is $1,760. It seems to be the earnest desire of the Navy Department that all the papers shall be printed, and I submit a motion to that effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is the usual number, and I report simply a motion to print.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

Mr. HAWLEY. The joint resolution (H. Res. 183) providing for printing the first annual report of the Commissioner of Labor was referred to the Committee on Printing. I am instructed by the committee to report it favorably with certain amendments. The resolution provides for the printing of 55,000 copies and then proceeds in detail to specify 50,000. It is simply an arithmetical error. In the second section there is an amendment needed in order to provide for the wrapping of the copies for the Department of the Interior. I submit a favorable report with two amendments, and I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Printing will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2 of section 1 it is proposed to strike out, after the word "fifty," the word "five;" so as to read:

That there be printed 50,000 copies, in cloth binding, of the First Annual Report of the Commissioner of Labor; 26,000 copies for use of members of the House of Representatives, and 9,000 copies for use of members of the Senate, and 15,000 copies for the use of the Department of the Interior and the Bureau of Labor; the latter number to be wrapped for mailing in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The second amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 2 and insert the following:

That the sum of $7,415, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the cost of publication of said report, and the further sum of $275, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the cost of wrapping 15,000 copies for the Department of the Interior, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me explain the second amendment. The joint resolution, as passed by the House, appropriates $15,000. The actual cost is $18,333, and $275 more will be required for wrapping. That explains the second amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I caught the reading of the joint resolution, it gives the House 26,000 copies, the Senate 9,000, and 15,000 to the Interior Department and the Bureau of Labor.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; that is the proportion.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend so as to make the number given to the Senate 13,000, in accordance with a well-established rule of the Senate that we are to have one-half as many as the House, taking that number from those allowed to the bureau. I think that will be a better distribution.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would say on that point that the chief of the bureau has an extraordinary number of applications for this his first annual report. The subject is very interesting, and he is desirous of getting 15,000 copies, if possible, because he thinks he will have use for them. In order to gratify him I think the number is entirely reasonable. I would rather that the 4,000 additional copies for the Senate should be added to the gross number.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will then move to amend by simply making the number 13,000 copies for the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will make a change in the amount appropriated necessary.

Mr. HAWLEY. It will also make it necessary to change the gross number in the first section from 50,000 to 54,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the number for the Senate be increased to 13,000 copies. The question is on that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then the 50,000 should be changed to 54,000 copies in the first section. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amount of money necessary for the payment of the increase will have to be changed.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; that makes a change necessary in the total appropriation, which I can not figure at the moment.

Mr. COCKRELL. You can insert the amount.

Mr. HAWLEY. The press-work and paper for the additional number will have to be calculated. Let the joint resolution lie over for, say, half an hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will lie on the table for the present.

HOUSE PENSION BILLS.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1617) for the relief of George H. Laurence;
A bill (H. R. 1681) for the relief of William Hicks;
A bill (H. R. 3851) granting a pension to William P. Shelton;
A bill (H. R. 4624) for the relief of Cassius H. Robinson;
A bill (H. R. 5389) granting a pension to Ann Kinney;
A bill (H. R. 5950) granting a pension to Catharine Reisinger;
A bill (H. R. 6425) granting a pension to Jonathan S. Leuts;
A bill (H. R. 6817) granting a pension to Thomas Brown;
A bill (H. R. 6819) granting a pension to William Conner;
A bill (H. R. 6825) granting a pension to James R. Baylor;
A bill (H. R. 6832) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine Sattler;
A bill (H. R. 7169) to grant a pension to James Robinson;
A bill (H. R. 7193) granting a pension to Sarah A. Tucker;
A bill (H. R. 7234) granting a pension to Susan Hawes;
A bill (H. R. 8046) granting a pension to Erastus W. Kennedy;
A bill (H. R. 8280) granting a pension to John Patton;
A bill (H. R. 8334) for the relief of Jacob Nix; and
A bill (H. R. 8827) granting a pension to John Buchanan.

The above eighteen pension bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BROWN introduced a bill (S. 2662) in relation to the Life-Saving Service of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 2663) for the relief of James Paget; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. RANSOM introduced a bill (S. 2664) appropriating money for the completion of the public building at Greensborough, N. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

GEORGETOWN GASLIGHT COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no "concurrent or other resolutions" the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], which comes over under objection. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, submitted yesterday by Mr. VAN WYCK, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be directed to report by bill prohibiting the Washington Gaslight Company and the Georgetown Gaslight Company from consolidating with any other corporation within said District.

Also, that said committee be directed to make a similar investigation into the affairs of the Georgetown Gaslight Company as was ordered by the Senate into the affairs of the Washington Gaslight Company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] has had charge of the investigation into the gas matter under the previous resolution; and I ask that the pending resolution may lie over until he comes in.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Senator will allow me a word, we can then dispose of the resolution in a manner which will be satisfactory to the Senator from Wisconsin by a reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. INGALLS. Very well.

Mr. VAN WYCK. A word of explanation may be necessary in regard to the resolution to which the attention of the Senate has been called.

While the investigation was proceeding in regard to the affairs of the Washington Gaslight Company some suggestion was made as to the matter of the Georgetown Gaslight Company, the owners of the Georgetown company claiming that that was at present a concern which should not be interfered with. I do not say that such is not the case, but they claim that they are poor, and that they have made but little money, and that therefore they are doing as good service as could be expected. Then there is a claim on the other hand by the citizens, which is entirely different.

At this juncture of affairs it seems that the former president of the Washington Gaslight Company—Bartol, I think, is his name—has become the owner of a majority of the stock of the Georgetown Gaslight Company. In view of the fact that it is claimed by the owners of that concern to be not profitable by any means, and that now this individual with whom the citizens of Washington have had a bitter experience, and who was in charge of the other concern when, as the figures show, $2,000,000 was taken improperly from their works and upon which interest has from year to year been drawn, that Mr. Bartol should at this time purchase a majority of the stock in this crippled, poor concern in Georgetown means some wrong, some injury to some one.

It would seem that something should be done, not so much to cripple the owners of the Georgetown concern—for of that I know nothing—as to prevent any injury being done by reason of the sudden purchase of a majority of that stock by the person who inflicted so much wrong and injustice upon the citizens of Washington while he was president of the Washington Gaslight Company.

Just at this juncture, when the Committee on the District of Columbia are deliberating what they shall do, whether to reduce the price of gas or take this concern and place it in charge of the Government, so that the Government shall make the gas and furnish it to citizens of the District, this individual becomes the owner of a majority of the stock of the Georgetown company, and to many it appears that was done with a view that there should be a consolidation with the Washington Gaslight Company, or after buying the stock at par or less to at once have the stock raised to 100 per cent. above par.

As a stock-jobbing operation that would be an elegant transaction, and that is the reason, I will say to the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, why it is proposed that that committee shall be required by resolution to inquire into the affairs of the Georgetown company, with a view of discovering the object of this sudden purchase and ownership in the hands of this man, and if there be any scheme, to prevent its accomplishment. If it is thought best that Congress should seize these gas-works and that the Government should manufacture the gas, then we do not want to be met at the outset by the assertion that this man who has become the owner of a majority of the stock should be considered as an innocent purchaser. Therefore I have offered the resolution.

I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BECK. I desire——

Mr. HAWLEY. That is the same matter for which I rose.

Mr. BECK. Yesterday I gave notice that at the close of the morning business to-day I would endeavor to call up the motion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grants of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States. However, after that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] submitted a resolution looking to a change of the rules to make that character of motion debatable—a motion to reconsider. I have no objection to debate; indeed, I rather desire it, and as, perhaps, the Committee on Rules will act upon that resolution within a few days, and the railroad bill seems to be very pressing, and I see the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] watching for it now, with the consent of the Senator from Connecticut I suggest that the motion to reconsider be laid over until Friday morning, and perhaps the rule in the mean time will be agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I concur entirely.

Mr. BECK. On Friday morning, after the conclusion of the morning business, I shall endeavor to call it up.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 334) granting the title of the United States to certain lands to the county of Randolph, in the State of Illinois, on certain conditions;

A bill (H. R. 8192) to remove the political disabilities of J. R. Eggleston, of Mississippi;

A bill (H. R. 8278) for the relief of Seth M. Barton;

A bill (H. R. 5044) to prohibit book-making of any kind and pool-selling in the District of Columbia for the purpose of gaming;

A bill (H. R. 6391) to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 7083) to incorporate the trustees of the Young Woman's Christian Home in Washington, D. C.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 505) for the relief of William J. Gamble;

A bill (S. 1657) to legalize the incorporation of national trades unions;

A bill (S. 2078) for the relief of Coronna, Taussig & Co. and others; and

A bill (S. 2135) to compensate Isaiah W. Lees and H. H. Ellis, of San Francisco, for services rendered the Government.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. DOLPH. I move to take up Senate bill 2172, the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. VAN WYCK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, in the course I feel bound to pursue on this subject it pains me that I am compelled to differ with some of those with whom I am accustomed to act and in whose good judgment, patriotism, and devotion to the true interests of the people I have the utmost confidence. With them I have no quarrel, conceding to them what I claim for myself, as the guide for their conduct—their convictions as to what is best for the people. Perhaps, sir, after all this difference may result in good, as it will cause debate and discussion and a more careful examination into a question which these differences show are surrounded with difficulties of the gravest character. I proceed now to present some of the views I entertain.

Mr. President, it is my main purpose this morning to make some observations to the Senate in reference to the legal attitude which the Northern Pacific Railroad Company bears to the United States in regard to these lands. But before I commence that I desire to fortify, in addition to what I said yesterday evening, the position taken by me in a speech which I made a few days ago as to the value of this land grant. I read for that purpose, on page 303 of the appendix to the Congressional Globe, second session Forty-first Congress, from the speech of Senator Casserly, of California:

> Senators now are well informed as to the nature of the work to be undertaken by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. Senators know—they can not pretend any ignorance—that for the length of it it is the easiest road to build in the whole world of railroads. Compared with any other great railway, there is upon its line less heavy work, there are fewer broad rivers to be bridged, fewer high summits to be overcome, fewer wide valleys or deep chasms to be spanned or filled. Beyond this, and much more than this, its route lies through a finer and more fertile country, taken all together, than is traversed by any other railroad line of anything like the same length in the United States or on the globe. All this is well understood. No one pretends to doubt it. In all this debate no question has been made of it by any friend of this measure.

I read another extract from the same speech. Mr. Casserly, after quoting from Commissioner Wilson's report the same extract which I read a few days ago, continues:

> Sir, it is not much to say that no such grant was ever before made by our Government. None such has been made within the last one hundred and fifty or two hundred years by any government in Europe to any private corporation, nor indeed to any grantee. No emperor or minister there to-day, however secure his power, would venture on such a spoliation of his country. Considering the wide difference between to-day in the United States, with all its golden promise, and a hundred years ago in India, I greatly doubt whether the grant made in 1864 to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company is not equal in all real elements of wealth, prosperity, and power to the vast Indian possessions held in the latter part of the last century by the East India Company, the mightiest chartered company the world has ever seen, or I hope will ever see again.

With these authorities in support of my position taken in the speech I delivered on Friday last, that this is a most magnificent grant, an enormous grant largely more in value than the cost of the road, I proceed now to discuss as best I may the legal relations of this company to the Government and people of the United States.

It has not been proven, but it has been assumed throughout this debate, that by the act of 1864 making this grant a present vested title passed to the railroad company on the mere passage of the act without anything being done by the railroad company, and that the conditions annexed were what are called in law conditions-subsequent, and that this title and interest and estate can not be divested except by some affirmative action on the part of the Government.

I do not believe that that is the true position which this railroad company occupies towards these lands. I shall read from its charter those provisions which bear upon that question. I undertake to say that to the common understanding of a plain citizen of this country the meaning of those provisions is plainly this: "You build the road first in sections of 25 miles, and when you make such construction according to the terms of the charter the United States will grant you certain lands described in the act, and if you do not do these things the land remains, as it now is, the property of the people of the United States."

It is true that at the time the act was passed, the 2d day of July, 1864, the people of the United States were the owners in absolute fee-simple in their absolute right of all the magnificent domain which lies between Lake Superior and Puget Sound except the very small portion of it which they had sold to private persons. I wish the Senate and the country to bear in mind as the initial point in this controversy, that we start out with the absolute certainty that the United States was the owner of this land and owns it now, unless they have in some lawful way parted with their title. With this starting point I propose to examine the means and the processes by which it is claimed the United States have lost it. It is claimed that this language in section 3 divests the title of the United States and vests it in this company, without any act whatever being done by the company:

That there be, and hereby is, granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company—

Certain alternate sections of land. It is claimed that because the words "that there be, and hereby is, granted" to the company this land or an interest in it, that not only an interest, for I agree that an interest passed, but that the estate and title and ownership of this property were granted to this company. But let us see what were the other provisions of the act. I have just read from section 3. I now read from section 4 of the act.

That whenever said Northern and Pacific Railroad Company shall have 25 consecutive miles of any portion of said railroad and telegraph line ready for the service contemplated, the President of the United States shall appoint three commissioners to examine the same, who shall be paid a reasonable compensation for their services by the company, to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior; and if it shall appear that 25 consecutive miles of said road and telegraph line have been completed in a good, substantial, and workmanlike manner, as in all other respects required by this act—

That must not be forgotten. It must not only be built in a workmanlike and substantial manner, but "as in all other respects required by this act," including the time within which they were compelled to make the construction as prescribed in the eighth section of the act.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that it was not an unlimited license to build a railroad. It was not an unlimited grant that they might build the railroad at any time and at any place they saw proper. They were to build it not only in a workmanlike and substantial manner but "in all respects as required by the provisions of the act," and when they did that, what was next to be done? I will proceed with the reading of the section. When that was done on 25 miles, commissioners are to be appointed, and when they report to the President the facts, then—

Patents of lands, as aforesaid, shall be issued to said company, confirming to said company the right and title to said lands situated opposite to and coterminous with said completed section of said road. And from time to time, whenever 25 additional consecutive miles shall have been constructed, completed, and in readiness as aforesaid, and verified by said commissioners to the President of the United States, then patents shall be issued to said company conveying the additional sections of land as aforesaid, and so on as fast as every 25 miles of said road is completed as aforesaid.

They were required by the charter, by the provision which I have read, to complete 25 miles of the road before any patent could issue. What was the object of that patent? Was it simply a certificate that they had complied with the conditions of the grant? If that was its purpose the statute would have used other language. It uses in one place, it is true, the word "confirming," but it uses twice the word "convey." How do you convey land from one party to another? What is the meaning of a "conveyance" in its technical and legal sense?

If the title had already passed by the statute there was nothing left to "convey," nothing upon which the patent could operate. Land itself can not be conveyed in the sense of transportation, because it is immovable property. There was and can be no taking up of the land from its then present situs and delivering it to the railroad company by manual tradition. So conveying the land means only conveying the title to the land, the absolute interest in the land, the proprietorship in the land. If it had been the meaning of the statute that upon its mere passage this ownership, this title vested in the railroad company, all that part of section 4 which I have read is simply nonsense.

The word "convey" would perform no function whatever, and would, though twice repeated, be utterly without force. Nor is there any use for a patent, which the statute requires to be issued, if the title had already vested in the company. It was not necessary as an evidence of title, for that evidence under that view was contained in the statutes of Congress and is the highest and most unimpeachable of all evidence. Besides, the use of the word "convey" is not accidental, for it will be seen as we go on it was reduplicated, repeated again and again and in a connection clearly showing that it was meant to be an operative and effective word in the disposition of the land. The position taken by the railroad company nullifies all this, and strikes from the statute nearly all of section 4.

I proceed with the reading of that section:

Provided, That no more than ten sections of land per mile, as said road shal be completed, shall be conveyed—

The second time using the word "convey"— to said company for all that part of said railroad lying east of the western boundary of the State of Minnesota, until the whole of said railroad shall be finished and in good running order, as a first-class railroad, from the place of beginning on Lake Superior to the western boundary of Minnesota.

What does this language mean, unless it means that the first words in the third section, "that there be, and hereby is, granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company" this land, did not actually convey the title to the land, but amounted only to an agreement or a promise to convey, and that, too, upon the terms mentioned in the statute? The portion of the statute which I have read indicates not only the acts to be performed by the railroad company, but the time within which performance was to take place, as the conditions on which that promise of the United States to convey shall be performed. But that is not all. There is another provision in the fourth section which is utterly inconsistent with the idea that there was a present grant of the title to the land. It is this:

Provided, also, That lands shall not be granted under the provisions of this act on account of any railroad, or part thereof, constructed at the date of the passage of this act.

What does that mean? It is in the future, "land shall not be granted under the provisions of this act." If it had been the meaning of the act that the grant had already been made, that a title had already been vested, the language would have been, "that no part of the lands hereby granted shall inure to the benefit" of the railroad company until such and such conditions were complied with.

Against one single clause in the statute, one single phrase artfully introduced in the third section of the act by, as will be seen hereafter, the persons interested in the scheme, I have all these instances which indicate beyond controversy and doubt that it was the intention of Congress that no title should pass except upon conditions-precedent to be performed before the title passed; that is, that Congress did not mean to give the land till the road was first built.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator holds, as I understand him, that the condition in the grant to the effect that the road shall be commenced within a certain time and shall be completed within a certain other time, is a condition-precedent and not a condition-subsequent. Is that the Senator's position?

Mr. GEORGE. I will explain when you get through. Are you through?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That is all now.

Mr. GEORGE. I hold that every single one of the conditions mentioned in the act is a condition-precedent.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Now, one other question.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me get through on this point. I admit that upon the completion of any 25 miles of the road within the time prescribed and fixed, or, to use the language of the statute, "in all respects required by this act," then the right of the company to demand from the Government of the United States a patent for that 25 miles is complete; and when the patent is issued the company gets a good and valid title to the 25 miles, which will not be divested by any subsequent default of the company in complying with the other terms of the act.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator from Mississippi has answered that in his opinion all the conditions of this grant, be they many or few, were conditions-precedent.

Mr. GEORGE. Every one.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. And that no one of them is a condition-subsequent?

Mr. GEORGE. Not one.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Now one other question. I also understand the Senator from Mississippi to hold that the terms employed in the granting section of this act, "be and is hereby granted," are not terms of present grant?

Mr. GEORGE. I hold that.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I inquire of the Senator from Mississippi if it is not the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided over and over again in innumerable cases that those very words, the very terms employed here, are words of present grant, and that they passed the title at once; and whatever might follow in a grant of that kind by way of condition is a condition-subsequent and not a condition-precedent, the failure to perform which on the part of the company does not vest the title, but divests the title?

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is partly right but mostly wrong. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided, as he says, over and over again, without a single exception in the cases so far as I know, that the words used in this third section, "that there be, and hereby is, granted," when taken alone, are words conveying a title and interest in præsenti and an estate, but the court has decided also, as any court was bound to decide, that although these words may be used, if there be other language in the statute which shows that it did not mean to convey a present interest by the use of these words, then there is no such meaning attached to them. In other words, the ruling of the Supreme Court is that these words taken alone, without qualification, without explanation, without anything in other parts of the statute putting upon them a different meaning and construction, do mean what the Senator from Oregon insists they mean.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Now another question——

Mr. GEORGE. Let me get through with this first. I admit that by these words in the third section, "that there be, and hereby is, granted," a good present interest and title would be vested in this company subject only to be defeated by the failure to comply with the conditions-subsequent if no other words were used in the statute which control and change the meaning of these words. I hold in my hand a case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, Rice vs. The Railroad Company (1 Black), in which the very same argument was made in behalf of the railroad company that is now made by the Senator from Oregon, namely, that the use of these words did convey the title to the company, and in which the court decided adversely to this view, as I shall show by reading:

It is contended by the defendants on this branch of the case that the act of Congress in question was and is, per se, a grant in præsenti to the territory of all the lands therein described, and that a present right estate and interest in the same passed to the territory by the terms of the act. Reliance for the support of that proposition is chiefly placed upon the language of the first section. Omitting all such parts of it as are unimportant in this investigation, it provides "that there shall be, and is," hereby granted to the Territory of Minnesota for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad * * * every alternate section of land, &c."

In the present tense, as it is in this act—

The very language used in this third section upon which I am commenting. The court further say:

Standing alone, the clause furnishes strong evidence to refute the proposition of the defendants, that a beneficial interest passed in præsenti to the Territory; because it is distinctly provided that the lands granted shall be held by the Territory for a declared use and purpose.

Just like this act, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad—exactly the same language in both. And as in that case the court found in this language an intent on the part of Congress to limit and modify the meaning of the words "that there shall be, and is hereby, granted," so in this case we have the same intent expressed in the same language, and which, added to the language in the fourth section I have commented on, makes the conclusion irresistible that no present estate is granted to this railroad company. But then the court go on to find other provisions in the act which negative this intent, and among them is the very provision upon which I am commenting in this statute:

Provision is also made—

Says the court—

for the issuing of a patent for a corresponding quantity of the lands when the Secretary of the Interior should be satisfied that 20 miles are completed, and so on till the whole was finished; and it also provides that if the road is not completed in ten years no further sale shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States.

With this authority I insist that I have made good the position, that this grant is on condition-precedent and that no interest passed to the railroad company till they had first strictly complied with all the terms of the charter.

Mr. President, I proceed to make the argument still stronger.

I call the attention of the Senator from Oregon and the attention of the Senate to this fundamental canon in the construction of statutes and also in the construction of all written instruments, namely, that you can not select one phrase here and another there and from them deduce the intention of the maker and the meaning of the law or other instrument. You must consider the whole and every part of the act, the particular word in question, and also the context, and then you must look at the general purpose and intent of the whole statute in order to ascertain the meaning of the Legislature.

I admit that in the first line of the third section there is the phrase "that there be, and is hereby, granted" to this railroad company this land; but in the fourth section it is provided that the railroad shall not have any land, not one acre, until it builds 25 miles of railroad, and then when it builds that 25 miles the Government is to do something else, not that upon the completion of the road the title of the company shall become complete without any action on the part of the Government—nothing of that sort—but when the 25 miles are completed the Government shall perform another act, and what is that act? It is the only act known in the legal language of the present day for the conveying of the title of real estate from one party to another.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. DOLPH. Right upon the point to which the Senator is directing his attention, I wish to say that I agree with him, and of course he must agree with me, that the language "that there be, and is hereby, granted" certain alternate sections of public land was language which in itself would make a grant in præsenti.

Mr. GEORGE. Taken alone.

Mr. DOLPH. Taken alone. Every lawyer must agree that an act of Congress, like any written instrument, is to be taken up by the four corners and examined together, and the intent is to be arrived at from all its provisions. However, it would require very positive provisions in an act which contained words absolutely making a grant in præsenti to show that that was not the intention of Congress.

Now, I come right down to his point as to the language of section 4, premising first that United States land-patents, as have been decided by the United States Supreme Court, are of two kinds. One is a patent which conveys the title like a patent for a pre-emption or a homestead claim, or for lands purchased at private entry, where the title is transferred with the patent. Another class of patents are patents which are issued upon a grant in præsenti like this, or on a grant like the donation law of Oregon and Washington Territory, a law which was passed on the 27th of September, 1850, under which the courts have uniformly held that the settler under that act took by the act a grant in præsenti, and whenever he performed the conditions his title related back to the commencement of his settlement.

Mr. GEORGE. Before the settler there had performed the conditions necessary to get title, did he not have to settle on the land and improve it; did he not have to stay there?

Mr. DOLPH. If the Senator will allow me, I say these patents are of two kinds. It was held in the case of the donation law that when the settler performed the condition his title related to the commencement of his settlement; he had the legal title under the decision of the court long before his patent issued, and to-day one-half the donation claims in Oregon which were settled before 1850 are held without patents having been issued, and they or portions of them have been transferred one hundred times or more, and the parties are held to have a legal title in every case.

In this case patents perform the same office. What is that? They are evidence, convenient evidence I may say, after they are issued; and unless set aside by the courts they are conclusive evidence that the condition of the grant has been performed, and therefore convenient evidence and the best evidence after they are issued of the title of the grantee.

The provision of section 4 is:

That whenever said "Northern Pacific Railroad Company" shall have 25 consecutive miles of any portion of said railroad and telegraph line ready for the service contemplated the President of the United States shall appoint three commissioners to examine the same.

Mr. GEORGE. I have read all that.

Mr. DOLPH. It continues:

And if it shall appear that 25 consecutive miles of said road and telegraph line have been completed in a good, substantial, and workmanlike manner, as in all other respects required by this act, the commissioners shall so report to the President of the United States, and patents of lands as aforesaid shall be issued to said company—

What?—

confirming to said co mpany the right and title to said lands, situated opposite to, and coterminous with, said completed section of said road.

A confirmation presumes a previous title. That is all I have to say.

Mr. GEORGE. Why not read the balance, as you have read that much? You may as well consume half an hour of my time by reading the balance.

Mr. DOLPH. If the Senator desires——

Mr. GEORGE. I do especially. As you have used so much of my time, I do especially desire it.

Mr. DOLPH. I will read anything the Senator from Mississippi desires.

Mr. GEORGE. Read the balance.

Mr. DOLPH. I will.

Confirming to said company the right and title to said lands, situated opposite to and coterminous with said completed section of said road; and, from time to time, whenever 25 additional consecutive miles have been constructed, completed, and in readiness as aforesaid, and verified by said commissioners to the President of the United States, then patents shall be issued to said company conveying the additional sections.

Mr. GEORGE. Conveying.

Mr. DOLPH. The word "conveying" is used once and "confirming" twice.

Mr. GEORGE. Go on, and you will find "conveying" again.

Mr. DOLPH. You will find "conveying"——

Mr. GEORGE. It says:

Conveying the additional sections of land as aforesaid, and so on as fast.

Now, go on a little further, and you will find "convey" used twice:

That not more than ten sections of land per mile, as said road shall be completed, shall be conveyed to said company.

Now, Mr. President, after all, what does the argument of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] amount to? Just simply fortifying—for which I am very much obliged to him—the argument which I was making. Knowing that this act, like the settlers' act in Oregon, required a precedent condition to be performed before the title vested, does the Senator say that under that act to which he has called our attention any settler could publish in a paper or set up on a tree at a cross-roads his intention to settle on, say, section 15 of a certain township and range, and that on that there was an estate vested in him, to be divested only on his failure afterward to settle and cultivate according to law? On the contrary, that act required the settler to do and perform the things required by law as a condition to his title to the land, and the fact of having in pursuance of law performed the condition mentioned in the law by which he was entitled to a patent, the mere performance of it gave him a right to the patent just like the performance of these conditions here gave the railroad company a right to its patent. It does not weaken the argument but fortifies it, because I want gentlemen to understand that when a grant is made either by deed between private persons or by statute on behalf of the Government upon conditions-precedent, when the conditions are complied with the grantee has a right to demand a perfect and good title. The settlers' act and the present statute are on all fours, exactly alike in principle, and I am obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to it.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Will the Senator allow me——

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir; I can not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The Senator from Mississippi declines to yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall never get through in the world if I yield continually.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I only want to ask——

Mr. GEORGE. I would have to reply, and I would rather go on now that we understand the matter.

The statute said to this company, "When you build the first 25 miles you shall have a patent for the lands," not only confirming in the first place but conveying title. I say the building the road was a condition-precedent in this case and that is the only case now before the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I ask the Senator once more if he will allow me——

Mr. GEORGE. Let me go on.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. His position is so remarkable——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi declines to yield the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. I decline to yield unless I make a misstatement of fact, and then I should like to have it corrected.

Here are these provisions of the statute, one of which I admit standing alone would make a grant of a present estate, the other three that I have read to the Senate, all based on an idea inconsistent with the words used first, and under which no estate passed until a subsequent act was performed by the Government, which act could only be performed after the conditions had been complied with on the part of the grantee.

If we had no other rule to go by except to say that in the third section there was a provision of a certain character and that in the fourth section there were provisions contrary to it, and that there was a repugnancy between these sections; and if there was no way of reconciling these inconsistent provisions we would in the very last resort go to this—I am not obliged to do it, but I could do it—that the last word in the statute, just like the last statute made, is supposed to speak the last mind of the lawgiver, and prevail over previous provisions of the statute. But I am not obliged to resort to that. I rely on the whole scheme of the law. I call the attention of the Senate and the attention of the country to the fact that the whole scheme was certainly not to vest an empire in a railroad company by an act of Congress before the company had paid a dollar into its treasury or done a single act required by its charter, leaving it only to subsequent events to divest it. But suppose it to be doubtful, are we to construe this statute in favor of the corporation or of the Government? I read from the very same case that I read from just now the rule of law which answers that question, and one which the Supreme Court invoked in that case and applied for the purpose of protecting the Government against a corporation:

Legislative grants—

Said the Supreme Court in that very case—

undoubtedly must be interpreted, if practicable, so as to effect the intention of the grantor; but if the words are ambiguous, the true rule of construction is the reverse of that assumed by the defendants—

The railroad company, and the reverse of that assumed by Senators on this floor—

as is well settled by repeated decisions of this court. (Charles River Bridge vs. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet., 544.)

Most of the cases bearing upon the point previously decided were very carefully reviewed on that occasion, and, consequently, it is not necessary to refer to them. Judge Story dissented from the views of the majority of the judges, but the opinion of the court has since that time been constantly followed. Later decisions of this court regard the rule as settled, that public grants are to be construed strictly, and that nothing passes by implication.

Then, referring to some other cases, the court concludes:

Taken together, these several cases may be regarded as establishing the general doctrine that, whenever privileges are granted to a corporation, and the grant comes under revision in the courts, such privileges are to be strictly construed against the corporation, and in favor of the public, and that nothing passes but what is granted in clear and explicit terms.

Now, if there is any doubt upon the matter, upon whose side does the doubt go, that of the corporation or of the people? I will read an authority on that point, a literal extract made by me this morning. I will bring up the book, if gentlemen desire it, from the Library. It is from Slidell vs. Grandjean (111 United States Reports, pages 437 and 438) where one of these land grants was up from Louisiana before the Supreme Court of the United States, and the court used this language:

It is also a familiar rule of construction that when a statute operates as a grant of public property to an individual or the relinquishment of a public interest, and there is doubt as to the meaning of its terms, or as to its general purpose, that construction should be adopted which will support the claim of the Government rather than that of the individual. Nothing can be inferred against the State. As a reason for this rule it is often stated that such acts are usually drawn by interested parties; and they are presumed to claim all they are entitled to.

Especially is this so of a railroad company. That is not in the opinion. That is a comment of mine. They always presume to claim all they can get, and more.

The rule has been adopted and followed by this court in many instances in the construction of statutes of this description.

Then the court cites cases, one of which is the Charles River Bridge, in 11 Peters, pages 420–536, very familiar to all lawyers; another one in 23 Howard, pages 66–88, and another one in 18 Wallace, page 206.

The rule is a wise one; it serves to defeat any purpose concealed by the use of terms, to accomplish something not apparent on the face of the act, and thus sanctions only open dealings with legislative bodies.

That is the law of this land, the law recognized in England and brought over the Atlantic by our forefathers, recognized in every State of the Union; and there is not a single dissenting opinion even in a court of piepoudre anywhere in the United States, or where the English language is spoken, which contravenes the justice and fairness of the rule which I have read to the Senate.

Then, sir, if there be in an act drawn up by the railroad company itself (as such acts often are, as stated by the Supreme Court) one word, one phrase only in a part of the statute which indicates that Congress was guilty of the immense folly, if not of the great crime, of parting with a present interest in a domain as large (as I stated the other day) as Indiana and Ohio—I say if there should be only one phrase in a statute indicating that purpose, and there be three others indicating a contrary intention, then, according to this rule which I have read, which is without exception wherever the English language is spoken and wherever civilization and law prevail, you must decide in favor of the people against the schemes of men who prepare bills to be passed by a legislature ignorant of their hidden and secret meaning.

Then, Mr. President, if that be so, where is the claim of this company? The statute says under that construction, "do this according to this condition, according to this act, and then we will give you a title to the land." Understand I do not deny that the railroad company had an interest in the land. It had no title, no estate in the land, but a claim on the Government as under an executory contract, that when it complied with the conditions Congress prescribed then it was entitled to the land. Now, what right have they to come here and say we should give them land they never have earned by a compliance with the law under which they set up their claim? On this view of the case, and which I have demonstrated is the correct one, the company's title falls to the ground, and if we allow them to have the land it is a pure gift, made now with our eyes open, to this company of this immense empire of the public domain.

But, Mr. President, I will assume for the purposes of this argument that that was wrong. I will go upon the theory on which the Senators from Oregon themselves go, and for the purpose of showing that under no state of affairs, under no construction of this statute, has this railroad company any right to the bounty it demands of the Government of the United States. I will assume that this grant was on a condition-subsequent; and there is very little difference in common honesty whether you take it one way or the other when you look at the general and broad result, very little difference whether the one or the other be the rule, because on either theory the grantee, the railroad company, can not honestly or legally claim the whole land unless it complied with the condition of the grant as prescribed in the act.

Now, let us see what interest was passed in this land on the theory of the railroad company. Something must be done, say the company, in order to divest the interest of the railroad company, and we must proceed upon the theory that estates which have been once vested ought not to be divested except in pursuance of law and all that sort of fine learning which the advocates of the railroad company so bewilder us with.

I heard stated not long ago on this floor a proposition of this sort, and a very remarkable one, that the common law abhors a forfeiture. Certainly it abhors forfeitures when they result from a breach of contract between individuals, but the common law never speaks against a statute. To quote the language of a great Mississippi judge, the statute when it comes, comes as a strong man and destroys all before him. You can not construe a statute so as to do away with its meaning upon any idea that the common law which it breaks down and abolishes abhors that which the statute prescribes shall be done. That is the law of this land. Let the common law be what it may, when the statute speaks the common law must fall before it.

But, Mr. President, assuming that on a breach of the condition subsequent an entry and all that sort of thing must be made in order to divest the title of the railroad company, what does that amount to? Senators are complaining that we are insisting on a technical forfeiture here and not on just and substantial rights and against substantial wrongs on the part of the railroad company. All the people's rights, they say, rest on a mere technicality, nothing just, nothing substantial. But, sir, what is the doctrine about entry on which they so much rely? All their claim is based on the fact that there has been no entry on the part of the Government of the United States to defeat this estate of the railroad company. What is that but the merest quibble, the most contemptible technicality that was ever introduced into a discussion for the purpose of defeating the rights of a great people and securing a grant of an immense property to a defaulting corporation? What is this idea that the grantor in case of a breach of condition-subsequent must make an entry based upon? It is based upon another rule of law which has been exploded in England for over three hundred years and never had any force in the United States.

The origin of this rule was at a time when men did not know how to read or write, when deeds were unknown, when estates passed from one to another orally. In that condition of affairs they had what was called livery of seizin; that is, the grantor and grantee went on the land and the grantor took up a tuft of grass and handed it to the grantee. That was livery of seizin, and that was done in the presence of the neighbors, the vicinage, and that was all done for the purpose of notoriety, and that the feudal lord might know upon whom to call for service. The whole origin of this doctrine of a re-entry by the grantor on condition-subsequent broken is based on that exploded practice of the common law not at all necessary since the statute of Charles II, which required all conveyances of an interest in land to be in writing. It was held that no title could vest to an estate of freehold without seizin on the part of the grantee. And when deeds came to be made on condition-subsequent it was necessary in order to convey title that an entry whereby seizin was acquired should be made by the grantee. Then when the condition was broken it was held that inasmuch as the grantee's title commenced by entry and seizin, it could not be divested in any less solemn manner; and on that grew up the idea that on condition broken the estate still remained with the grantee until entry was made by the grantor. But as a grant of a term for years only, even it were for nine hundred and ninety-nine years, could commence without entry and seizin, so it was held that on breach of condition in that case no entry by the grantor was necessary, and that the estate determined ipso facto on the breach and was revested in the grantor.

It is thus seen that this doctrine of the necessity for an entry on breach of condition-subsequent arose only from the supposed necessity for entry and seizin by the grantee in the creation of the estate, and was founded on it, and that whenever there was no necessity for such entry and seizin by the grantee in the first instance there was equally no necessity for entry on breach of the condition in order to revest the estate in the grantor.

I have a citation here to illustrate this, and I will read it, not to enlighten the learned lawyers of the Senate, for they all know that, but I am arguing now for the American people; I am trying to let them know by what miserable technicalities based on exploded theories of the common law their right to an empire is to be lost and conveyed to a railroad company. Judge Kent (volume 4, page 128), speaking of these conditions, says:

There is this further distinction to be noticed between a condition annexed to an estate for years and one annexed to an estate of freehold—

You must remember an estate for years is even one for nine hundred and ninety-nine years. An estate is of freehold even if it is just for the life of the party—that in the former case the estate ipso facto ceases as soon as the condition is broken; whereas, in the latter case, the breach of the condition does not cause the cesser of the estate, without an entry or claim for that purpose. It was a rule of the common law that when an estate commenced by livery (of seizin) it could not be determined (or ended) before entry.

And Cruise says that the reason of this is—because the solemnity of a feoffment with livery of seizin can only be defeated by an act of equal notoriety. (See 1 Greenleaf's Cruise, page 505.)

It is thus proven that this doctrine of an entry or some act equivalent to it is based on the exploded idea of livery of seizin, a performance which I will venture to say has never taken place on the American continent since the first settler who bought a tract of land from a drunken Indian and took a tuft of grass as an evidence of the conveyance.

This old doctrine of livery and seizen went to this extent until the statute of uses was passed, that though you had the fee you could not convey a perfect title to the land by writing only. There had to be also seizin on the part of the grantee, or, as the old law books say, juris et seisinæ conjunctio, union of right and seizin before there was title. From all that old black-letter learning comes, as I have said, this doctrine of entry on condition-subsequent broken. Holding that entry and seizin were necessary to create the estate, they logically held that the same acts were necessary to defeat it.

It so happened that a celebrated case came before the Supreme Court when Chief-Justice Marshall was presiding, and a lawyer took it into his head that he would defeat a grant made by the State of Virginia in Kentucky on this old common-law idea that there was no title until there was an actual seizin, but he failed, as I will show.

Now, if I make out, as I will make out beyond all controversy or dispute, that seizin is not now essential to the perfecting of a right under a grant from the United States, then standing on that old law that wherever seizin is not necessary to commence an estate, entry is not necessary to defeat it, I have made the claim of the railroad company in this case so thin and nebulous, so thoroughly insubstantial and technical, that it will be difficult for a man of ordinary understanding to comprehend it.

I was going on to say that livery of seizin was all a humbug in this country, especially when applied to public grants, grants by the Government, and grants of wild and unappropriated empires where there was not a white man in the world to be present to witness the livery of seizin. Suppose there had been an undertaking to make livery of seizin out in this great northwestern country; it would have been a farce. Now see what Judge Story said on that subject in the case to which I have referred, namely, Green vs. Liter, in 8 Cranch, page 229. That was the case where a writ of right was brought to recover a large tract of land granted by the State of Virginia in the State of Kentucky while Kentucky was part of that State, and the defense was that there had been no entry, no livery of seizin, no taking in the old barbarous law language of the esplees; and therefore, that, it being a rule of the common law that entry must happen as a condition-precedent to the maintaining of the writ of right, the demandant must go out of court. It was well settled by the common law that in ordinary cases of grants between private persons he must go out because in actions of ejectment and other possessory actions the question was simply as to the possession, but in the writ of right the question was as to the mere right which never was complete without actual or legal seizin.

Let us see how that worked out, how that lawyer was defeated in the Supreme Court of the United States who brought up that old black-letter learning to defeat the title of a man who had got title by patent from the State of Virginia to an immense land grant in the State of Kentucky, and which he had never seen, never been within 500 miles of it.

It is clear—

Says Justice Story, in the case to which I have referred—by the whole current of authority, that actual seizin, or seizin in deed, is, at the common law, necessary to maintain a writ of right. Nor is this peculiar to actions on the mere right. It equally applies to writs of entry; and the language of the court, in both cases, is, that the demandant, or his ancestor, was, within the time of limitation, seized in his demesne as of fee, &c., taking the esplees, &c. It is highly probable that the foundation of this rule was laid in the earliest rudiments of titles at the common law. It is well known that in ancient times no deed or charter was necessary to convey a fee-simple. The title, the full and perfect dominion, was conveyed by a mere livery of seizin in the presence of the vicinage. It was the notoriety of this ceremony, performed in the presence of his peers, that gave the tenant his feudal investiture of the inheritance. Deeds and charters of feoffment were of a later age; and were held not to convey the estate itself, but only to evidence the nature of the conveyance.

The conveyance was by livery of seizin, and the pedis possessio was the evidence of it. That was the old rule.

The solemn act of livery of seizin was absolutely necessary to produce a perfect title, or, as Fleta calls it, juris et seisinæ conjunctio. But, whatever may be its origin, the rule as to the actual seizin has long since become an inflexible doctrine of the common law.

It must be inflexible if at this date it is to operate so as to deprive the Government of the United States of this land. Then the court goes on to show that a great many things in the line of this actual seizin were dispensed with. For instance, if there was danger in going on the land, a man might go in sight of it and make a claim, for, says Mr. Justice Story, using the old law Latin, "Lex non cogit seu ad vana aut impossibilia." The law compels no man to perform an impossibility.

But I come now to the very point in controversy here. Says Justice Story:

No livery of seizin is necessary to perfect a title by letters patent.

The title commenced here when the company had a patent.

The grantee, in such case, takes by matter of record—

The grantee, in this case, takes by matter of record the rolls of Parliament, the highest record known in England, or the rolls of the Congress of the United States, the highest evidence here—

The grantee, in such case, takes by matter of record; and the law deems the grant of record of equal notoriety with an actual tradition of the land in the view of the vicinage. The contrary is the fact as to feoffments. The deed is inoperative without livery of seizin.

That is a deed between two parties and not of record—a mere matter in pais.

This difference alone would seem to carry a pretty strong implication that actual seizin passed by operation of law, on a patent from the Crown, for it is the union of a right and seizin that constitutes a perfect title; and when once the law has declared a title perfect, it must include everything necessary to produce that effect. Accordingly, we find it expressly held in Barwick's case (5 Co., 94) that letters patent under that great seal do amount to a livery in law.

And so all the way through. I will read another extract showing another ground for the position I take. In that case, as I have intimated, as in this, the grant was of wild and uninhabited land, and the court in the following clear and expressive language shows the folly of applying this exploded principle of entry and seizin to such a case. The extract will be found in 8 Cranch, page 249:

And this leads us to say that even if, at common law, an actual pedis possessio, followed by an actual perception of the profits, were necessary to maintain a writ of right, which we do not admit, the doctrine would be inapplicable to the waste and vacant lands of our country. The common law in many cases dispenses with such a rule; and the reason of the rule itself ceases when applied to a mere wilderness. The object of the law in requiring actual seizin was to evince notoriety of title to the neighborhood and the consequent burdens of feudal duties. In the simplicity of ancient times there were no means of ascertaining titles but by visible seizin, and, indeed, there was no other mode between subjects (private persons) of passing title, but livery of the land itself by the symbolical delivery of turf and twig. The moment that a tenant was seized he had a perfect investiture, and, if ousted, could maintain his action in the realty, although he had not been long enough in possession even to touch the esplees. The very object of the rule was notoriety to prevent frauds upon the land [lord!] and upon the other tenants. But in a mere uncultivated country, in wild and impenetrable woods, in the sullen and solitary haunts of beasts of prey—what notoriety could an entry, a gathering of a twig or acorn, convey to civilized man at a distance of hundreds of miles? The reason of the rule could not apply to such a state of things, and cessante ratione, cessat ipsa lex.

I have other places marked here which explain this doctrine fully, but these are enough. The doctrine thus announced by the Supreme Court of the United States by that great judge was that there was no livery of seizin required, there was no entry required, in cases of grants like the one before us, and the doctrine I have read from the other books is that when no entry was required to create the estate re-entry is not required on breach of a condition-subsequent to revest the title in the grantor. And it is admitted on all sides that the passage of an act of forfeiture is but a substitute for an act of entry; and of course if no entry is required no act is required. But, if it be deemed as still necessary, we can all see upon what an unsubstantial and shadowy ground the railroad company places its rights, namely, our failure hitherto to pass such an act as the equivalent of and substitute for entry.

But passing from that, see what next comes. It is said that the decisions in Schulenberg vs. Harriman and Van Wyck vs. Knevals conclude the Government in this case. I have heard it asserted here for four years that these cases decided this doctrine, and I presume that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] will get up now and say they do, and that it is necessary as a substitute for entry that Congress should pass some law asserting its claim. Is that your position? [Addressing Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon.] You do not dissent. There is no such doctrine as that announced in that case.

I have heard it said that we had lost by our failure to act, and that the Government of the United States could never assert its claim to this forfeited land unless Congress should first pass an act declaring this forfeiture. Now let us see how much the Supreme Court said, and that in a case where it was not necessary to say anything at all about it, where the United States was not a party and therefore could not have been concluded by the judgment of the court. Says the Supreme Court:

> If the grant be a public one it must be asserted by judicial proceedings authorized by law, the equivalent of an inquest of office at common law, finding the fact of forfeiture and adjudging the restoration of the estate on that ground, or—
> "Or"—
> or there must be some legislative assertion. (Schulenberg vs. Harriman, 21 Wall., page 63.)

That is all. And gentlemen forget in their quoting of this case, the first part which I have read, some "judicial proceedings authorized by law," and confine themselves wholly to the last part of the proposition, the alternate one, the "legislative assertion"—one or the other. Of course the first part is a very clear proposition. The United States can only act by some officer. Although the thirty-eight States united have over fifty million of people, they can not perform a governmental act except by the hand of somebody authorized by law to act for them, and, of course, in a settlement of title it ought to be by judicial act.

According to that decision nothing more was necessary than for the Attorney-General of the United States the first time there was a forfeiture to have commenced proceedings by a bill in equity to remove a cloud on the title or an action of ejectment where these parties actually held the land by actual pedis possessio in violation of the grant. He is authorized and required by law to bring all suits that are necessary to effect the purpose of vindicating the rights of the United States.

You may ask me if I am in favor of the passage of this bill when judicial proceedings will do. I answer, yes; either will do; and as the executive department for all these long years has not asserted the rights of the United States to this forfeited land, and out of deference to precedent and to Congress still declines to act, then I propose, so far as in me lies, to aid and assist in making that assertion.

Now we come to the other case in which my friend from Nebraska figured, Van Wyck vs. Knevals; and it is claimed that that settles it. When I look into that case I find the very same language I have read from Schulenberg vs. Harriman:

> If the whole of the proposed road has not been completed, any forfeiture consequent thereon can be asserted only by the grantor, the United States, through judicial proceedings, or through the action of Congress. (Van Wyck vs. Knevals, 106 U. S., 369.)

And yet we have heard over and over again that because Congress had not passed some act on this subject there had been a waiver of the forfeiture. But there are other things claimed to have been decided by these cases which I will notice now. I asked the Senator from Oregon if there was any other case besides these two on which he claimed that there was an estoppel or waiver. He gave me no other case. He claimed that under Van Wyck vs. Knevals and Schulenberg vs. Harriman it had been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that a performance of the condition at any time, though after the time prescribed in the charter was a sufficient performance. I say that there is no such doctrine and could not have been unless the Supreme Court had undertaken to do what that court I hope will never assume to do—legislate, make law instead of declaring what the law is.

There is a phrase used in the case of Van Wyck vs. Knevals of this sort:

> Assuming that the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad, with which the company's road connected, was not, as averred by the complainant, a branch of the Union Pacific Railroad, and that, therefore, the company's proposed road was not entirely completed, the fact remains that the company constructed a portion of the proposed road, and that portion was accepted as completed in the manner required by the act of Congress. * * * So far as that portion of road which was completed and accepted is concerned the contract of the company was executed; and as to the lands patented, the transaction on the part of the Government was closed and the title of the company perfected.

Upon that gentlemen base the idea that completion after the time prescribed in the charter will do. Now let us see. Nothing in the world is more common, nor more necessary as a rule of the construction of the decision of a court, than to see what the facts are on which the decision is based. Now, turning to page 363, I find this:

> The company built sections of the road from time to time, each in due time completed.

And it was on that state of facts that the court said the company having built and completed the road, and the President having accepted it, the title was complete. They completed it in sections, in the language of the Supreme Court, "each in due time completed."

Now, sir, whenever you can bring the performance within the rule decided to be good in that case I will admit your title is good. So I pass from that.

As a last resort they bring up the fact that patents have been issued by the Government. They seem to think that if they can get patents by inducing a Secretary of the Interior or an Attorney-General, or even the President of the United States to issue, or agree to issue, a patent for land, there is an end of the controversy, the title has gone, and the people of the United States have lost their right and title to the land by an illegal and unauthorized act of their officers. I will direct inquiry to that and see how that stands. The first case I will read from is in 9 Cranch, very early in our history. There were brave men before Agamemnon; so there were wise and shrewd men to get the land of the people of the United States even as far back as the very beginning of the Government, and so they started the doctrine that whenever they had a patent the United States were concluded. Well, here is what the Supreme Court said on that subject. Marshall was on the bench, and Marshall delivered the opinion of the court. I will not read the whole of it—only the point decided:

> But there are cases in which a grant is absolutely void—

The question in that case was whether they could attack the patent at law or were compelled to go into a court of equity, either doctrine, however, holding that the United States was not bound if that patent was bad. It was a mere question of jurisdiction. I will read what the Chief-Justice said:

> But there are cases in which a grant is absolutely void; as where the State has no title to the thing granted; or where the officer had no authority to issue the grant. In such cases, the validity of the grant is necessarily examinable at law. (Polk's Lessee vs. Wendell et al., 9 Cranch, page 99.)

This statute here requires that these patents should be issued upon the completion of the road within the time fixed by the charter. If issued afterward on subsequent completion they are without authority of law and void. I have some other authorities, and here is one decided in the time of Chief-Justice Taney, almost as great a judge as Chief-Justice Marshall (21 Howard, 431). The opinion was delivered by Judge McLean, a very able lawyer. Says he, in Easton vs. Salisbury (21 Howard, page 431):

> The President of the United States has no right to issue patents for land the sale of which is not authorized by law.

In another case (2 Howard, 318), Judge McLean again in the case of Stoddard vs. Chambers, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

> No title can be held valid which has been acquired against law; and such is the character of the defendant's title, so far as it trenches on the plaintiff's. * * * The issuing of a patent is a ministerial act, which must be performed according to law.

The point is that it must be issued in accordance with law and it is void if not issued in accordance with law. I have read enough on this point to establish the doctrine. The railroad company have no valid patent unless they can show it was issued according to law. It has been shown that patents issued for road completed after the time allowed by the charter are against law, and therefore void.

Then next comes this most monstrous doctrine of what they call equitable estoppel, which means, when translated into plain, pure Anglo-Saxon language, that wherever a railroad company can by blandishment, by argument, by deception, or by corruption prevent an officer or Department of the Government of the United States from discharging its duty according to law and the Constitution, it may plead in defense this default or neglect, or, as technically called in law, the laches of the Government. And having failed to show any title by the affirmative action of the Departments of the Government to these lands and by their compliance with law, they claim now that the people of the United States have lost their rights because their servants were unfaithful. I propose to read some authorities on that subject, and see how much there is in that; and the first case which I will read is the United States vs. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheaton, 735. John Marshall was then on the bench, and this opinion was delivered by Mr. Justice Story:

> Then, as to the point of laches, we are of opinion that the charge of the court below, which supposes that laches will discharge the bond, can not be maintained at law. The general principle is, that laches is not imputable to the Government, and this maxim is founded not in the notion of extraordinary prerogatives, but upon a great public policy. The Government can transact its business only through its agents; and its fiscal operations are so various and its agencies so numerous and scattered that the utmost vigilance would not save the public from the most serious losses if the doctrine of laches can be applied to its transactions. It would, in effect, work a repeal of all its securities.

That was very early. That was followed by a case in 1 Peters, page 325, Dox et al. vs. the Postmaster-General. That was a case where the opinion of the court was delivered by Chief-Justice Marshall. The same doctrine of laches of the Government was pleaded in that case against a recovery by the Government. Chief-Justice Marshall said:

After a full discussion of the question, the court laid down the principle "that the mere laches of the public officers constitutes no grounds of discharge in the present case." The same question came on to be again considered in the case of the United States vs. Vanzandt, 11 Wheat., 184.

Giving it the sanction of his great name. But even if there was anything in this doctrine of equitable estoppel, as my friend from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] seems to think and as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] indicates, can they plead it in this case? I have in my hand a minority report made on this same grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad by Judge PAYSON, of Illinois, and I feel a pleasure in saying that no man in either branch of Congress has been more devoted to the interests of the American people against the claims and aggressions of these railroad corporations than he. He deserves honor for his noble, his untiring, his persevering course in defending the rights of the American people; and I here, though he belongs to a different political party from me, accord to him my admiration for his conduct. In the Forty-seventh Congress, when this question was up—this is the Forty-ninth—it was four years ago, nearly five years ago, and the question was mooted about forfeiting this land grant, and what did the railroad company do? I read from his report to show what they did do.

The eminent counsel—

Says Judge Payson in his report—for the railroad company have, in the elaborate briefs filed with the committee, as well as in their oral arguments before it, assumed that by the acts of Congress making the grant and the acts amendatory thereto the title to all these lands was absolute in the company.

No condition-subsequent, but the title absolute. This is the report of the minority of the Judiciary Committee of the House:

That because no power was reserved to Congress in express terms to declare a forfeiture for breach of the condition as to the time of the completion of the road, therefore no such power exists; and they also insist that, in any event, by the provisions of the ninth section of the act of July 2, 1864, the grant is irrevocably pledged to the construction of this particular road.

After this is it not the most impudent, the most audacious of all possible positions for the railroad company to come before Congress and insist, "We have been misled; we have invested money and built this railroad while you were asleep; it was your duty to have spoken it was your duty to have acted; it was your duty to have declared forfeiture?" Then that same railroad company, its agents, its eminent counsel, insisted that there was no right of forfeiture at all. It is a maxim of law and of common sense that no man can take advantage of an act or default for which he himself is responsible. "Here slept," they say, "the people of the United States; your agents slept: your agents did not discharge their duty; and we poor, innocent men, relying upon the non-action, the acquiescence of the people of the United States, by reason of the failure of their agents to act, we claim that it would be unjust to us now to disturb us in our property." Then, at the same time, when these agents were being moved to act, some of them active, appealed to by the people to act, these same agents were induced not to act by the urgent argument and solicitation of the railroad company itself denying the right and power of Congress to act. Now, where comes in the doctrine of equitable estoppel so eloquently set forth by the Senator from Georgia yesterday?

The railroad company, having given an anodyne to the agents and trustees of the people of the United States and put them into a state of profound slumber and inaction, come to-day and say they are entitled to rights because of this slumber. That is the exact case and the whole of it.

Mr. President, going over the case supposed by my friend from Georgia of Smith and Jones, where Smith had a secret title to land and allowed Jones to suppose that his title was good and go on and build on it; and saw him build on it and improve it, and said nothing until the improvements were made, and then claimed title, the Senator from Georgia says Smith ought to be estopped; and he ought. But how does this case before us compare with that? Here was no secret title hid in the pocket of anybody; here was upon the statute-book of the United States the title-deed by which this railroad company claimed the property, written in language not to be misunderstood. Here was the railroad company, with the statute before it, saying not to Smith, as in the case of the Senator from Georgia, but to Smith's agent, "Do not interfere; you have no right to interfere;" and having persuaded Smith's agent, Smith being absent and unable to speak for himself, that he had no right to interfere, how then would the Senator from Georgia think Smith ought to be concluded by this equitable estoppel, in my judgment a very inequitable and iniquitous estoppel, if it was ever allowed?

But another thing. The Senator from Georgia, and I understand that to be the position of the Senator from Oregon who read his New York case, they all assume to go upon the doctrine that where a man having title to property allows another to come into possession of that property, upon the belief that he is owner, and make improvements upon it, costly and valuable improvements, and says nothing about his right, then he ought to be estopped. Suppose I give them the benefit of this; suppose I allow them the full latitude of all that doctrine, what good does it do them? It does them no good except in what we are already willing to grant them. They only improved that tract of land, which was 400 feet wide and 2,000 miles long, which was the grant of the right of way. It was that tract of land upon which they entered and made their improvements, and we say to them, "We do not want that back; go on and keep it." But they say the argument goes to the extent that we are not only estopped as to that tract, but as in the case of my friend from Georgia in the supposititious case of Smith and Jones, we are estopped from asserting any title to any land within 40 miles of that place. That is a very singular doctrine. I give you all the benefit of your estoppel according to the strictest rule you can apply to a private individual upon the tract of land upon which you entered and improved. Keep it; hold it, your 400 feet wide and 2,000 miles long. That is a separate and distinct grant under this statute. But when you say, "We are not only entitled to that, but we are entitled to one-half of all the land within 40 miles on either side of the road," upon which you never entered, and upon which you never made an improvement, I think the question is wholly different, and rather hard to understand in the sense in which the Senator from Georgia and other Senators have presented it.

So, Mr. President, to look at this thing all around, what is it? It is an empire granted by the Congress of the United States to a corporation upon conditions that it never has complied with, and it is now seeking to have confirmed on the ground of the neglect, the laches of the public agents, which neglect was procured by themselves. That is all there is in it. Where is the equity in favor of such a party?

But the Senator from Oregon put the case, I thought, on a higher and better ground than that, and I admire him for it. He admits that this delinquent and defaulting corporation has no rights. He puts it upon the ground of public good. Upon that ground I take him by the right hand. If he can show me that it is for the good of the people of America, the landless and homeless millions, that this empire should be surrendered in contravention of law to this railroad company, I will join with him; but he can not do that. The only point the Senator could make was this: If we forfeit that little piece of land, that 75 miles in the Cascade Mountains, they will not build through the mountains. The answer to that I will call his attention to, contained in the language of the ninth section of the act of 1864:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the United States make the several conditioned grants herein, and that the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company accept the same, upon the further condition that if the said company make any breach of the conditions hereof, and allow the same to continue for upwards of one year, then, in such case, at any time hereafter, the United States, by its Congress, may do any and all acts and things which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of the said road.

Under that the power exists to take possession of all the property of the company from one end of the road to the other, line, locomotives, stock, mortgages, and do anything with it as Congress sees proper unless they build that 75 miles of road. There is no danger that that road will not be built unless Congress shall by the solicitations and blandishments of this railroad company neglect its duty in that respect as it has in reference to the forfeiture of the land heretofore. The power is ample, and the duty is plain to exercise it.

Now, Mr. President, I have said about all I desire to say on this occasion. I have been moved to speak by what I regard as my solemn duty to the American people to present these views in opposition to any further neglect on the part of Congress to enact a law which will preserve and protect their rights and interests in this land. I know no individual, no man connected with the railroad company, not one. I know no officer of the road. I never had a business transaction with any party connected with the road. I do not desire any. Regarding it as a great enterprise I am perfectly willing to go into all the equities they may have against the United States and deal fairly and justly.

I am willing to give them the old rule of six sections per mile all the way through, and if after that is done there still remains an honorable obligation on the part of the United States to make any contribution for losses sustained by this company, the company being shown to have performed in every respect fully, fairly, honestly, its duty, I am willing to adjust that. But there is one thing that I am not willing to do, and that is when I have a clear power and a clear right on the part of the American people to assert their rights to this magnificent domain which was granted to this railroad company, I am not willing to surrender their rights to it, but on the contrary I will do all that is in my power to secure to the people of this country for homes for themselves and their posterity forever this land which I believe justly belongs to them.

I believe that the people of the United States yet have some rights which corporations, enriched by subsidies from the public property, arrogant in their power gotten and preserved by a criminal neglect of their duties by public officers, are bound to respect.

Mr. President, I believe in the institution of private property. I believe it is essential to all progress and advancement, essential even to the happiness of the people. I believe a man is entitled, justly entitled, by both divine and human law, to whatever he may gain by his talents, by his energy, by his industry, and by his self-denial. I believe that we ought to so act that this right will always be recognized and secured by the American people. There is no danger to this right unless we shall so act that immense fortunes shall result to men not through their own merit but through vicious and reckless legislation, like this grant, which transfers to a favored few the lawful rights, the gains of the many toilers who create the wealth of the country.

If this goes on those whose fortune is a hard one, the landless, homeless, propertyless, hungering for bread for themselves and their families, seeing these great wrongs and unable to redress them, will, in their condemnation of these methods by which enormous wealth is gathered by a few, include an opposition to wealth per se, however acquired. Starvation and want, accompanied by a sense of injustice and wrong, are not discriminating judges. So, sir, in advocating the forfeiture of this land grant, I sincerely believe I am pursuing that course which will suppress the growth of socialism and discontent. It will encourage an obedience to the laws, love and respect for the Constitution, and a devotion to the institutions on whose preservation rest the happiness and welfare of the American people.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] declined several times in the course of his admirable speech to yield to me for questions and of course I declined to persist in the questions I wished to ask. I have no disposition to speak now. I would like, however, in order that the RECORD may show precisely where we all stand, to ask the honorable Senator from Mississippi whether he will answer some questions now?

Mr. GEORGE. Perhaps so.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator from Mississippi has made a very interesting speech, but I confess, for one, that it is the most remarkable legal argument I have ever listened to either in the Senate of the United States or before any judicial tribunal. The Senator made an apology which excuses him to a certain extent for the remarkable character of his speech considered as a legal argument, by stating that he was speaking for the country and not for the Senate. In fact he argued all around the various questions involved in this debate, and at various times in the course of his extraordinary remarks he occupied almost every position for a time that has ever been occupied by any one who has ever discussed the subject.

In fact he reminded me very much of the young man who was being examined preparatory to teaching a country school. After having answered a great many questions in a quite satisfactory manner the examiner finally said to him as a kind of wind-up of the whole business, "Mr. Jones, I would in conclusion be glad to have your opinion of the formation of the earth." He threw himself back in a rather dignified way and made this reply: "Well, sir, in regard to that question, there are two theories extant; one is that the earth is round, and the other is that the earth is square. I teach both."

Now, my friend from Mississippi has taken a position here to-day as a lawyer in regard to the great fundamental question that meets us at the threshold with reference to the construction of this grant that I have never heard taken anywhere by any lawyer in regard to this matter. It is possible that everybody, as well those lawyers who have favored forfeiture and those who have protested against forfeiture in the past, are wrong, and that the Senator from Mississippi alone is right. Most certain it is that never yet have I heard any lawyer, as I said before, either here or at the other end of this building or in any court, or elsewhere, take the position that the conditions in the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company were conditions precedent, and not conditions subsequent. For the first time in the long investigation and discussion of this question that theory has been advanced by the Senator from Mississippi on the floor of the Senate to-day.

In all the able arguments which have been made in the House of Representatives and elsewhere, in all of the able reports which have been made in the House of Representatives and elsewhere by those who have aimed at precisely the same thing the Senator from Mississippi is now aiming at, namely, to have a declaration of forfeiture made of all the lands of this company adjacent to that portion of the road that was not completed on the 4th of July, 1879, no one, either upon the floor of the House, upon the floor of the Senate, or in any report that has ever been made, has ever taken the position, so far as I am advised, that the conditions incorporated in the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company are conditions-precedent, and the performance of which upon the part of the company was necessary to the vesting of the title in the company to the lands included in the grant.

The Senator from Mississippi eulogized an honorable member of the House, and eulogized and read from an able report made by that gentleman in the House; and yet he will find if he examines that report carefully, that that Representative, Judge Payson, upon this fundamental question, upon this pivotal proposition to be considered in the construction of this grant, holds just to the reverse of the Senator from Mississippi. In other words, he, as well as every other lawyer who has ever spoken on this subject here or elsewhere, no matter what end he desired to accomplish, recognized the statement to be true that the conditions in this grant are conditions-subsequent, and not conditions-precedent; and that the terms of the grant taken all together, as I admit they must be, and not merely a few words from the third section, operate to vest the title to this grant in the company as of the date of the act—not merely an equitable title, but the legal title, and that legal title is subject to be divested only by a failure upon the part of the company to comply with the condition-subsequent attached to the grant.

But inasmuch as now for the first time the able Senator from Mississippi, the great lawyer and distinguished citizen from the South, and most interesting and captivating speaker as he is, has taken the position plainly, openly, and above board that the title to these lands did not pass by virtue of the terms of the grant, but that the grant is a mere compact or covenant between the United States and the company, I should like to know from the Senator from Mississippi when it is in the progress of operations under the grant that the title does pass to the company.

Mr. GEORGE. Do you want me to answer?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. In a moment. There must be a time the Senator will concede, and a precise and particular time, a day of time, a moment of time, when the legal title passes from the sovereign to the grantee.

What I wish to know in view of the most unprecedented and to me startling position of the Senator from Mississippi in regard to the character of the grant is this: The Senator has stated it did not pass at the date of the grant. When then, and if at all, does the legal title pass from the one to the other and vest in the grantee? Is it when the company have completed a certain 20 miles of road? Is it when the 20 miles have been accepted, or is it when the patent has been issued? When? I await now for a reply.

Mr. GEORGE. I have never studied the point very particularly, but my idea about it is that the right to the land accrues to the company upon its compliance with the condition, and when the Government made the conveyance by issuing patents in pursuance of that condition it was a complete investiture of title.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. There must be some particular time when the title passes. Is the issuing of the patent the time, or is it before the issuing of the patent?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think there is a complete conveyance of a legal title until the patent is issued. There may be a complete equitable ownership before that time on a compliance with the conditions of the grant.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator must recognize, and all must admit, that the legal title can not vest in two persons at the same time. The legal title must remain in the grantor or it must be in the grantee, in one or the other. There must be a time, as I said before, when the title passes, just as there must be a time when any other thing under the sun must occur that occurs at all

The Senator has said that it does not pass at the date of the grant because he says the conditions in the grant are conditions-precedent, and not conditions-subsequent, and therefore the title did not pass, and can only vest upon the performance by the company of the conditions-precedent.

What I want to get at precisely, if I can, is exactly at what time, in the opinion of the Senator, the title vests in the grantee: In other words, at precisely what time does the title flit from one to the other? Is it when they have completed the road and asked for commissioners, or is it still later, after the commissioners have been appointed and have examined the road, or is it still a little beyond, after the President has accepted the report of the commissioners, or is it still further beyond when the patent issues? It must be one or the other of those times.

Mr. GEORGE. I have stated my views on the subject substantially. The company have no right to the lands except the right obtained by complying with the conditions according to the terms of the contract; and when they do comply according to the terms of the charter they have that right and the United States is to convey title. They do not get it before. My position is just this: there is no title to an estate vested in the grantees until they have complied with the conditions upon which the grant was made according to the terms prescribed in the act.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. With all deference to the Senator, that is rather vague and uncertain. I think I have a right to assume from what the Senator from Mississippi said in his opening argument, that in his opinion the title to this land did not pass until the patent was issued.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think the technical, legal title does.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Does not the Senator from Mississippi know that the Supreme Court of the United States have decided time and time again that the issuance of a patent is a mere ministerial act, and that it is not necessary to the vesting of title.

Mr. GEORGE. Not that it is not necessary, but it does convey the last dry, naked legal title. All I mean to say is that the company have no right to the land until they comply with the act of Congress.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That may do as an argument for the audience addressed by the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. It suits me. If you do not like it I can not help it. It is sufficient for all the purposes we have here before the Senate. The railroad company have no right to the land until they comply with the terms of the contract strictly and literally.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator from Mississippi desires to be fair, of course. The Senator from Mississippi would not under any conceivable circumstances do anything that might by any possibility be construed as a misrepresentation of the law or the facts. I know he would not. I know he desires nothing of that kind, and yet the Senator from Mississippi in support of the most extraordinary position taken by him that this grant is not a grant in præsenti, that it does not convey the title, that the conditions attached to the grant are not conditions subsequent but conditions precedent, refers to one decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and on that alone he builds his argument.

I desire to show if I can, and I think I can, that there is no parallel whatever, that there is no sameness whatever between the two. There is no approximation in the facts of one toward the facts of the other. What I mean to say is that the terms of the grant in the one case are wholly, entirely, absolutely, and radically different from the terms of the grant in the other case. There is no approach to similarity in the two cases, as I shall endeavor to show in a moment.

Before proceeding to that, however, I admit the rule of construction contended for by the honorable Senator from Mississippi. I admit of course that we are not at liberty to simply select three or four terms used in the third section of the granting act, where it says, "that there be, and hereby is, granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, its successors and assigns," &c., so much land, but that we must take the whole act together.

I will even go as far as the Senator from Mississippi can desire to have me go, and I will admit that if there were any other terms or words or phrases used in the granting act, whether in the same section in which these words of present grant are found, or whether in preceding sections or in subsequent sections, that would modify or change these particular words or give to them a different construction from that the law would give to them if standing alone—I admit, I say, if that is so, then we have no right to assume that this is a present grant. But is that so, and is the case of Rice vs. The Railroad Company, in 1 Black, quoted by the Senator from Mississippi, a parallel case? Let us see. In the case of Rice vs. The Railroad Company, the fourth section of the act is as follows:

That the lands hereby granted to the said Territory shall be disposed of by said Territory only in the manner following—that is to say—

I invite the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to what follows—

No title shall vest in the said Territory of Minnesota, nor shall any patent issue for any part of the lands hereinbefore mentioned, until a continuous length of 20 miles of said road shall be completed through the lands hereby granted.

As a matter of course no title passed by virtue of that grant. Why? Because by the express terms of the grant it was declared that it should not pass. "No title shall vest" was the language of that act, and yet the Senator from Mississippi quotes this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States as an authority to be applied to the construction of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

Let us examine a little further and see what the court said in discussing the terms of this grant, and see why it was that the court could in the nature of things, under the law, and under every rule of construction, come to no other conclusion than they did do, namely, that no title passed in that particular case under the terms of the grant. Mr. Justice Clifford in his opinion, after quoting these words, said:

It is insisted by the defendants that the provision does not devest the grant of a present interest, that it only so qualifies the power of disposal that the Territory can not place the title beyond the operation of the condition specified in the grant. But they do not attempt to meet the difficulty, that, by the express words of the act, the absolute title remained in the grantor, at least until 20 miles of the road were completed; nor do they even suggest by what process of reasoning the four words, "no title shall vest"— can be shorn of their usual and ordinary signification, except to say that it would be doing great injustice to Congress to hold, notwithstanding the words of the first section, that no title passed to the grantee.

Could there be any question in that case as to where title rested when by the express terms of the grant it was declared in so many words that no title should vest, that the title should remain in the grantor, in the sovereign? Yet my friend from Mississippi refers to this authority, and it is the only one to which he does refer, in order to sustain the most remarkable position assumed by him, to the effect that the conditions in the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company are conditions-precedent, the performance of which are necessary upon the part of the company in order to vest title.

So then there is nothing in the position of the Senator from Mississippi so far as that is concerned. The foundation having been swept away, the whole fabric of his argument must tumble to pieces.

The Senator, after having quoted that authority, makes an attempt to point out certain words in the granting act to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company which must in his opinion be held to modify the terms of present grant in the third section, and how far has he been successful? Does he find in that act a provision to the effect that no title shall vest, as was found in the Minnesota case? Not by any manner of means. Does he find anything that can by any proper rule of construction be held for one moment to control the words of present grant employed in the third section of the act? To what does he call attention as controlling in that regard? Simply this and nothing more: He quotes from the fourth section of the act in order to sustain his position where it is said:

And, from time to time, whenever 25 additional consecutive miles shall have been constructed, completed, and in readiness as aforesaid, and verified by said commissioners to the President of the United States, then patents shall be issued to said company conveying the additional sections of land as aforesaid, and so on as fast as every 25 miles of said road is completed as aforesaid.

He failed to read, however, what preceded and to which attention was called by my colleague, wherein it is said after commissioners shall have been appointed, &c., to examine the same:

And if it shall appear that 25 consecutive miles of said road and telegraph line have been completed in a good, substantial, and workmanlike manner, as in all other respects required by this act, the commissioners shall so report to the President of the United States, and patents of lands, as aforesaid, shall be issued to said company, confirming to said company the right and title to said lands, situated opposite to, and coterminous with, said completed section of said road.

Here it will seen the clause assumes that title has already passed, and the patents are held simply as confirming such title.

Mr. GEORGE. I read that section.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I beg pardon; I did not know the Senator referred to it. Here we have now the only thing to which the Senator from Mississippi has been able to call attention, as words that would control the ordinary meaning and effect of the granting terms used in the third section. Does not the Senator know—of course he does—that it has been decided frequently, as I said a moment ago, that the mere issuance of a patent is a ministerial act; that it conveys nothing; that it is a mere evidence of title, and that whenever the right to a patent has once vested, it is, in the language of the Supreme Court of the United States, "equivalent, as respects the Government dealing with public lands, to a patent issued." The Supreme Court of the United States, in Stark vs. Starrs (6 Wallace, 418), say:

The right to a patent once vested is treated by the Government, when dealing with public lands, as equivalent to a patent issued.

Again, the Supreme Court of the United States, in Barney vs. Dolph (97 United States Reports, page 656), said:

When the right to a patent once became vested in a settler under the law it was equivalent, so far as the Government was concerned, to a patent actually issued. * * * The execution and delivery of the patent, after the right is complete, are the mere ministerial acts of the officer charged with the duty.

Then all this talk to the effect that the title to these lands did not and could not pass to the company until the issuance of a patent falls to the ground. It is not the law; it can not in the nature of things and in view of the many decisions which have been made upon this and cognate questions be the law. The Supreme Court have decided frequently that after a certificate has been issued to a pre-emption or a homesteader the right to sell the land is complete in the entryman or the party holding the certificate. No patent is necessary; the title vests. The issuance of a patent is a mere ministerial act of the officers of the Government; it conveys nothing.

Mr. SPOONER. The lands are taxable by the State.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. They are taxable by the State, as suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, and where lands have been sold under the State tax laws such sales have been held by the Supreme Court of the United States to be good, and pass the title of the lands to the purchaser. I do not remember the particular cases just now, but I know there are such cases.

It is not true then that the conditions of this grant are conditions-precedent, or that it is not a grant in præsenti. It is true that they are conditions subsequent, and it is true that the grant conveys a present title to these lands to the company. But it being true that these conditions are conditions subsequent, any failure on the part of the company, to perform the conditions of course will, at the instance of the grantor, divest the title and return it to the donor or grantor.

So it is useless, it seems to me, and it is not in my opinion in the interest of those people whom the Senator from Mississippi would serve, to deceive ourselves here or elsewhere in regard to the real nature of the grant, or in regard to the law applicable to the grant, or in regard to the rules of construction which courts must inevitably apply to the grant when they come to consider it. Is it not, I insist, as I did yesterday, for the interest of the hundreds of thousands of settlers who have taken up homes all along this grant from Saint Paul to Oregon and Washington Territory and have proceeded upon the theory that the grant did belong to the railroad company—I say it is not for their interest, in my judgment, to involve them in litigation that will not be ended during the lifetime perhaps of many who are now members of this body.

Mr. GEORGE. The amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, for which I propose to vote, confirms them in all their title.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I understand all that; but the Senator must concede that all the provisions we may insert here for the benefit and protection of settlers under the grant must come, doubtless at the instance of the railroad company, under the review of the judiciary.

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. EUSTIS. I will suppose the case of a settler who has purchased land from the railroad corporation which we propose now to declare forfeited, but to confirm that sale, how can litigation possibly arise between the railroad corporation and that settler?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It is not difficult to conjecture how litigation will arise.

Mr. EUSTIS. If the company have already sold the land to the settler the company could possibly have no interest in such a litigation.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I admit there may be some cases where parties protected by the bill might not be troubled, but as a general thing it will involve the people generally along the line of the completed road in an immense and troublesome litigation.

Mr. GEORGE. Who will they litigate with? With the railroad company? I admit that we can not pass a law which will prevent a railroad company from litigating with anybody about anything which they desire.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Never; for they will litigate until the end of time.

Mr. GEORGE. Not until the end of time. We can prevent that.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. There is no question about that. They will litigate as long as they have the means to employ lawyers to carry on litigation, so far as that is concerned. And that is the very point I am making; and it is from such a calamitous condition of affairs I would protect these thousands of settlers.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not see what benefit they can get by litigating when they have sold the land.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. They may not get any benefit. I am simply saying in a general way that, in my judgment, it will involve litigation that will be most troublesome, expensive, and tiresome. It will render uncertain titles to land, retard the settlement of the country, and inaugurate a reign of legal controversy without a parallel in our history.

Mr. GEORGE. As to litigation, let me make this remark: If the railroad company is going to embark in an unjust litigation for the purpose of deviling those people out of their rights, then let us repeal the charter, as we have a right to do under the law. If that is the only way to stop it from doing injustice, I am perfectly willing to repeal the charter, and then it can not sue anybody.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. All right; then let the Senator from Mississippi introduce a bill to repeal the charter, and we will consider that proposition.

Mr. GEORGE. I mean to say that if it becomes necessary to protect the settler I would repeal the charter.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President, I did not intend to make a speech, but I was so astonished at the position taken by the Senator from Mississippi that I have been led into making these few scattered remarks. I only desired to ask the Senator from Mississippi a few questions in order that I might get at the precise position he occupies.

So far as I am concerned I hope we will get to a vote. I have taken up more time than I intended in this discussion. In fact when the bill was brought up I did not intend to say a solitary word. I am extremely anxious that a forfeiture should be declared of the lands between Wallula and Portland, and I believe it to be the interest of the people, the interest of commerce, the interest of the whole nation, and of all concerned in the development of the great Pacific Northwest that there shall be a speedy completion of the Northern Pacific road across the Cascade Mountains; and believing as I do that to deprive them of the land on the top of the Cascade Mountains, which is only valuable to them and not for settlement, might delay the prosecution of the work and perhaps retard for years, at least, if not in fact entirely defeat the completion of a competing line across the continent, I am willing to vote and shall vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

Mr. BECK. Let the amendment be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 12, of the reprinted bill, after the word "Oregon," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "mountains," in line 14, and to insert in lieu:

And also all lands which appertain to and are coterminous with that part of the branch line across the Cascade Mountains which shall not have been constructed at the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask a parliamentary question before we take the vote. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] has an amendment to propose, and I prefer his amendment to that of the Senator from Nebraska, but I prefer the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to nothing. I desire to know whether after having voted to amend the bill and agreed to these other amendments, the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, which is to strike out the whole bill from the enacting clause and substitute his amendment in place of it, would be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that it would be in order unquestionably. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when Mr. BUTLER'S name was called). The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] requested me to state that he is absent on necessary business of the Senate, and is paired on this bill with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If the Senator from South Carolina were present he would vote for the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. I do not know how he would vote on the pending amendment.

Mr. HEARST (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. STANFORD].

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If he were here I believe he would vote "nay." If I were not paired, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY. I paired last evening with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who I understand is unwell to-day, and I shall continue the pair. I wish to say that I would vote for the amendment if he were here.

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON] on this question.

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST. The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] requested me to pair with him. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE (when the name of Mr. VOORHEES was called). I am authorized to state that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] is unavoidably absent, and if present would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. HARRIS (when Mr. WHITTHORNE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. WHITTHORNE] is necessarily absent, and will be for several days. He is paired generally with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], but not upon this bill. Hence the Senator from Oregon does perfectly right to record his vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. ALLISON] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB. I am paired on this question with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], but I am assured upon the other side of the Chamber that, if present, the Senator from Nebraska would vote "yea;" so that I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. If he were here, he would probably vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. CALL. I ask if the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has voted or is otherwise paired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He is not present.

Mr. CALL. I agreed to pair with him several days ago, and as I do not see him in his seat I shall withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CONGER. My colleague [Mr. PALMER] is generally paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], but I do not know whether the pair extends to this vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does. The pair was announced by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Aldrich,	Coke,	Harris,	Spooner,
Beck,	Colquitt,	Harrison,	Teller,
Berry,	Cullom,	Jones of Arkansas,	Van Wyck,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	Logan,	Walthall,
Chace,	George,	Maxey,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cockrell,	Gibson,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—18.

Blair,	Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Pugh,
Bowen,	Edmunds,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Brown,	Frye,	Miller,	Sherman.
Conger,	Hoar,	Mitchell of Oreg.,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Payne,

ABSENT—34.

Allison,	Hale,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Sewell,
Call,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Camden,	Hearst,	Palmer,	Vance,
Cameron,	Jones of Florida,	Pike,	Vest,
Evarts,	Kenna,	Platt,	Voorhees,
Fair,	McPherson,	Plumb,	Whitthorne.
Gorman,	Mahone,	Riddleberger,
Gray,	Manderson,	Sabin,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will take this occasion to lay before the Senate several bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 334) granting the title of the United States to certain lands to the county of Randolph, in the State of Illinois, on certain conditions, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 5044) to prohibit book-making of any kind and pool-selling in the District of Columbia for the purpose of gaming; and

A bill (H. R. 7083) to incorporate the trustees of the Young Woman's Christian Home in Washington, D. C.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. 8192) to remove the political disabilities of J. R. Eggleston, of Mississippi.

The bill (H. R. 6391) to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. DAWES. There is no occasion to refer the bill. It has passed both Houses. It is the bill which was recalled from the President to make some verbal amendments that do not affect the line of the road at all, but accidentally there was omitted some reference to certain small reservations in the Indian Territory, the draughtsman of the bill supposing that the line passed through the Cherokee Nation only. It was recalled and the omitted names inserted. That is all the change there is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the state of the bill? Is it a new bill just passed?

Mr. DAWES. This seems to be a new bill, having those changes only. I do not know; I have not traced the history of it back. This is certainly a new engrossment; but what the history in the other branch is I have not consulted to learn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does it stand as a bill that has passed the House of Representatives simply?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It stands as a new bill from the other House.

Mr. DAWES. I suppose the other bill having been recalled a new bill has been introduced, but I am not informed. This appears certainly to be a new engrossment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would it not be better for the committee to compare it and see?

Mr. DAWES. I do not know. This comes up from the Calendar of the House of Representatives, and I do not know any benefit that that course would have. Suppose we find one way or the other, it would be hardly respectful to send back a suggestion to them that they shall do this in a different way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But this, I understand the Chair to say, is a new bill of the House of Representatives, which has never been here before.

Mr. DAWES. But it is the bill which has been to the President, with the verbal alterations I have stated, for I have compared them. If the Senator will look on the first page of the RECORD of to-day he will see just what was done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That I do not want to see.

Mr. CONGER. If it is a new bill it should be referred to the committee, of course.

Mr. DAWES. It is of no consequence to me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the best way, and then you will be sure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

Mr. EUSTIS. I now propose the amendment of which I gave notice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert:

That except as to all lands granted for that portion of the road of the Northern Pacific Railroad which was completed before July 4, A. D. 1879, and also excepting the right of way, with necessary lands used in operating said railroad, and also except all lands included within the limits of any village, town, or city site, the grant of public lands made in aid of the construction of the said Northern Pacific Railroad by act of Congress approved July 2, A. D. 1866 (13 Statutes at Large, page 365), be, and it is hereby, declared forfeited and determined; and the said act making the grant is, so far as said grant is concerned, hereby repealed, and said lands are hereby restored to the public domain for sale and settlement under existing laws of the United States; and all of said lands shall be held and treated as though said grant and the withdrawals under it had never been made; Provided, That in case of any of the lands embraced within any of the terms of this act, to which said railroad company would have been entitled had the said road been constructed as provided in the act making the grant, have been sold by said company prior to January 1, A. D. 1884, the party or persons so purchasing any of said lands, his heirs and assigns, shall have the right to the lands so purchased to the extent of 320 acres, upon making proof of the fact of such purchase before the register at the local land office of the district where said land may be located; and upon proof as above within twelve months of the passage of this act, patents shall issue to the parties entitled thereto for the land; and in any case of purchase or settlement, as contemplated in this act, of more than 320 acres by each settler, the 320 acres to each settler may be selected by him within one year from the passage of this act, he filing the description of such selection at the proper land office or with the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

SEC. 2. That all persons who have made actual settlement or have made valuable improvements upon the odd-numbered sections adjacent to the said road or branch thereof, with or without contract of purchase therefor, with a bona fide intent to secure title thereto by purchase from said Northern Pacific Railroad Company when the said company had earned the same by compliance with the conditions and requirements of said act, or to acquire title to the same under the public-land laws of the United States, and being a citizen of the United States, or having declared his intention to become one in compliance with the naturalization laws of the United States, shall be entitled to enter one quarter-section, of 160 acres each, of the lands so settled upon or improved by such person, under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States; and in case such person has exhausted his or her right under said laws, then and in that case such person may enter one quarter-section, of 160 acres, of the land so settled upon or improved, by paying therefor $1.25 per acre.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I desire to say in advance that I will not detain the Senate by making a speech of any length. I am not a member of any of the committees having charge of the public lands or the land-grant railways and I never was. I have no interest in any of them, and therefore am not as familiar with that class of subjects as gentlemen who have been specially charged with their management.

I have always believed that we gave to the great railroads of the country not only public lands far beyond what was needed for the work they undertook to do, and to several of them subsidies in money to which they were not entitled, therefore I believe that whenever the Congress of the United States if called upon to act in regard to any land-grant road, whatever lands are unearned at the time Congress acts, we not only have the right but it is our duty to declare forfeited and restored to the public domain, free from the double prices we imposed on the alternate sections because of the increase of value supposed to be given to them by the railroad.

Therefore I voted with great satisfaction for the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK]. That is as far, I understand, as we have ever gone. A bill (I believe it is now the law; the President may as yet not have signed it) to which I called attention yesterday, relating to the Atlantic and Pacific Railway, after full consideration by Congress was passed, forfeiting the unearned lands precisely to the extent the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska now proposes to do, both Houses of Congress refusing to go an inch further in the direction of the forfeiture proposed by the Senator from Louisiana, though earnestly urged elsewhere to do so by arguments quite as strong as any we have heard here.

I have always understood, too, that this was the principle laid down in the platform of the great party to which I have the honor to belong. Although repeated efforts were made to urge the party to go further, when the last Democratic platform was adopted we declared in July, 1884, that:

We believe that the public land ought, as far as possible, to be kept as homesteads for actual settlers; that all unearned lands heretofore improvidently granted to railroad corporations by the action of the Republican party should be restored to the public domain, and that no more grants of land shall be made to corporations, or be allowed to fall into the ownership of alien absentees.

To all that I agree, and I voted accordingly; but when it comes to a question of lands that have been earned then I think more careful consideration should be given to the great questions involved than has been given in this proposed substitute. When the bill was first brought up a very careful Senator, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], among other things said on the first morning of the debate:

Here some want to go to an extreme length; others want to take a medium position, and others want to go a very short distance, and none of them will compromise. I believe that we ought to agree upon something and accomplish something; and it was for that reason that I was in favor of this bill, which could become a law and become operative; and then I was in favor at the same time of considering the other question. I think that is the only way to succeed. I think it is the only way to accomplish anything. I think the Senator from Nebraska is throwing a stumbling-block in his own pathway. I think he is doing more to prevent any forfeiture than could possibly be done by passing this bill.

Then, as I understand it, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] had offered a substitute or amendment substantially similar to that now offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. The amendment is printed in the RECORD, and while it may not be word for word the same as the present amendment, it seems to me in listening to the amendment when it was read to be substantially the same as that which the Senator from Missouri offered. I then said:

I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri if the Committee on Public Lands have considered the question now presented in the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska at all?

That is the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, as I understand it.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand it they have not. I was just going to remark that the Committee on Public Lands have not come to a conclusion in regard to the bill which has been offered here as an amendment.

Mr. BECK. One other suggestion. Would the laying of this amendment on the table now be any committal in any way against the forfeiture declared by it, provided the Committee on Public Lands should consider it proper?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see that it would.

Mr. BECK. Why not let the whole subject go to the committee now and be considered at once?

Mr. COCKRELL. I propose to move to recommit the whole matter to the Committee on Public Lands for further consideration.

And so the debate went on. In order to prevent any misunderstanding and to prevent any of the rights of the people of the United States from being lost, and while the Committee on Public Lands was giving the matter the careful consideration to which I thought it was entitled, and to which the Senator from Missouri agreed it was entitled, I offered as an additional section the following, which was adopted by the Senate:

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be construed to waive or release or in any way affect any right of the United States to have any other lands granted by them to the said railroad company forfeited for any failure of said company to comply with the conditions of the grant.

That is my position now. I am willing to forfeit all the unearned lands. I am willing that the matter should then go back to the Committee on Public Lands for their consideration to see how much further we can go or ought to go, having due regard to the interests of all parties concerned, and reserve all the rights of the United States in express terms to whatever we now have a right to. But when I am told that the Committee on Public Lands have not even considered the great question now presented by the amendment, or the substitute, for that is what it is, first presented by the Senator from Nebraska and now by the Senator from Louisiana, I am not prepared to vote for it without its being considered by a committee of the Senate, as an amendment to a bill which did not embrace any of the great considerations which ought to be carefully investigated in dealing with an important matter like this.

I suppose no Senator will deny that if all the lands given to the Northern Pacific road not earned before 1879 should be declared forfeited the same general policy should prevail that all the lands given to all the other land-grant railroads of the country that did not earn them within the time embraced in the limits of their charter should be forfeited as well, and that the Committee on Public Lands, when it comes to consider that question, would not forfeit the lands of only one road, leaving to the Union Pacific and to the Central Pacific, the great competitor of the Northern Pacific Railroad, or to the Atlantic and Pacific, whose unearned lands alone were forfeited almost by the unanimous vote of both Houses, leaving all the others to stand as they are, that they should retain the grants they have solely for the purpose of breaking down one competing road.

That does not look to me like wise legislation. If that principle of forfeiture shall be asserted let it be asserted in the broadest, fairest, and most equitable manner, so that all roads shall be treated alike. Nothing would so gratify the owners of the Union and Central Pacific roads, the managers of which have not commended themselves either by the treatment of the people along their lines or by the way in which they conducted the building of those great roads—nothing would gratify them so much as to see their great competitor crushed to the earth by an act of Congress and a monopoly given to them of all the transportation across the continent on American soil north of their lines, with the right to charge whatever they chose to demand.

Why should we punish one road and leave the others, especially the Union or Central Pacific, with their sixty-four millions of our money in addition to their land grants, with all the interest that we have paid on the great subsidy which was given, undisturbed, while we crush their competitor? Is that statesmanship? Is it the part of either wisdom or fair play? I do not believe such a measure would be proposed by the Public Lands Committee. At least, before I vote to punish one to build up another, and that other, in my judgment (I mean the Union and Central Pacific roads), no more deserving, no less grasping, in the hands of no better people—before I would destroy one to build up the other I want at least the sanction of a carefully considered bill by a committee appointed for that purpose, who can hear all that can be said on both sides; and I shall require better reasons than I have yet heard for doing so.

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BECK. I have no objection; but I desire to repeat that I have not studied the great legal questions growing out of the legislation in regard to the land-grant railways and public lands. I am not going into an argument upon that branch of the subject; perhaps I am not prepared to answer many of the technical questions that Senators who have been studying railroad law may be able to put to me. Therefore, I would rather finish stating the reason, which I hope to make very brief, why I can not vote for as radical a measure as is now suggested, and let other gentlemen speak in their own time. If that is equally satisfactory I would rather pursue that course for the reason I have given.

I confess that I was greatly impressed when the debate on the bill first came up with the importance of having an American railway along the line over which the Northern Pacific road runs, by a statement made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], which I have before me in the RECORD, and will read, because it impressed me then as a reason why our competing road should not be broken down, no matter what wrong may have been committed in its inception or in its early management. The Senator from Oregon said:

The Northern Pacific Railroad Company are struggling to complete its Cascade branch to connect by a direct line Lake Superior and Puget Sound. Just north of their line now completed is the Canadian Pacific Railroad. That railroad company received from the Canadian Government $25,000,000 in money and 25,000,000 acres of land and a loan of $35,000,000, and the Government took back from the company 6,666,666 acres of land at $1.50 an acre, making $10,000,000. It received a donation of completed road of 707 miles—from Lake Superior westward to Winnipeg, 400 and odd miles; from Winnipeg to the boundary line of the United States, 65 miles; and on the western slope, 200 and odd miles. So there was $25,000,000, 25,000,000 acres of land, a loan of $35,000,000, and 707 miles of completed road—completed in the best manner—donated to them.

The Government of Great Britain has granted a subsidy to that company of $500,000 a year for the purpose of aiding in establishing a line of steamers from the terminus of their road on Puget Sound to Australia, China, and Japan, and the company is now having constructed five large steamships which will be ready in 1888 for service, and in the mean time are proposing to put on a line of three steamships which are to be hired or purchased for the purpose. England, with its commercial ports and commercial agencies established all over the world, is attempting to seize and take out of our grasp the commerce of the old East, of the Pacific coast, and Puget Sound; and what are we doing?

I repeat again that statement impressed me. I knew the general truth of it. If we are to have American competition with that great British railroad I insist that, despite whatever may have been done that was wrong in years gone by on account of the land grants or subsidies, it is the only competitor which we can have with the line through Canada. Two or three years ago I went over part of the Canadian line. I know it is magnificent, and I know that England does not intend to be dependent even upon the Suez Canal in case Russia, France, or any other country should force her to close it, or make it impossible to navigate it with safety.

She intends to reach India, China, Japan, Australia, and all the great countries of the East by the West, and to have her great line from Montreal through her own country to Puget Sound, and her connections with all those great commercial countries despite what may happen in the Eastern world by war or any unfriendly complication. She has it now, and if we intend to compete for the trade with the countries across the Pacific which has from time immemorial made all the nations that could control it rich and powerful, we must maintain and support our great coextending railroad line.

But independent of all these considerations we have great interest in our own almost boundless Territories that never would have been worth a penny but for the Northern Pacific Railroad. The thousands of fat cattle and other products which come from them every year to Chicago and New York never could have reached the eastern seaboard but for that line of road; and the Canadian Government to-day is seeking to divert much of that trade. It proposes if our dealers will take their cattle to Montreal and get a clean bill of health from the English authorities in Canada to induce the English Government to allow the cattle carried there alive over their lines to graze on English pastures as long as they please; whereas now we are compelled to kill them within fourteen days, and they can only go, I believe, 17 miles into the interior, which would make a difference in favor of cattle carried through Canada of over $10 per head.

I am not prepared in the face of all these facts and many others I might state without further examination to do anything that will rudely break down a great line of road of so much importance to us and destroy the only competitor we have with this great Canadian line. Whatever may be our rights of forfeiture, I insist we ought to act prudently and justly. There is not a civilized nation in the world that would permit a private citizen, even if he had a better title than the man who was building such a road, to have sat by as we have done and seen the road go on as we have allowed it to go on, and allowed him to assert in its courts a better right to it after all the laches he had been guilty of in allowing the other man to build it in the belief that it was his own. Public policy forbids one citizen from taking such advantage over another. "He who seeks justice must do justice;" that is what justifies estoppel between citizens.

The Government is not estopped, I admit. Why? Because the Government is not presumed to be influenced by the passion, by the desire for gain, by the greed, by the injustice that the actions of a private person may be governed by. No time runs against the commonwealth. The king can do no wrong. Government can not do injustice. These are the ideas which are presumed to govern its action and to make any limitation on its right as they apply to private people a reflection on its sovereignty. But in justice, in equity, in all the principles that it is supposed Congress will enforce, and which up to this day it has administered, and which to the Atlantic and Pacific road on yesterday it administered, it is presumed that we are the impartial guardians of justice and right between the people and the corporations and that we will apply these principles as we require citizens to observe them in their dealing with each other.

We have not only sat still, we have aided the road since 1879. I remember that my attention was called some years ago to an affirmative act of Congress, passed in 1882, in aid of the Northern Pacific Railway. I had occasion to pass through the Crow reservation, and great discontent existed among those Indians because of an alleged violation of our agreement as to the right of way through their reservation. Long after 1879, long after the time of the forfeiture now claimed by this substitute had passed by, we not only acquiesced in allowing this railroad company to go on, but the Congress of the United States affirmatively aided the company in obtaining from the Crow Indians the lands needed for the construction of their road. In volume 22 of the Revised Statutes, pages 157, 158, and 159, you will find an act approved July 10, 1882, the substance of which is:

Whereas by section 1 of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, on the Pacific coast, by the northern route" (13 Statutes at Large, page 365), the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was authorized and empowered to lay out, locate, construct, furnish, maintain, and enjoy a continuous railroad and telegraph line, with the appurtenances, namely: Beginning at a point on Lake Superior in the State of Minnesota or Wisconsin, thence westerly by the most eligible railroad route, as shall be determined by said company, within the territory of the United States, on a line north of the forty-fifth degree of latitude, to some point on Puget Sound; and

Whereas—

Certain rights were given to it which I need not stop to read—

Whereas the said company desires to construct its line of railroad upon such designated route, and claims the right by virtue of said act so to do—

Which Congress then conceded.

And whereas a reservation held by the Crow Indians was in the way of their line, therefore Congress say—

A strip of land not exceeding 400 feet in width; that is to say, 200 feet on each side of the line laid down on the map of definite location hereinbefore mentioned, wherever said line runs through said reservation between the one hundred and seventh degree of longitude west of Greenwich on the east and the mid-channel of the Big Boulder River on the west, containing 5,384 acres, more or less—

Shall be given to that road.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect the sum of $25,000 is hereby set aside, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be deposited in the United States Treasury to the credit of the Crow tribe of Indians, and to be expended for the benefit of the said Indians in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct.

Then it goes on to provide:

But the land, or any part thereof, relinquished to the United States by said agreement shall not be used for railroad purposes by or for the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, its successors or assigns, except upon the condition-precedent that the said company, its successors or assigns, shall, within sixty days from the taking effect of this act, pay to the Treasurer of the United States said sum of $25,000 hereby appropriated, to be paid by the United States for the lands relinquished to the United States by said agreement, and shall, within the same time, file with the Secretary of the Interior its written acceptance of the conditions of this section.

All of which was done and the money paid to the Indians after some delay.

That act was approved July 10, 1882, three years after. We are now asked to go back and forfeit everything for non-compliance with the terms of the original grant. By that act of 1882 nearly 100 miles through the Indian reservation was obtained by Congress for the railroad company, and even before the payment of $25,000 to the Indians it was given to the company and the road built over it.

I ask Senators what in the face of that affirmative action of Congress three years after 1879, to wit, July 10, 1882, would be the assumption of the world, of the people of the United States, as to the attitude of Congress supported by the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman, and others of like character, and what would be the view of persons desiring to purchase lands, bonds, or stock of the company when Congress had not only not declared or attempted to declare a forfeiture because of the non-completion of the road in 1879 but on the contrary had voluntarily stepped in and made arrangements by an act full of recital of the rights of the company to continue it without complaint because of delay and obtain rights of way from Indian tribes, and became the fiduciary, appropriating the money from the Treasury which was to be paid back by the road? If that was not a full recognition of all the rights the road ever had, I am unable to understand the meaning of language or appreciate the force of co-operative action.

Surely the presumption of law in the face of that act of Congress, and the assumption of every man who desired to buy the lands, the stock, or the mortgage bonds of the road, would be that the Government of the United States did not intend to declare a forfeiture, even though they might have the power. On the contrary, the recitals of that act furnish conclusive evidence that Congress was urging the road forward by every means in its power to the Pacific, so that by means of that great line we could control the trade of this continent and the countries beyond the Pacific, instead of allowing the Canadian line to do so, which, as every intelligent member of the House and Senate knew, was being built just north of it for that purpose.

Did men buy the mortgage bonds and deal in the stocks on the assumption that Congress was sustaining the road long after 1879, and that all its earned lands belonged to it? You have only to look at the New York papers every day to see that the stock of the Northern Pacific Railroad is being sold in the open market to everybody. The mortgage bonds were of course sold to everybody. The men who hold these bonds to-day, the men who hold the lands and the stock, may have bought them since 1879 in open market, bought in the faith and belief as they had a right to believe by the action of the Congress of the United States that it did not intend to enforce or assert anything in the nature of a forfeiture, because of any failure in point of time in its completion. The present holders of stock, bonds, and lands of the company may all be men who did not own one dollar of the original stock or get one dollar of the advantage which it is claimed has been given to such a large extent to the original projectors of the line of road. Surely in the face of these facts before we undertake to declare a forfeiture reaching back to 1879, before we undertake to say that the people of the United States who have since that time bought the bonds, the lands, or the stock of the road, and own it now, having paid full value for it, shall lose it all, we will at least inquire carefully how far they may have been led to make these investments by our action or non-action, and how far they may have been induced to believe that they were receiving the property purchased with the assent, if not the guarantee, of the Congress of the United States.

Surely we ought at least to give careful consideration by a committee of the Senate of a bill which seeks to strike all that property down, so that they and their friends and attorneys may be heard; and if they can show cause against it, this body should at least have a report showing upon what ground such a forfeiture is based before we should be called upon to act upon it, and not bankrupt hundreds of people without warning by an amendment to a bill which had nothing to do with this great question, and that we were told by the committee had never been considered by them. I can not consent to declare all that property and all these rights forfeited to the United States in view of all these facts and many more of like character that might be cited.

I am prepared to go as far as any man in seeing to it that the lands of this country are reserved for homesteads and given to our own people. I may be prepared to go too far. I felt at one time as though even if we were straining a point I might vote for some amendment asserting our right to declare a forfeiture and remit all these questions in regard to all land-grant roads to the courts; but, on reflection, the injustice of it and the ruinous consequences seemed to me so great as to demand deliberation and extremely well-considered legislation, reserving the rights of the United States and all their people, and reserving the rights of the present owners of that great property, whether they are stockholders, bondholders, or holders of lands, every one of whom may, I repeat, for aught I know, be innocent purchasers since 1879.

I determined, therefore, that I would go no farther at present than to forfeit the unearned land on this road from Wallula to Portland and the unfinished portion of the Cascade branch, leaving all other questions to the Committee on Public Lands to still further and more carefully consider all the rights of the United States, whatever they may be ascertained to be, these rights being carefully guarded by the section which I had the honor to propose, and which was adopted, I believe, by the unanimous vote of the Senate.

I desired only to say this much as a reason for declining at present to vote for amendments which have not been considered and which, I believe, when they are considered will not meet with the approval of the American people.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question, not a technical question in any sense. I should like to ask him whether he understands that, so far as the right or power of forfeiture is concerned, the law applied to the Atlantic and Pacific road was the same law as should be applied to the Northern Pacific?

Mr. BECK. As far as I am advised it is, and I think perhaps it is a little stronger in favor of the right of the Northern Pacific than it was as to the Atlantic and Pacific, although I have not examined either of them with the care that a person would who was charged with that business; but I find in the RECORD of to-day a copy of the mortgage of the Atlantic and Pacific road, which is not as broad as I understand is the mortgages made by the Northern Pacific road, because, after giving the right to mortgage, the act of April 20, 1871, contains the following proviso:

Provided, That if the company shall hereafter suffer any breach of the conditions of the act above referred to, under which it is organized, the rights of those claiming under any mortgage made by the company to the lands granted to it by said act shall extend only to as much thereof as shall be coterminous with or appertain to that part of said road which shall have been constructed at the time of the foreclosure of said mortgage.

This, I think, was a limitation upon the right of the mortgagees and a warning to them that if they did take that mortgage they took it subject to foreclosure or subject to whatever might happen and that it should not reach beyond what was already earned, and they could not complain if they did not get anything beyond that. If there is any such limitation on the right of the Northern Pacific mortgagees I am not aware of it.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, there is not the slightest similarity, in my humble judgment, between the two cases. When the Senator from Kentucky says that he has not carefully examined the laws that explains the extraordinary statement he lately made that in the one case we are proposing a forfeiture of the lands and that in another and identical case we are confirming the title to the lands. So far as I am concerned I am not in favor of discriminating in favor of any railroad corporation whatsoever. I am in favor of enforcing the laws of the United States, and I can show to the satisfaction of even the Senator himself, if he will give me his attention, that the reason why the two Houses passed that law to which he has referred and by which they recognize that title although those lands conterminous to that line of road have been acquired only after the extension of the term fixed in the grant, is perfectly plain and evident as a matter of law; and it is equally plain and equally evident that the rule which was applied in that case and controlled the action of Congress has not the remotest application to the case which we have under consideration.

In the case of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company Congress merely conferred upon the corporation a general power to mortgage. It could mortgage its lands, its franchises, its property, mixed, personal, and real. In a case of that kind the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that whenever this general power of mortgaging lands was conferred upon a railroad corporation, it did not pass the legal title, and that you could raise no implication by reason of this power being conferred against the power of the Government. That remained as it was before, unlimited and absolute. That is to say, it conferred this grant subject to the right of forfeiture. Therefore when that question came up before the Supreme Court of the United States, the railroad corporation took the position that the Senator from Kentucky takes; and what did the Supreme Court of the United States say?

It is not necessary to go into the merely technical question whether the legal title passed from the United States by virtue of that mortgage and the act of Congress which authorized it, nor whether, if it ever becomes necessary to foreclose that mortgage, the rights of the United States in the land would be divested by the proceeding—because we are satisfied that the United States, until she conveys them by patent or otherwise, has an interest, whether it be legal or equitable, which the State of Nebraska is not at liberty to divest by the exercise of the right of taxation.

Therefore in the case of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company where the general power to mortgage has been given, that power to mortgage can be exercised only in subordination to the conditions upon which the grant has been made. But the power to mortgage in the case of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad was entirely different. That was not a case where the Government of the United States gave a general power to the corporation to mortgage the lands. It was a case where they not only gave the power to mortgage, but they defined what should be the effect of the exercise of that power; and what was that? That there should be no breach of the condition in the grant so far as the mortgagees were concerned until the foreclosure of the mortgage. That is to say, in the case of the North Pacific Railroad the mortgage and the rights of the mortgagees were subjected to the conditions in the grant, and in the case of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad the condition of the grant was subjected to the rights of the mortgagees. I will read the statute which applies to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company:

Provided, That if the company shall hereafter suffer any breach of the conditions of the act above referred to—

That is to say, if there be a breach of condition, such as the noncompletion of the road within the time specified—the rights of those claiming under any mortgage made by the company to the lands granted to it by said act shall extend only to as much thereof as shall be coterminous with or appertain to that part of said road which shall have been constructed—at the time of the foreclosure of said mortgage.

And the legal effect of this provision is simply this, that if the railroad was to be completed within ten years, that condition was effaced from the statute, and the new condition was imposed which extended to the time of the foreclosure of the mortgage. Why? For the simple reason that no benefit could accrue to the Government of the United States from forfeiting lands upon which there was a mortgage for their full value and which they recognized notwithstanding the road had not been completed within the time prescribed.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Louisiana of course is much more familiar with the matter than I am; but it seems to me that the act of May 31, 1870, volume 16 of the Statutes at Large, page 379, is as broad and as comprehensive—and I would like to hear the Senator from Louisiana explain this—as it is possible to be, and this proviso is part of it:

Provided, That all lands hereby granted to said company which shall not be sold or disposed of or remain subject to the mortgage by this act authorized, at the expiration of five years after the completion of the entire road, shall be subject to settlement and pre-emption like other lands.

That seems to be a reservation not only of the whole of it, not merely the completed portion, for five years after the road is finally completed from end to end before anybody else can take any rights. It seems to be a wonderfully broad provision.

Mr. EUSTIS. But it does not specify what the effect of it shall be.

Mr. GEORGE. That only applies to lands within the extra indemnity limits granted by that act. Before that time the indemnity limits extended 10 miles on each side beyond the 40 miles within which the alternate sections were taken. By that act they were allowed 10 miles more, and I have read the discussion on that. That provision applies solely to the "lands hereby granted," within the extra 10 miles.

Mr. BECK. And that might be a very large amount, because as it went through the Crow reservation for one hundred and odd miles they had to go outside all that distance to get anything. But my object was to show that there were so many serious questions that the committee ought to carefully consider involving the rights of the parties, that we should be careful before we vote on the forfeiture.

Mr. EUSTIS. I merely rose to explain the difference between the laws regulating the rights of these two corporations because the Senator from Kentucky expressed very grave apprehensions that our action would result in very inconsistent legislation and indicated, although I know he did not mean it, that we were showing favors to one railroad corporation by confirming their grant and were dealing very harshly and unjustly with an equally deserving other corporation. I wish to tell the Senator from Kentucky that the position I have taken I intend to maintain regardless of any corporations or regardless of any localities or interests, and that is that wherever there has been a breach of condition with reference to any of those land grants, because of breach of condition I am in favor of forfeiting those land grants.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, one of the very earliest recollections of my boyhood connected with politics was the universal complaint of extravagance and wastefulness in the disposition of the public domain. The old Whig party, with whom I associated in those days, were eloquent upon the subject, and from that time to the present it is rare that you will meet a man at all acquainted with the condition of our country who will not deplore the wastefulness and the extravagance which has been observed in the disposal of our public domain, and deplore the easy virtue of Congresses which have lavished it away. Especially has this been so since the system of subsidizing railroads has been entered upon by grants of the public lands, and you will meet with no one, not even excepting those who were instrumental in making the grants, who will not tell you that it is all very wretched and that the legislation was very improvident, and that it is a great pity that it can not be stopped. Then they will talk about the virtue of giving homes to the people and checking the power of corporations and the accumulation of land in a few hands that should be reserved for the individual citizens; but it is still rarer to find a man and a legislator who is willing to put a stop to this when the opportunity is afforded.

Why, Mr. President, it seems to be admitted, certainly it has been admitted by some of the opponents of this amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], that the Government is not estopped from forfeiture in this case, and, even where it is not admitted, I submit in all candor that it will be held by the best legal minds of this country to have been established by this discussion that the Government is not estopped in this case from forfeiture. If it is not estopped from forfeiture, if the rights of the people have not been given away, if the power is still in the hands of the American Legislature to save the remnants of this great domain for homes for the people, I say if legally and technically it is within our reach, what equities are there that appeal to the consciences of Senators not to enforce the legal remedy which is in our power. What hardship, what injustice has been perpetrated upon this railroad company? What sufferings or wrongs will be inflicted if we avail ourselves of our legal right?

I confess, sir, that the statement of the case and all the facts surrounding it, instead of appealing to my good nature or to my tender sensibilities to extend favors and concessions still more to this great corporation have the reverse effect upon me.

Since this discussion has been going on I have looked more into the history of this corporation than I had ever done before, and I have come to the solemn conclusion that I am not only ready to avail myself in the name of the American people of every legal, technical, or whatever other remedy can be gained in the courts to preserve and to take back as far as possible all of these public lands that have not honestly been earned by these corporations according to the terms of the grants, but I feel inclined to go still further. I would not only vote for the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, but I would go so far as to vote for a bill that would be as effective as the Yankee's scarecrow, which he described in his advertisements as being so terrible that it not only made the crows quit stealing his corn, but made them bring back all the corn they had stolen the year before. [Laughter.]

If it was possible, I say, within the forms of law to pass a bill through this Congress that would not only preserve to the Government and the people the lands which the railroad corporations have not earned, but would make them bring back and restore that which they have defrauded the people of through Congressional legislation, I would gladly vote for it.

While I do not boast much about my conscience—I never knew a man that did talk much about his conscience but what would bear watching, and a good deal of it [laughter]—I profess to have quite as much as any other Senator, and I am ready now to assure you that if I could be instrumental in passing a bill that would restore to the people of these United States all the lands and all other property of which they have been defrauded by loose, improper, inconsiderate, or corrupt legislation in the last forty years I should not lose a moment's peace in the consideration of it.

What are the hardships that would attend a forfeiture in this case? The company has received nothing but favors from the time that it applied for its charter. It has never appeared before this body except to ask a new favor; and even the beneficence, to call it nothing else, which Congress has shown in granting these favors, according to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], has been extended to this corporation at the cost of a waiver of all the rights of the Government. A mendicant approaches you and asks you for a quarter; you give it to him, and therefore you acknowledge that he has a right to the balance of the money that is in your pocket, and you have waived all your just claims upon it!

Why, sir, this amendment would inflict no hardship upon those who have bought homes or parcels of land from the railroad corporation, because their rights are protected and reserved. They did not fail to comply within the time prescribed in the grant after due diligence, because it has been elicited in this discussion, and is not denied, that for more than six years the company were idle and struck not a spade in the ground. About one-half of the time which they were given to complete the road according to the contract they were idle. If they had used their utmost endeavors and had failed after due diligence, then they could appeal to the generosity and to the magnanimity of their country, but they did not do so. They have not lost money by a hard bargain. If so, then I should be very happy myself to be the victim of such a bargain. How have they suffered? I believe it has been likewise elicited in the discussion that not one single dollar of money was ever advanced out of the pockets of the stockholders for the purpose of building a mile of this road. If I am not mistaken, that is the case.

Mr. GEORGE. I made the assertion exactly as the Senator has repeated it, that not a dollar was paid in. It has never been denied.

Mr. VANCE. In other words, every mile of road that they have constructed, and which is now their property, has been made out of the gift of the people of the United States; and if the gift were to stop short now, how could they be said to be the victims of a hard bargain?

Why, sir, I have gleaned a few figures from the report of the Commissioner of Railroads and the speeches of Senators on this subject, and I find that by estimation the lands which have been granted to this road are worth $108,000,000, and they are constantly rising in price in the market; that the whole road when completed will not exceed a cost of $75,000,000, and when completed they will then have on hand a road worth $75,000,000, if you estimate it at simply what it cost without noticing any other element of value connected with it—$75,000,000—they will have on hand surplus lands over and above the price of constructing the road worth $33,000,000.

All this is the gift of the people of the United States, and it is now objected to going back to take an inconsiderable portion of these lands from them, which were not earned within the time prescribed by the grant; and grave Senators, admitting the legal power of the Government to enforce its forfeiture under the hard rules of law, appeal to the equity of Senators and to the magnanimity of the American people not to crush these poor little railroad incorporators, when every man of them has been enriched by the gift of the people's money, has been rendered affluent by a gift of the homes of American women and children; and we are to give them still more, and they announce at the same time that they not only failed to finish their road within the time prescribed by law, but it is admitted here for them by one of their most eloquent advocates, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], that they never intend to finish that portion of it from Wallula to Portland, 214 miles. That is forever to be unfinished. They have no idea of completing it. Where are the equities, I ask again, that appeal to the magnanimity of Congress or of the American people?

Mr. President, if we were as ready here when the opportunity is afforded to resist the arguments and the blandishments of power and of wealth as we are to discourse wisely and virtuously, with the whites of our eyes upturned to heaven, before the people, there would be quite a different kind of legislation enacted here to that which I have been witnessing since I have been in this body. All this public domain should sacredly be reserved for homes for the people.

Mr. President, perhaps there are some Senators who look beyond the mere present, who occasionally stop and put aside the busy thought of the busy hour and look at what is to befall our children in the coming generations and look at what is to befall the people of these happy United States when our population shall be overcrowed and overflowing like that of many of the countries of the Old World; when thousands and hundreds of thousands and millions of our people shall have neither homes nor the means of obtaining homes. What may we expect when our land is thus overcrowded? We have no vast standing army to preserve order by the shedding of blood, and I trust in God we never shall have. Then we shall have our land filled to overflowing with unemployed, landless, and homeless people; and a landless and a homeless and an unemployed and a starving man will always be a dangerous citizen. A man who has a home and a family and a breathing place, and room for the display of his industry and activity upon this earth, will never be a disorderly man.

The very wisest legislation and the most important object to which American Senators could address themselves would be to this great question of preserving, so far as possible, room and homes for our people in the future, to avert the day of peril. Home is the dearest and the sweetest word in the English language. There is scarcely an association worthy of the commemoration of man that is not connected with home. Home is the source, the nursery, and the breeding-place of man's happiness, prosperity, and civilization; the stability of free institutions and of liberty itself depends upon our homes, and such homes can not be obtained if we ruthlessly and extravagantly cast away this great heritage and permit it to pass into the hands of soulless corporations, that will deal it out as they deem proper and in large estates perhaps or at exorbitant prices to our citizens.

That is the view which I take of this great question. Those are the reasons which influence my vote, and I trust if the time shall not be now, yet at no very distant day I shall see a different spirit prevail in this country on that question to that which I fear prevails now.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I would suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that this land, although it may be owned in part now by this railroad company, is still capable of making homes for the people. One would suppose, to listen to the Senator's argument made this afternoon, that the railroad company by some process, by some proceeding, was about to destroy all this vast area of country and render it uninhabitable. The land will be there whether the title is in the Government or whether the title is in the railroad company; and there will be as many homes upon it undoubtedly in twenty or fifty years from now as if the Government had retained all the lands.

As I said the other day, this is not a question of the policy of granting land to railroad companies. When we have forfeited all the unearned lands we have declared against that policy. It may be in good taste and it may be proper for the Senator from North Carolina to speak of this grant as a fraud and a robbery. I think, Mr. President, if the Senator would turn his memory back to the day when this grant was made, it would be in better taste for him to be silent upon that subject. I am quite willing to listen to criticism of the men who made, as I think they did make, a mistake when they granted away so much public land for this purpose. I am not quite prepared to sit here in the Senate and hear the men who were as patriotic, as faithful, and as honest as any men who ever sat in this body or any other accused of robbery of the people.. It was a time when those great men who were dealing with great subjects had something else to do beside think of what would be the condition of the country in fifty or one hundred years. They were concerned as to what would be its condition the next day and the day thereafter. When the Senator and his friends were in arms against the Government of the United States, when they were presenting to the Senate and to the House of Representatives questions that had never been presented to a legislative body in the world, it is not strange that the men dealing with those great questions might not have dealt as clearheadedly as the Senator can in these days of peace and quietude; but that they dealt as honestly and as patriotically nobody will deny.

I said the other day that I would not have voted for these grants had I been a member of the Senate. I repeat it, I would not then; but I would have done just what they did do with the great Pacific roads; I would have voted them money instead of voting them lands. I would have aided these great enterprises to build their roads across the continent. There is not any man who can stand up here and make it appear to the intelligent American people that the policy of connecting the Atlantic and the Pacific by railway was an unwise policy. It was the height of statesmanship and it was the height of patriotism, and if it had cost fourfold what those roads did cost it would still have been wisdom. There is not time now and it is not worth while to enter into a defense of those men, at this period.

The simple question here is did we vest the title in this railroad corporation? Whether we should repeat it or not, is not the question; but did we do it? Within two days I have heard it denied that we vested the title in the corporation. The Supreme Court of the United States, the court of last resort, has so declared over and over again; it is consonant with the opinions of the legal fraternity for two hundred and fifty or three hundred years; it is in keeping with the unbroken line, notwithstanding what has been said on the other side of the Chamber, of judicial decision for more than a quarter of a century.

I did not say, as the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] made me say in the RECORD, that the passive acquiescence of the Government of the United States vested a title; not at all. It was vested by the act; it went into this corporation, a title to be taken out of it by nobody under any circumstances, except for a failure to perform the condition subsequent, and then only at the option of the grantor.

Mr. President, all my life as a lawyer I have dealt with this class of subjects; I have dealt with but little other than real-estate law; and when I said the other day on the floor of the Senate that it was the unbroken line of decisions, I spoke that which I knew could not be denied and successfully controverted on this floor.

I have heard to my astonishment in the discussion here that a condition precedent and a condition subsequent were not distinguished by the speakers. I can not determine whether it is because they have failed to give attention, or whether it is because they are addressing the public. It seems to me this debate has proceeded for three days not to the Senate, not to the legal ability of this body, but to the public, to make it appear that there was a wrong being perpetrated by this body now as there had been twenty-odd years ago in depriving the people of that which legally belongs to them, the right to occupy the public lands. I am as ready to throw safeguards around the public lands as anybody living; and the Senator from North Carolina, whether he is the lineal representative now here of the old Whig party, of which he speaks, or of that other party of which he is now a bright and shining light, has no right to refer to the past history of either of these parties to bring in contrast that of the Republican party since it has dealt with the public lands, for it has shown everywhere a greater desire to give to the people the land than ever either of the old political parties of which he speaks did.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. VANCE. I simply want to remark that when a Senator on that side of the Chamber, in reply to my argument against a wasteful extravagance in granting away the public lands, the homes of the people, replies that I was engaged in the rebellion, I know then that the Lord hath delivered mine enemy into my hands!

Mr. TELLER. I understand that the honorable Senator does not deny that he was engaged in it, but I have understood he was rather an unwilling operator sometimes. He was not as energetic perhaps as some of the rest, but still he was there participating. I refer to that with no idea of reflecting on the Senator. I refer to it to show that when these acts were passed it was not in such times as this, it was not with the light that we have now; that when we were anxious to connect the Atlantic and the Pacific it was at a time when it was not certain that we could maintain the integrity of the empire, it was at a time when there was an inducement for the western coast people to cast their lot with another government.

Every inducement ought to have been and was given to them by the Government of the United States, and I repeat again that the condition of affairs then was such that it would be, I think, at least modest for the gentlemen who assail the men then in power to stop and think whether under those circumstances they might not in their places have done the same thing. It was a time when the Government did not have millions locked up in the Treasury of the United States. It was a time when the Government was straining every energy to develop every interest in the country to maintain its great Army, to keep peace at home and to conquer rebellion in at least one-third of its territory. Those questions had no relation to a mere matter of law, and I would not have referred to them but that every argument which has been made for two days has been made not upon the law of the case, but upon an address to the people at large, an arraignment of the Republican party in its past dealing with public lands. I shall be prepared at a proper hour of the day at any time to show that in all our relations to the land laws of this country we stand a head and shoulders above any other political party, and I challenge the other side of this Chamber with a full knowledge of every statute that has been passed on this subject to show a tithe of the interest in favor of the people who toil on the farm with that which we have crystallized into law. If I was not familiar with the history of the whole settlement of the West, as well as with the legislation, I might not venture to make such a challenge, but I do it with a knowledge of the law and of the facts.

I will take occasion some day to reply to some of the assertions made on that side of the Chamber, which have no relation to this bill, with reference to our conduct in relation to the public lands, and I will show that the statements made here are untrue from the record—unwittingly made, I know, because they are taken from public magazines and other sources where writers, ignorant of the facts, have asserted things that can not be sustained from the record.

This, I repeat again, is a question of law. The company has performed its condition, and the right of the Government of the United States, in my opinion, is gone; and it does not make any difference whether the company has been loyal to the trust imposed, or whether it has not. It has performed its condition, and, in the language of the law, repeated in every elementary book and repeated by every court, the condition once performed is gone forever.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I have no apology to make for these great railroads; I have nothing but pride, satisfaction, and congratulation to express concerning the action of this great Government in building those magnificent lines. It is one of the noblest chapters in the history of the great Republic; I am proud of every vote our predecessors gave; I am proud of every step they took toward building them. I have no repentance for any acre of land that was given to them. We did the best we could at the time.

We were in the great agonies of a tremendous war. All these gentlemen had forsworn their right and title to all that property, had left us and gone away. It was a struggle for national existence. That land that the Northern Pacific Railroad holds now, and which is filling up with a great and prosperous and powerful people, was held then by the howling savage, the fiercest bands within our limits. We said, "Whoso builds this road, we will make him rich; we will give him the dominion of a prince if he will bind the two sides of this continent together and strengthen us in the new republic that we are to build here," if these other men succeed in establishing another. I am glad we did it; it was an act of foresight, an act of great statesmanship. I am proud of every page and of every letter of it.

Now, as to the details of those bills that more than twenty years ago were passed I do not speak. Those Territories are beginning to fill up, and it seems that somebody has made some money out of the roads. While tens of thousands of families have lost nearly all they had in the investment from time to time, somebody is making a fortune out of it. That is what we hear; and yet four or five years passed before anybody undertook to accept our offer and organize companies. Now we are turning around to see that we might have made a sharper bargain; that if we had known how well this would eventually succeed we might have had the road built for fewer acres. Now we will study every crook and turn and cranny of the law to see if we can not take back what we once cheerfully offered.

All the technicalities of estoppel and waiver are of no use as against the Government. We permitted these people to go on. We passed acts of renewal, acts intended to strengthen them; we assisted them in getting the title of the Indians to the lands; we inspected every 25 miles of the road in sections, and approved them, and said to the railroad company every time we accepted 25 miles of finished road, "That is good; go on with this work." And now we turn around seven years after the limitation has expired and say: "For all that was unfinished in 1879 we shall take back the corresponding lands. Much of it is yet held in the Land Office not yet patented to you; a great deal of it is patented; it is sold to actual settlers and they are upon it; but all that we can possibly get back by any turn or twist of the law we are going to take." I will not do it.

A great government like ours is bound to behave like a gentleman; and after it stood by here for the larger part of twenty years and permitted these people to go on and cheered them in their course, it has no right now as a prosperous government, a great and glorious government, as a gentleman among governments, to rise up and plead the tricks and quirps of the law. We made in some respects a bad bargain. The only one thing about it that I regret is that we did not affix to all these grants of land conditions saying, "You shall sell these lands at $1.25 or $2 or $3 or $4 an acre—fix a price so that they may always be open to anybody who will take them, to the end that there may not come to be untimately an enormous accumulation of lands in the hands of the corporation." I am opposed to that. I would regulate and restrict the accumulation of great landed estates by every means in my power.

I have voted for some bills to that effect this session, and will vote for more if we can do it fairly and justly; but as for repenting of anything, as for playing the tricks of Shylock on these companies that to the glory of the American name have welded this continent, that to the glory of the United States have constructed lines of railroad that would make five belts around the globe—as for repenting of anything that the Republican party or my country did in building these roads, I will not do it. I am proud of it all.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I do not care to enter into the discussion of this question at length, but, sir, remarks have been made by Senators who were professedly discussing the legal aspects of this question which were not warranted by the facts, and therefore I propose to make answer briefly to them.

Why a Senator should declare that land grants to the Pacific railroads were passed through Congress by corruption, or insinuate that corrupt Congresses had passed them, I can not understand, nor will I remain quiet and listen to such remarks without responding.

It is a well-known fact that the Democratic party and the Republican party in their platforms declared in favor of Pacific railroads, and that these land grants were passed by the votes of both parties and not by the votes of one party; and for Senators now to rise in their places and undertake to cast a stigma upon the Republican party and charge that they are responsible for the wrongs that have accumulated on account of these corporations is without foundation and ought not to be uttered by an honorable Senator.

Some of the Senators on the other side of the Chamber have spoken of the land being taken by the hands of robbers out of the hands of the poor who are entitled to homesteads. Sir, in response to that, let me ask you when the Democratic party, while they were in power, ever gave homesteads to the people of this land? No, sir; it was left to the Republican party to enact the homestead law, and to Abraham Lincoln to sign it; and it comes with a bad grace from Senators on the other side of the Chamber to accuse the Republican party of not being the friend of the homeless. Sir, the insinuation is without foundation in fact.

But, sir, let us look at this question in its moral as well as in its legal aspect. The proposition made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] is, I believe, to take from the Northern Pacific Railroad Company the lands that were granted to it by the Government the length of the uncompleted portion of the railroad in the year 1879, but which has been completed and accepted since. The Congress of the United States did not attempt to forfeit this part of the grant prior to the completion of the road, but permitted the company to mortgage the property and complete the road, and after its completion you wish to step in and forfeit the grant; and since the road has been completed and the grant recognized as the property of the corporation by virtue of the authority of law enacted by Congress, you propose by and through a grown-up prejudice against railroads to destroy the contract of the Government with these parties merely because you think it will be to you some political advantage. Sir, there is not a fair and unprejudiced lawyer on that side of this Chamber who believes in the legality and justice of such an act.

There is not a court in the land that would not decide that the forfeiture not having been declared until after the completion of the road without objection on the part of the Government while it was being constructed, that at this time it would not be just and equitable to declare the forfeiture, and that if you forfeit the lands now you do it without that justice, fair dealing, and honesty that should be exercised in dealings between man and man or Government and man. You may have the power to do it, and if you do do it it is because you have the power and not because you think it fair and just to all parties.

The Government gave these lands to the company to enable them to build the road from the money that might be accumulated from the sale of the lands and the bonds based upon the lands, and for that the Government took upon itself the right to double the price of every even section along on either side of the railroad, so that the Government should obtain as much money when the road was built for its lands that it should sell as it would have obtained from all the lands—those given to the railroad company and those retained by the Government.

That was the proposition. The Government was to sell its lands retained for two dollars and a half per acre, and thereby reimburse itself. But, sir, some people wish the Government not only to be reimbursed but want these lands taken from the railroad company which they have acquired under the law and sell them also. In other words after you have obtained a sufficient amount of money to pay for the whole of the lands, the Government must take the gift back into its hands and resell and speculate on that, and yet gentlemen favoring this proposition talk about the Government being robbed. For a great government like this to make a contract and agreement or to pass a law authorizing these people to acquire land by performing a certain act and doubling the price of its lands and receiving that price and as soon as it has received that amount of money, twice the amount the land was valued at, and get it into its coffers, then it is to reach out and take the rest of the land and say "we will have that too!" Mr. President, is this right?

Will any man claim that this would be an honest transaction? Would it be so between individuals? You sell a man an acre of ground provided he puts up a certain house on it. You double the value of your acre of ground retained, and sell it for that double price; and whenever he completes the house you go on and say, "You will take the land his house is on because he did not finish the house as soon as he promised, although you made no claim of failure in the contract as to time until he finished the house;" and you call that an honest transaction. I do not.

I did not assist in granting these lands or giving them away, as you term it, to these railroads, but I take part of the responsibility for those of my party who did. But you charge the responsibility on the Republican party, and, as was well said by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], gentlemen who had nothing to do with it, gentlemen who had nothing to do with this Government at that time; persons who then were not in sympathy with this Government; persons who were then trying to wreck the Government; persons who were then opposed to every act performed by the Government for its own restoration, now come here and criticise every act that was done in reference to developing the great resources of this country, and appeal to the people of this land and tell them that they have been robbed by the Republican party!

Senators will allow me to say to them that it does not come in the best grace from gentlemen who did not participate in the affairs of the Government at that time to rise now in this Chamber and criticise the action of the party that had control of the Government, and now for the sake of making political capital to come here and denounce the action of Congress and the conduct of those who had charge of this Government in maintaining and restoring it to its unity, its strength, and its power, and criticise the party that did save and re-establish it, and because they then opened great highways to the Pacific Ocean whereby our Territories might be teeming with an industrious and energetic population.

I am not opposed to the rights of any portion or of any class of people in this country; but I am in favor of honesty toward all in our conduct as legislators representing the whole people, and I would treat a railroad corporation just as I would treat an individual, or an individual just as I would treat a railroad corporation. If I make a contract with an individual, and that individual complies with the law, I then am bound to comply on my part; and if the contract is suspended for a time and then I permit the contract to go on and be completed, I am morally bound to carry out my part of it.

The mere fact that these grantees suspended work for a time, did not go on with the road, and we failed to do on our part, does not authorize you to do what you propose to do now. Your course caused them to believe that they would acquire the land under the law, and it is certainly the duty of the Government to redeem all its promises. And now because there is a rage against what is called monopolies you think it will be popular, and therefore you are willing to violate an honest, fair contract; you are willing to deprive persons of rights they have acquired under your laws; you are willing to make this Government stand in the eyes of the civilized nations of the world as a government that agrees to propositions and when they are carried out acts in bad faith and destroys the contract itself; you are willing to double your price for your land and, when you have sold it, then to take from the other party that which they have acquired. That is your proposition. That is exactly what you propose to do, and I am opposed to acting in bad faith.

I am willing to vote for the forfeiture of every land grant in this country where the companies have not made effort to comply with the contract, where they have failed on their part; but where we have permitted them to go on under the law and carry out according to the proposition that was laid down by Congress for them to act under and then they have done that and earned the grant given them, I am not willing to agree to bad faith on the part of the Government.

Sir, there is such a thing as people being honest and being fair. There is such a thing as persons sometimes going a little too far in their political career by attacking others merely for the purpose of augmenting their own power as a political organization; but I will say to the Senators who attempt to do this that whenever before a great, intelligent people such as we have in this country men try to play a part that is not fair and honorable for the purpose of adding strength to their political organization, they will fail. It only requires a little time for the people to reflect and see what objects men have in view when they attempt such legislation.

I say to Senators who have had but little to do with this affair that the less they say about the management of this Government by the Republican party during the time they were claiming to be outside, the better it will be for their organization. I have no disposition, nor has any of those with with whom I am associated politically, to taunt men on account of their positions during the war. I have never felt so inclined, and I do not now; but beware that you do not taunt the party that saved this Government and the people who lived under it during this terrible trial with what they did in order to preserve it and extend its resources.

If you leave it off, so do we; but you must not insinuate that for nearly twenty years during the time the power of this country was in the hands of the Republican party it was used corruptly during the period of this great struggle between this Government and your section. Our party was doing all they could to save this country, and to develop the growth and the interest of this great land of ours. Let that be.

So far as the legal aspects of the question are concerned that is a different proposition. Nobody objects to your discussing this or any other question on that ground.

Mr. President, I hope the substitute of the Senator from Louisiana may be defeated. I am for the bill as it now is.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate more than a few moments. I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. I want, however, to say that I am surprised at the turn which the debate has taken. Gentlemen on the other side complain that the arguments used on this side of the Chamber have been directed from partisan motives. I have listened to several gentlemen here. I listened to the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] who made an able, eloquent, and legal argument in favor of the forfeiture of the lands which are now claimed by the Northern Pacific Railroad. I listened a few days ago, and listened again to-day, with great pleasure to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], who made a legal argument which I say here is unanswered and unanswerable.

I listened to-day with a great deal of care to the legal argument presented by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. The argument was a strictly legal argument, sustained by decisions of the Supreme Court. From neither of these gentlemen did I hear one single allusion to the Republican party. They spoke of a public act not as the act of the Republican party or of the Democratic party, but they spoke of an act which, in their judgment, was unwise, an act which took from the people of this country forty or fifty millions of acres of the public domain; but, so far as I now remember, not a single allusion was made to the Republican party. While they condemned that act they said nothing about who was responsible for that act. I am therefore surprised that gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber should rise up and charge Senators on this side in discussing a public question with being influenced by party considerations.

Now, sir, all that I have heard of a partisan nature has been from the other side of the Chamber. I heard the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], I heard the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], I heard the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and every word, except what they have said, has been uttered in reference to party action. There has been an attempt on the other side of the Chamber to defend an act which they seemed to suppose their own party was responsible for. So far as the discussion on this side of the Chamber is concerned I have heard nothing of a party character, but strictly a legal presentation of the questions now before the Senate and before the country.

Mr. President, notwithstanding the criticism which has been made of the expression of opinion about this act, I shall take it upon myself to say without reference to who is responsible—for I do not know who voted for or who voted against these land grants—that a more unwise and more wrongful act never was committed upon the people of this country than to take thirty, forty, or fifty millions of acres of the public domain and give it to a few incorporators of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company for the purposes of that corporation. They were men of means, men of capital, men of influence. It was not the poor men, the tenant farmers of the country, who were receiving this magnificent gift of the public domain, but it was men possessing wealth associated together for speculative purposes who became the recipients of this magnificent bounty of the Federal Government.

Sir, we had a public domain which should have been the pride of every American citizen. We had a public domain greater by far and more valuable than that of any other country on earth. Russia and some others might have exceeded us in the number of acres, but theirs was frozen territory and sterile land. We had a public domain adapted by nature for the homes of American citizens; and the highest trust that devolved on the American Senate was to preserve that great domain from the greed of corporations and the avarice of the rich men of the country.

Why, sir, I saw a statement not long since that in the State of Illinois, the State which is honored by the service in the Senate of the distinguished Senator who preceded me, that there were thirty thousand tenant farmers in that State who do not own their homes; men who are not able to own their homes. That condition of affairs exists in the rural sections of the country, a large part of the lands of this country being held by a few individuals. The tenant farmers are only able to get stock and cultivate the soil. We should have held these public lands for those men whenever they see proper to go and settle on them, because in the settled portion of the country they can never acquire without means the homes on which they must live and bring up their families.

You tell me it was a magnanimous act in which we ought to glory, as was stated by the Senator from Connecticut that these lands were given away to a rich corporation instead of tenant farmers, and others who should have had them for homes. Do you tell me that it is an act in which we ought to glory, that this public domain has been given away to a few corporations, and that the great body of the people should thus have been deprived of them for homes?

But, say the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Colorado, these lands are open for settlement. At what price? At the price put on them by these rich men who are incorporated in these companies. I agree that they will be anxious to sell the lands; but they will fix their own price on them. They will hold them for years and then sell at a high price lands which without the intervention of the railroads could have been bought for a dollar and a quarter an acre.

Then I am reminded that when they offer their lands for sale the railroad companies reserve all mineral lands and all mines. They have struck a bonanza, and they intend to make the most of it. But notwithstanding all that, if these men had complied with the letter of the law, if they had completed their road within the time specified in the granting act, I would not have voted to disturb them in the possession of one acre, however unwise I might have considered the donation.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him what his idea was, or what he intended to prove by saying there were twenty thousand people in Illinois who do not own their homes?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I cut out of a newspaper a sermon preached I think by a leading——

Mr. LOGAN. I am not questioning the correctness of the statement. I only ask what the Senator proposes to prove by the statement; what he proposes to illustrate by the idea he had in view.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was insisting that these men who were unable to buy lands in the State in which they reside had a claim on this Government; that the lands which were held by the public as the public domain of the country should be held by the Government in trust for those people who desire to secure homes.

Mr. LOGAN. Can the Senator find any country, any State, or any government on earth where out of three million people all own homes except twenty thousand?

Mr. SAUSLBURY. All the better for us; and I say here and now that I wish every American citizen, white and black, owned his own domicile. I believe it would be better for the country if every man was able to own his own homestead, his own domicile.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator and I will not disagree upon that. I wish every man did own his home. But the point is this: You can not find a country on the face of the globe where there are not more than 20,000 people out of three million who do not own their homes; and under any condition of things there will be that many. The lands in Illinois within my recollection, and much this side of the time when I was a grown man, have been sold for a dollar and a quarter an acre, thousands and thousands of acres right where I was raised. I could have bought half the country for a dollar and a quarter an acre since I have arrived at manhood.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I say to the Senator from Illinois that I find no fault with the people of Illinois, I was only speaking of a fact; and I am told that instead of thirty thousand the number is eighty thousand tenant farmers in the State of Illinois. I do not know the fact, but I am told it was shown by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not doubt it; and if the Senator will examine his own State, I have not the slightest doubt that he will find more persons in his State to-day without homes than he will find in the State of Illinois; and yet it is not as large in population as one county in the State of Illinois. I will venture that assertion.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not know how that fact may be. I regret exceedingly that in my own State the lands are held by comparatively a few people. I regret exceedingly that that is the case in every State. But we are reminded by Divine authority that we shall always have the poor with us, and we ought, therefore, as legislators, when we had a public domain that might have been secured for homes for the people of that description, we ought to have held it, and it was an unwise act of legislation which took it away from the people and gave it to the rich corporations of the country. Nevertheless, as I before remarked, if those grantees had complied with the terms of the grant, I would be the last man to take one single foot from them which they had earned.

I hold that not having earned the land according to the terms specified in the grant, they have no vested right, none whatever; the land becomes again the property of the Government, and it is now our duty to enact a declaration of forfeiture of every foot of land where the road was not completed within the time specified in the grant.

But we are met with the position that these men have an equitable, though they may not have a legal, right to the land. I put a question to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], now occupying the chair, a few days ago when he had announced the land was theirs; and he was reminded by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that there was an equitable estoppel. That question was disposed of this morning in the strong and convincing argument of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]—an equitable estoppel against the Government when the decisions of the Supreme Court have repeatedly asserted that there can be no laches urged in defense against the claims of the Government!

But if these companies have an equitable claim for these lands we can adjust that after a declaration of forfeiture. We can not adjust it by refusing to declare a forfeiture.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish the Senator would allow me to make a suggestion to him. I agree with him and his friends in reference to the forfeiture of grants that have not been earned, as I regard it. I stated my position in reference to those cases where the roads had been built and the companies had not forfeited their grants. But now I want to suggest that if the Government of the United States claims that this company is not entitled to the land along the line of road it has completed from Bismarck, why is it that the Government of the United States has ever since required it to carry the mails, and not only that but, required it to pay into the Treasury of the United States 50 per cent. of its earnings on the transportation of every article belonging to the Government; 50 per cent. of the amount charged to the people in that community into the Treasury of the United States, and the Government has been using that all the time? Why is it that the Government required that of them, and you say that they are in default? Why has the Government paid them for carrying the mail, and compelled them to do it at 20 per cent. less than it pays to other parties for carrying the mail, and required them to pay to the United States 50 per cent. on all the Government property they carry over the road if the Government thinks the contract was not performed?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will say to the Senator from Illinois that I have not looked into the question as to whether the grant of the franchise required it or not. It may be a condition of the franchise of the road which may be separable from the land grant.

Mr. LOGAN. No; we provide and have provided in the appropriation bill that passed the Senate on Saturday last, and we have in every appropriation bill year after year put in a section requiring these land-grant railroads to pay 50 per cent. into the Treasury of the United States, thereby recognizing the fact of their compliance. On Saturday last the Army appropriation bill passed here with that provision in it, without a solitary objection being made to it; and it applies to this railroad and every other land-grant railroad.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have no doubt that the action of the Appropriations Committee, of which the Senator is a member, was proper and right. I do not know the considerations which influenced that committee.

Mr. LOGAN. The very language that we adopted came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Very well. I suppose the company were entitled to it and they are entitled to the land grant earned up to Bismarck, over 500 miles of the road. That is not denied.

The suggestion of the Senator from Illinois has no bearing or weight upon the discussion of the question really involved. The question is whether we ought to declare the forfeiture of these lands. I hold that you can not consider the equitable considerations involved in this question without such a declaration. If you fail to do that, if you affirm and confirm the grant, then all equities are submerged in the grant.

The people have some equities as well as the railroad company, but you can not consider the equities on the part of the people if you affirm the railroad grant. You never can consider that question until the estate in the lands is vested absolutely in the Government of the United States. Then if the railroad corporators have equities and come to Congress and present them, no one will be more ready than myself to give them a fair and impartial consideration; but I am unwilling to cut off the equitable claims of the people of this country to the land by a refusal to declare the forfeiture.

The people of this country have some equitable claims as well as the railroad corporators. These lands belong to the public; these lands were taken from the public; they were put in a condition where the price of the lands was not to be determined by the Government but to be determined by the incorporators, and to that extent wrong and injury were inflicted upon the people of the country.

Sir, first settle the legal status of these lands and then let the railroad company come to Congress and make some exhibit and show what they have received from the lands already granted. They have already had patents to between five and six million acres of the public land. They are doubtless entitled to other lands for which they have not obtained patents; but let them make an exhibit, let them show what their franchise and the road are worth; let them show what the road cost; let them show what they have realized from the lands granted to them and which have already been patented to them; let them make a fair exhibit; and then any equity between the railroad and the people we can decide; but so long as you fail to take control of these public lands and to divest all claim to them on the part of these railroads you never can consider the equities that arise in the case.

I am in favor of dealing justly with the railroad, but I am fully as anxious to deal justly with the people. An exhibit was made here a few days ago by the Senator from Florida which showed that up to the present time from the 500 miles which they had built they had realized a clear profit of $15,000,000.

Now, let us deal with this question as legislators ought to deal with it. I know how futile it is to make an appeal in behalf of the people against the monopolies of the country. I have been here too long not to have seen the potent influence of corporate power. The people are the last whose interests are generally consulted in reference to questions of this character. You should do justice to all parties; but I repeat again, and I want to emphasize that opinion, that you never can deal justly with the people of this country until you declare the forfeiture of every acre of the public domain which was not earned in strict compliance with the terms of the land grant.

Why, sir, take the very fact mentioned to-day, the fact that they had postponed from time to time the commencement of the construction of this railroad, that they waited for six long years before they put a spade in the ground, until the price of iron had diminished. Having procured the grant on representations that the cost of construction would be thus and so, they waited and delayed until time should bring down the prices of articles used in constructing the road. Ought not that to be an element that enters into the consideration of the equities in this case?

Mr. President, in behalf of the people of the country I say we ought to-day to declare the forfeiture of every acre of the lands not only of this company, but of every other company incorporated by Congress that had a land grant given to it, which has not earned it in strict compliance with the law. It will be only declaring what has already occurred. The forfeiture occurred at the very time that they failed to comply with the law. The declaration of forfeiture has been delayed too long. Whenever an attempt of that kind is made the railroad corporations and the friends of the railroad corporations are around the Capitol crying out about the injustice that will be done the company.

I do not know that we are ever to get a declaration of forfeiture, but I would tie up this land and not one foot of it should inure to the benefit of these companies until there is a declaration of the forfeiture of unearned grants, so that the account between the people of the country and the companies may be equitably adjusted.

Mr. President, I have detained the Senate much longer than I intended. I have an amendment to offer to the bill which is not now in order, an amendment which I think ought to be adopted. I will speak in reference to that for a few moments. Whether this pending amendment is adopted or not, I shall offer an amendment that hereafter no patent shall be issued for any portion of land included in any railroad grant which was not earned in strict compliance with the terms of the grant, until Congress shall authorize the issue of such patent, and the reason I do that is this: Up to 1874 Congress acted upon these questions of patents, but since that time an executive officer, the Secretary of the Interior, acting of his own motion, without authority of Congress, has issued patents for the land which in his judgment had been earned. That is a power that I would not give to any executive officer.

The executive officer ought not to want it, and I do not suppose does want to exercise power over questions with which Congress has not dealt. But these railroads have come to the Interior Department and have secured in some instances patents for lands which were not earned in compliance with the railroad grant, and therefore to relieve the executive department from all importunity on the part of railroad companies, and to retain in the hands of Congress the control, power, and authority of these railroads, I shall offer that amendment, and I believe that it ought to be adopted. We ought not to leave it to the discretion of any executive officer to determine a question which the Congress of the United States itself ought to determine.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I do not wish to interfere with my friend from Florida, who has not spoken on this subject, as I see he rises. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. Does the Senator from Vermont propose to speak?

Mr. EDMUNDS. But a few words. I intend to stay here, if I can, until this bill is disposed of.

Mr. CALL. I would prefer to hear the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the existence of this bill implies the fact that we are going to make the law now different to what it is. That is the only object of the bill which deals with existing affairs, that the law whatever it is now is one way and that if we pass the bill it is to make the law another way, unless it be declaratory of some existing state of things. Now, in respect of these railroad land grants, it has become the settled law, as decided by one department of this Government that has the last word about all these affairs, the Supreme Court of the United States, that all the land grants which had affixed conditions of time to them did not prevent the company from being entitled to go on and to receive their patents for the work that they did just as between private persons where there is an equity of redemption if the man who makes a mortgage does not pay at the time, he still has his rights just as they were before.

In 1883, Mr. Garland, the present Attorney-General of the United States, and to whom I am always glad to pay my respectful homage as an upright and just man, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, which then had charge of these subjects of forfeitures, naturally enough, as they were legal matters, reported, as I believe by the unanimous judgment of that committee composed of Democrats to their full proportion, a bill which I ask to have the Secretary read as illustrating what I have to say upon this subject of the forfeiture of land grants.

47TH CONGRESS, 2d Session.

S. 2301.

[Report No. 906.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
JANUARY 2, 1883.

Mr. GARLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted a report (No. 906), accompanied by the following bill; which was read the first and second times by unanimous consent.

A bill providing for the forfeiture of railroad grants in certain cases.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in all cases where grants of lands by Congress have been made to aid in internal improvements, and said lands have not been patented by the United States to the grantee, where the grantee was a corporation, or where the lands were granted to the State, and said lands have not been disposed of by the State, and said grants have become subject to forfeiture or resumption by the United States for any cause whatever, it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to cause suit or suits to be brought in the name of the United States in the proper courts having jurisdiction, to obtain judgments declaring the forfeiture or right of resumption by the United States of such lands, as the case may be, which suit or suits shall be subject to trial or hearing like other suits, with right to writ of error or appeal by either party, as in other cases. This section shall not be construed so as to prevent the executive authority of the United States from taking possession and disposing of any of such lands without judicial proceedings in any case in which it could lawfully do so if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of the first section of this act shall not apply to the case of any railroad (except as mentioned in section 3 of this act) in which, within one year preceding the passage of this act, any substantial progress in building the same has been accomplished in good faith, and shall be continued in the manner hereinafter mentioned, or in which, before the 1st day of December, 1882, there shall have been made any substantial progress in the building thereof, and which progress shall be continued in good faith, as hereinafter mentioned. The foregoing provisions of this section, limiting the application of section 1 of this act, shall cease, determine, and be of no effect in the case of every railroad affected thereby the building of which shall not be in good faith continued after said 1st day of December, 1882, to the number of miles in each year required by the act or acts granting such lands, or act or acts amendatory thereof, and in the manner so required, until such railroad shall be entirely completed.

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be construed to be a waiver of any condition or requirement imposed upon any corporation or in respect of any such grant by the act or acts granting lands to or in aid of it or amendatory thereof.

SEC. 4. That in every case in which any corporation, or its lawful successor, being lawfully entitled so to do, shall not do the acts mentioned in section 2 of this act, it shall be the imperative duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to proceed against it as provided in section 1 of this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With this bill Mr. Garland, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted a report on the question of the forfeiture of land grants, expressing the views of that committee; and I now ask that that report may be read.

Mr. TELLER. What report is that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The report of Senator Garland, the present Attorney-General, from the Committee on the Judiciary, on the bill to provide for the forfeiture of land grants.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

In the Senate of the United States. January 2, 1883. Ordered to be printed.

Mr. GARLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report (to accompany bill S. 2301):

The Committee on the Judiciary have for some time had under consideration various memorials asking for the forfeiture of certain railroad land grants, with several bills and resolutions on the same subject. The resolutions and bills differ as to the way and manner of securing forfeitures; some asking for a direct declaration by Congress, others seeking to invest the Secretary of the Interior with the power to make such declarations.

Upon full consideration of all these propositions, in connection with the various grants to be reached in this way, the committee found great difficulty in devising any one plan that would be effectual. The grants themselves are different and do not by any means, in all cases, carry the same meaning as to the relative rights and duties of the companies and the Government.

The committee is unwilling to confide this vast power of declaring forfeitures to any one officer of the Government. In its essential elements it is a judicial proceeding; and while it is within the power of Congress in certain cases to make this declaration, it is deemed best for the security and protection of all concerned that some means of a judicial character should be devised to accomplish this end.

In Farnsworth vs. Minnesota and Pacific Railroad Company, 92 United States Reports (2 Otto), 66, the Supreme Court say:

"A forfeiture by the State of an interest in lands and connected franchises, granted for the construction of a public work, may be declared for non-compliance with the conditions annexed to their grant, or to their possession, when the forfeiture is provided by statute, without judicial proceedings to ascertain and determine the failure of the grantee to perform the conditions."

This decision was preceded by the cases of Schulenberg vs. Harriman (21 Wall., 44) and United States vs. Repentigny (5 Wall., 211) to the same effect. These decisions, of course, are limited, and that carefully, to the language of the grants discussed, which provide clearly for the exercise of such power, and do not, as they could not, embrace cases in which the grants were upon different conditions. Without undertaking to decide whether in all grants of land by the United States to railroads Congress can declare this forfeiture, the committee considered it best to adopt some measure that would avoid this question, and place the parties in attitude towards each other that would insure to each fair dealing and justice as far as can be done.

They propose to direct the Attorney-General to institute proper judicial proceedings against any railroad companies that he may have reason to believe are in default as to the conditions of their grants, to bring about a forfeiture, and secure the rights of the Government to the lands. This proceeding, in the nature of an information, will bring the supposed defaulting company into court, to be heard in defense against a forfeiture; and the court can enter such a judgment or decree as in its opinion will secure to the Government not merely in declaring a forfeiture, if need be, but in declaring resumption of the lands granted. Appeal to be allowed as in other cases in the courts.

This proceeding, however, is not to interfere in any manner with any right of the Executive under his authority to enforce and execute the laws to take possession and dispose of any such lands, without these proceedings where he could have done so if no act as contemplated by the committee had passed.

While the committee had no doubt at all that some steps should be taken to declare forfeitures in many of these cases, yet they were of opinion that in all cases where reasonable and proper diligence and exertions had been used by any of these companies, they should have the benefit of the same in any proceedings against them; and accordingly the committee were of opinion it would be just to allow the companies to show in defense that for one year previous to the passage of the act any substantial progress in good faith in the building of the roads, limiting this period to the first day of December, 1882. The substantial progress is to be considered and passed upon by the Attorney-General first before instituting proceedings, and then, if pleaded in defense of the proceedings instituted, the court is to pass upon it. Of course it is a difficult matter to determine what is substantial progress, and no general rule touching it can be laid down. Therefore, the committee would leave it general in this way, to be determined upon in each particular case. Some provision of this kind is necessary, as certainly the grants were made with a view of securing the building and completion of the roads; and when efforts looking earnestly to that end are being made, the Government would not desire forfeitures of the grants. And this is in no sense a waiver by the Government of any condition or requirement imposed upon any corporation; and when this progress is not shown to exist, it is made the imperative duty of the Attorney-General to proceed against the companies.

It is believed by the committee such a law will enable the Government to get rid of all these grants of lands to railroads that are not being used for legitimate purposes, or are misused, or in which no efforts are being made to build the proposed roads; and at the same time to have carried out all these grants in which the companies in good faith are trying to finish their roads. In other words, while such a law would be protective of the rights of the Government it would not be oppressive to corporations that are working and dealing fairly with the liberality of the Government in trying to secure the objects of those grants.

And to this end they have agreed on the bill herewith proposed, and recommend its passage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill reported by Senator Garland from the Committee on the Judiciary I believe—I have not had time to look it up—was an exact copy of a bill that was agreed upon unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary when Senator Thurman and Senator McDonald were its members. That committee then having charge of this question of legal forfeitures thought that it might be supposed that Congress had public ends in view in granting lands to various railroad companies and to various States for railroad companies, and that if Congress was right in respect of the public interest of having such a line for the benefit of the people of the United States, which must be paid for by somebody, it was right that Congress should not take advantage of the mere lapse of time in respect of any company, or corporation, or individual that was struggling to get on within reasonable limits which this bill provided for; and so, unanimously, the Committee on the Judiciary, composed of Democrats and Republicans, who had given attention to the subject, provided for what we thought was a just way of ending all this question of the forfeiture of grants—to wind up by judicial proceeding that should leave nobody to come to Congress afterward, either a settler or a grantee of the corporation or whatever; to wind up by a judicial proceeding every grant that did not come within the stipulation that this bill provided for of going on in good faith with the work that the public interest required.

Now apply that to this present corporation, where do we stand? This corporation has gone on exactly in the form that this bill stated, struggling all the time to accomplish the building and operation of a line of railway that should connect Puget Sound and the Pacific Ocean with the Atlantic coast. That is what it has been doing. Whether its stock has been watered, I do not know. I know nothing about its concerns, and I care nothing about them except in the public sense. It has accomplished the great operation of building a line connecting with our State lines that go to the Atlantic Ocean in one way and through a State corporation in Oregon down the Columbia River. It has not earned the land that it might have earned by building a line of its own down the Columbia River, the grant for which this original bill proposed to forfeit, that we all agree ought to be forfeited; and now is saddled on to that simple thing the question of whether all the other lands that are conterminous with the road that according to the proprieties of the bill that was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary and was not reached to be acted upon, should be allowed to remain, shall be forfeited, although the railroad has been built in every conformity with the act of Congress except the mere matter of time.

That is all there is of it; and then when you come to the Cascade Mountains where the line straight on to Puget Sound was to go and is to go some time or other for the benefit of the people of the United States, the question is whether on the theory that the committee thought was a right one you will stand up and say, now that they are struggling to build that by money which they have not got out of the lands which have been given to them, but that they must get and are getting by pledging everything that they have on that line to be built, all lands that they have or that are to be earned and the line itself—whether it is for the interest of the people of the United States to say to this company, "You can not get any money in that way; the thing is stopped?" Is that right? It is right if it is not for the public interest to have that line. If it is for the public interest, a great public interest that affects a continent, that affects this Republic and all its commerce, then I say if it were a new question I would give to anybody who would build through that immense range of mountains these 150 or 200 miles, whatever is required to make a straight line to Puget Sound——

Mr. DOLPH. Seventy-five miles remain to be built.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But from the Columbia River to Puget Sound is 200 miles.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Two hundred and sixty-two.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I would give all the land there is within 50 miles on either side, and every settler in those mountains, every man of those of whom my friend from Delaware has been talking so eloquently—and if I had his eloquence I would talk for them in the same way—every settler there would say, "Yes, by all means; I will give this company every other section going back 50 or 100 miles into these mountains if they will only give me a railroad that shall let me out to Puget Sound or to the Columbia River, in order that I may be in intimate intercourse with my fellow-republicans"—and by "republicans" I do not mean political Republicans—"my fellow-people in this Republic all over the United States, because without this railroad I can not live; with it I can, and my wheat and my corn and my products of whatever kind can find a market to the people who want them."

Now the question is whether the Senate of the United States is wise enough to see that this link ought to be built and ought to be opened, and that the public ought to aid it in order that every settler there may get his commodities to market in a fair way and in a right way and in a way which does not tax him a cent or a penny. That is the question. And so, as I said the other day, if this were a perfectly new question I would vote to give this company, or any other company, any amount of public lands in that vicinity, leaving the alternate sections for the settlers, that would build the road across that Cascade range in order that an outlet to the waters of Puget Sound and of the Columbia River on this side might be opened to the people of the United States who are to build up their hamlets and their farms in that range. That is the whole of the question.

And it is amazing to me that Senators stand up here and talk what somebody might call—no, I will not use the phrase; I will leave that blank—stand up here and argue that we are destroying the rights of the people of the United States and settlers in saying that we will do everything that we can to carry on this work to its end, Puget Sound, and will not take advantage of the mere lapse of time in carrying out a great national work.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate any great length of time.

Yesterday, I believe, reference was made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] to the condition of the public lands in the State of Florida, and he stated that I exhibited for the first time an extraordinary zeal in supporting the present bill for forfeiture. I wish it to go upon the record that ever since I have been a member of this body I have at every session introduced a petition, and a resolution, and generally a bill for the protection of the actual settlers upon the railroad grants in that State that had not been earned by the completion of the roads within the time specified in the grant. There has, therefore, been no negligence on my part in seeking to obtain for them homes upon the public lands free of cost.

Now, I desire to say in response to what has been said by the Senator from Vermont, that in a question where 100,000,000 acres of the public lands of the United States are to be donated to corporations—for the action of the Senate upon this bill is to determine so far as this body is concerned its action at this time on other bills where the lands have not been earned within the time specified in the grant—it is amazing that when the whole course of the English law and the law of every country indisputably has been unfriendly to the vesting of the titles of great bodies of real estate in corporations, when this very body at at this session of Congress has passed an act hostile to it and declaring it to be a great public evil, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has even endeavored to ingraft a condition upon all the public lands in the Territories, which was proposed by him to be made beyond even the power of State authority to remove or change, forbidding land to be held in any but small tracts, not exceeding 640 acres; it is amazing in view of these facts that any Senator should affect to regard this question and the propositions and arguments by which it is maintained upon this side of the Chamber in the light of considerations entirely foreign to it and not in any way related to these great objects of the established public policies of our people.

What has the magnificent highway from Puget Sound to the headwaters of the Mississippi and Lake Superior to do with the attachment of a condition to the public lands of this country that the settler shall occupy and live upon them only at the will of a corporation and upon prices fixed by them, for that is what you propose to do, and that is the law which is sought to be repealed. It is to say that every settler shall live upon the public land at the will of a corporation unlimited and absolute upon terms of sale entirely in its power; and not only that, but when you have forced him by this law containing the propositions of the Senator from Oregon here to-day to pay the price fixed by the corporation for this land, you give the money, the earnings of his hard labor, away to the owners of a railroad corporation, not to the amount necessary to construct the road, but to three and four times the amount necessary for its construction, and you compel him to pay this enormous sum over and above the cost of construction of the railroad for the sole purpose of enriching men who have contributed little or nothing to the construction of the railroad, and after it has been built with the settlers' money you give it to the men who have paid nothing for it.

That is the practical question before the Senate; not what has been done by Democrats or Republicans; not as to the wisdom of the homestead law and the credit you are entitled to for passing it years ago, but whether now, when landlordism prevails more in the United States under the system of profuse and reckless grants of public land, you will attach this condition to the hundred million acres of the public land which still remain that is in question now before you. Five States equal to Indiana and Ohio are proposed to be given away by the Senate to a few individuals with power in them to impose these severe burdens on all the people of the United States who may be compelled to live on the public lands.

That is the reason why those on this side of the Chamber who oppose this new grant say that whatever legal rights have attached to the Government and remain in the Government should be exercised with reference to these lands in favor of actual settlers. Is there no other way to compel this railroad to build its line to Puget Sound as stipulated in its charter except to compel the settlers to build it? We never hear in this body of compelling a corporation to comply with the conditions of its charter. It seems to be an obsolete idea that a man who invests in a corporation does so subject to the condition that the corporation and all its property shall be forfeited if it does not complete its road.

Mr. MAXEY. With the consent of the Senator from Florida I will state that the charter was granted during the war; the charter was granted in 1864. The work was not begun till 1870. There was no war in 1866, and then not a thing had been done; and in 1868, when the next extension was passed, nothing was then done. There was the extension of 1870, and till then nothing was done.

Mr. CALL. The suggestions of the Senator are very forcible. But suppose we concede the whole ground claimed by Senators on the other side. I say why do we not hear of compelling this corporation to complete its highway to Puget Sound? Is it not true in all laws, and in every light possible to place it in, that when a railroad accepts a charter and completes a part of its line, the whole line completed and every dollar of its resources and property are subject to forfeiture if it does not carry out its charter obligation to complete the line to its terminus in a reasonable time? We hear about inducing this corporation to continue its line in conformity with its charter obligation, but not of compelling its completion by a forfeiture of its franchises and property.

So powerful has become the opinion in this body in sympathy with corporate power that we do not hear of the right of the people of the States, of the whole community, to compel the performance of its obligations. But what more? Is there no other way and no better way to build railroads, if it must be done by the public—and I am willing always to attach conditions to the lands of the country to construct proper highways—but must we take from the labor of the people upon that line and give it to the corporations without any return?

Why not give the settlers the railroads if you require them to pay three, four, or five dollars an acre for their homes, and apply their money and labor to building a railroad, or let it belong to the public, let it belong to an educational fund, let it be charged in some portion of its receipts with the payment to the people of their money invested in these railroads.

Why, always when a great public highway and a great public policy of transportation is discussed in reference to these grants, will we insist upon doing it in such a manner as will create a landed aristocracy, in such a manner as will create landlordism, in such a manner as will impose burdens upon the settler on the public land in order that it may enrich some speculator?

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] talks about Wall street and the sales of the Northern Pacific stock. What portion of the people of the United States, as compared with those who want homes on the public lands, are those who invest in stocks? What per cent. do the commercial and speculative interests in New York bear in comparative worth with those of all the people that the statesman is to bring them up here when you show that seven million of the agricultural laborers of the United States are without homes. Senators talk about forfeiting unearned lands and give a definition to "unearned lands" that leaves nothing to forfeit. Even in this bill the paltry amount of 2,000,000 acres only is talked about as being forfeited. Why, Mr. President, it is a surrender of the whole question. I am indifferent whether you forfeit an acre of this land, unless you do something upon a scale large enough to benefit the people of the United States.

I am well satisfied that the only safety for corporate interests and corporate power is in not deceiving the people. The safety of property is in such regulation as will make corporate power amenable as a servant to the public interests securing reasonable and just compensation to them. But to talk now about such a proposition where an empire is to be given away to a few individuals without reference to its value, without reference to the cost of the work, or the consideration of what they have done—an empire to be given away in order that it may enrich a few persons upon the plea that a great highway can be built in no other way, seems to awaken surprise.

Why, Mr. President, of all methods of building railroads that which attaches a condition to every acre of the public land that it shall be occupied only at the will of a corporation by a lease if it chooses so to do and at prices fixed by itself, and then that the labor of these people shall be given away, making it the interest of the corporation to exact from the settler the highest possible price, and then attach the right of taxation as a franchise to the corporation upon his production, upon all that he makes to just such an amount as the company, the proprietor of the land, may choose to affix, is beyond all doubt the most vicious and hurtful condition that could be imposed upon the public lands and the most injurious one to the settler and to the country in all its great interests.

These are the considerations, and no one upon this side who has advocated this forfeiture does it because the Government has a naked power of forfeiture. The Senator from Mississippi, in an argument which, step by step and analysis by analysis, can not be met, and as able as ever will be made, which the learned Senator from Vermont, with his astuteness, can not take step by step, proposition by proposition, and refute it, for it is not his own proposition, but it is the decision of the Supreme Court on every single point analyzed, and places beyond controversy in its juxtaposition to its succeeding proposition—the argument of the Senator from Mississippi is a demonstration. There is no decision of the Supreme Court, there is no inference from any decision of the Supreme Court that any right can ever be gained by the acquiescence of the agents of the Government and their failure to enforce the law. There is no equity and no consideration of interest to a railroad corporation or an individual that can be urged as an argument against the whole body-politic of the country and against the public policies which you have affirmed to be necessary. The public policy of a settlement of the public land by the citizens of the United States without cost, the public policy that vast territories of land shall not be granted to corporations without limit and without expense or consideration paid by them. No one upon this side of the Chamber advocates the passage of this bill except upon the proposition that the public interests, the welfare of the whole people, demand the opening of this grant to settlement by the people, and that it can be done with justice to the corporation and in the interest of the preservation of the great highway of transportation to the Pacific.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish, in addition to what I said before, to call the attention of the Senate to another consideration in two minutes, and I shall be done.

Our British brethren have built a railway in some places within a hundred miles of this Northern Pacific road across the continent, and I am told that the track is actually laid so that it reaches the northern waters of Puget Sound now. I had doubted that, and I am not sure that is true at this moment, but it will be. I think it worth the while of American Senators looking to larger objects and wider schemes for the trade of the world, to consider whether it is not of the utmost importance that the United States should have a line that should go to Puget Sound as well, so that the traffic of Asia coming into that wonderful inland sea, as Puget Sound is, should have a United States communication with the interior of our country and with the eastern seaboard. That is the practical question in respect of building in the shortest possible time and in the best possible way this connection of what is now 100 miles or so across this rough range of mountains in our territory.

So then, as I said the other day, and I repeat it now, if it were a perfectly new question I would, acting for the people of the United States, give to any corporation every alternate section of land for 40 miles on either side or 100 miles on either side, that would in the quickest way get a foothold on that sound that should attract the commerce of Asia to us, and not to the British ports and to this British railroad.

I do not know that I appeal to anybody who cares anything about the trade of the United States, for there may be those who would rather shut themselves up like a clam in its shell, and not reach out to this vast trade where everything is to be accomplished for our products in Asia, and say "we do not care." I hope I do, I believe I do, and therefore I should hope that the Senate of the United States, not caring anything for the personal interests of this corporation, which I do not, but for wise and great public interests would stimulate the completion of that line for objects which are interesting to every person in the United States who has anything to do, or anything to sell, or anything to gain. We have been a little short-sighted, I think, in respect of our foreign commerce. We have shut ourselves up and have said, we will not do this and we will not do that, and so on and so on, while our adversaries and competitors in the peaceful competitions for the trade of the world, for the sale of products, and so on, have been placing their hands upon nearly every island in the sea and placing their communications with every other continent which brings back to them large returns, while we have considered ourselves best to be shut up in a quasi-continental and insular way, and try to live within ourselves; but we produce too much for that.

We want to find markets, we want to find places where the industry of the people of the United States, the oranges of Florida and the butter of Vermont may go and find a market, and I make that personal allusion in order to reply to my friend from Florida, as he grows oranges and we make butter, and so on of every industry and production of the United States. If we are to compete with the world—we can not trade with ourselves alone—we must find avenues, we must attract commence; and now here are our rivals whose flag covers every single meridian of longitude over the globe, who have now a railway whose terminus on Puget Sound is certainly not 200 miles from where this terminus will be, to take the steamships that cross the Pacific Ocean from all that great East, that store-house of possibilities, to attract trade, and we are higgling here over the question of whether we will prevent this Northern Pacific Railroad Company from raising money on its bonds which are pledged on that very grant to finish that line, in order that the trade may come to us and not go to them.

Any Senator who wants to do that can do it. The President of the United States, in a recent message, has referred to this subject in these words:

> The nation has made princely grants and subsidies to a system of railroads projected as great national highways to connect the Pacific States with the East. It has been charged that these donations from the people have been diverted to private gain and corrupt uses, and thus public indignation has been aroused and suspicion engendered. Our great nation does not begrudge its generosity, but it abhors peculation and fraud; and the favorable regard of our people for the great corporations to which these grants were made can only be revived by a restoration of confidence, to be secured by their constant, unequivocal, and clearly manifested integrity. A faithful application of the undiminished proceeds of the grants to the construction and perfecting of their roads, an honest discharge of their obligations, and entire justice to all the people in the enjoyment of their rights on these highways of travel, is all the public asks, and it will be content with no less. To secure these things should be the common purpose of the officers of the Government, as well as of the corporations. With this accomplishment, prosperity would be permanently secured to the roads, and national pride would take the place of national complaint.

I agree to all that. I think I have been, in my humble way, as diligent and industrious in checking every fraud and contrivance of all the land-grant corporations in respect to gaining advantages over the United States as anybody else—I say according to the capacity that I have—and therefore I am not their friend in that sense, but in the wider and the national sense. When you find a corporation that has not got any money of the Government at all, and that has only been struggling under adversity to get a national line through from ocean to ocean, I say that we shall make the greatest mistake of this present year at least if we do anything which will diminish or delay the completion of that line—the rival of our British neighbors, their line being now done, and which they have built by Government aid—by undertaking to forfeit even this little Cascade arrangement that is still left.

And so I hope that we shall confine this bill to what it was originally intended to be, a forfeiture of the land that clearly ought to be forfeited, as we all agree, and not undertake, by standing on the letter of the law like Shylock and saying we will not go any further, to embarrass and stop a great national work, which has the widest objects and the widest results, because we say the law is on our side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to make one single observation.

It has been stated several times by Senators on the other side that this bill deprives the railroad company of some rights which they would be entitled to enforce in a court of law. On that subject I desire to say in the presence of the members of the Judiciary Committee and of the Senate, that this bill if it passes, in whatever shape it may be passed, is nothing more than what was called entry at common law by a private person. It is that act on the part of the Government, and it is only that act which enables the Government to assert its right against the railroad company for the forfeiture, and notwithstanding any provision of this bill if it be passed, every legal right which the Northern Pacific Railroad Company has may be enforced in the courts of the country.

Mr. CALL. I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont a question. Admitting that a great highway is necessary to carry the butter of Vermont and the oranges of Florida, I should like the Senator to tell me whether he thinks the best way to build that highway is to require, either directly or indirectly, the settlers on the public land of the United States along the line of that road to pay three or four times the cost of the road out of their labor to those who build the road, and then give the railroad to them? Admitting that the great highway is necessary and that it should be built by Government aid, does he think the best way to do it is to require the settlers on the public land to pay such a price for their land as will exceed the cost of building the road three or four times and then give it away?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, I do not; and no settler will now go into that Cascade range and buy land at 50 cents an acre. If he can have a railroad through there he will be willing to give $5 an acre, and he is only required to give $2.50.

Mr. CALL. I speak of the whole line of the road from the point where it stopped when the time for completion fixed by the act had expired. Does he think upon general principles that the best way to build a highway required by Florida and Vermont and all the States of the Union is to impose a tax upon the people who live along or near the line of that road, with a strip either of 40 or 80 miles wide, for three times the necessary cost of construction of the road, and then give it away?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, I do not think anything of the kind; but I think of the line of any railroad in Florida, Vermont, or anywhere else, if you had not provided for the railroad you would not have had the settler; and if he wants to go there and is able to go there by giving $2.50 an acre for the land because he is on the line of a railroad, he is making a good bargain; and I can tell the Senator from Florida, as he probably has not been up the Cascades as I have——

Mr. CALL. I am not speaking about that, but about the general policy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am speaking about the general policy too, which always comes out in particulars. If this railroad be not built through the Cascade range there will not be one hundred settlers within 100 miles in twenty-five years, or fifty, because they have no possible way of getting out through that rough mountain region. You are doing a benefit to the settlers, as they are called, if you can build a railroad through there and let them get their lands for $2.50 instead of $1.25, or for a homestead either, because the land is not worth anything at all unless you have a railroad there.

Mr. CALL. If $2.50 an acre for the land belonging to the United States 40 miles in width along the line of that road yields a sum three times greater than is necessary to build a railroad, and you are going to make the settler pay it, why not construct it out of the Treasury of the United States and let the United States or somebody else own an interest in the property that you create out of the public funds?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, I do not propose to frighten my fellow-Senators here by rising to speak at this hour on this question. I should not have thought of doing it at all, but the zeal of some of our friends has compelled them to speak several hours one day and several hours another day, and as was said about the grains of barley, several hours make a day, and the main portion of some of the speeches to which I have listened is portraying to the American people the grievous wrongs of permitting railroad companies to withhold from the settler who desires land and a home the lands which have been given to them.

I have been waiting and listening with a kind of anxiety that I can hardly express in the ordinary language for some of these tender-hearted gentlemen whose whole soul seems to be wrapped up in the constant and persistent endeavor to find out how the landless may get land and how the homeless may get homes, to suggest some way in which that vast amount of land, millions of acres, vast empires of land, which this Government—their Government—the Government which they have controlled and managed, could in some manner be thrown out to the homeless, landless citizens of the United States, but I have not heard a word, not a suggestion, not a thought, not an inquiry, and yet every Senator upon that side of the Chamber and on this knows, when they have been describing the millions of acres, the empires of land that are withheld from the occupancy of the settler, that for every acre, acre for acre, county by county, empire by empire, they are withholding by non-action at least as many acres, as great an empire of land, numbered by millions and millions of acres, as have ever been given to the railroad companies.

They are withholding from the citizens of the United States an equal amount of land, the alternate sections running all through these lines, by imposing upon them and keeping upon them a price beyond the reach of the settlers to overcome. Every alternate section of the lands along lines given to railroads (with the exception of a little right of soldiers to make a homestead of 80 acres only, I think) is held by the Government at $2.50 per acre. These alternate sections must be equal to the lands granted to the railroads, and by your action and by mine, or by your inaction and by mine, are taken away from the domain of lands upon which the citizen may go and make a homestead except these few rights of soldiers. This is so to-day, and has been all the while up to twenty minutes past 6 to-night, and not a word said about it, not a sympathy shown, not an expression of feeling here against the Government for keeping away from the settlers of the United State these millions of acres and this empire of land.

Why is it that the sympathy and gush all runs in one direction? Why is it if the real object is the desire to give lands to settlers, as is proclaimed here so loudly and so pathetically by so many gentlemen—why is it that some one never has thought of introducing a bill to throw open to settlers this other half of this vast empire and let them make homesteads upon it; let them enter upon these lands where they have a railroad, where railroads have been built, where they can reach them, where they can make homes, and within convenient distance reach a means of public conveyance to go to them and to come from them to interchange visits of interest, of business, of affection, with the friends they have left?

Sir, in my humble judgment these few remarks which I make will cause a great many people in the United States to wonder if they could not find in the records, among the innumerable and immeasurable speeches which have been made on this floor, among these vast large-hearted, sympathizing men, some effort, some suggestion coming from somebody whose heart is overflowing continually with the desire that lands may be thrown open for homesteads, that the Government, rich, great, substantial, proud, magnificent, should not give away its half of these railroad lands to the settlers, to its own people. I say it to go forth to the American people, there never has been within my hearing the least suggestion that the Government might take its half of the reserved lands along the railroads and among the railroad grants and give the land to the people. It was by some effort that we got a bill through giving to poor soldiers the right to have homesteads of 80 acres on railroad grant lands; and I recollect how difficult it was to induce members of the other House and members of the Senate to grant to the defenders of the nation that little right to a little homestead among these lands.

Mr. President, I venture to say that if it should be read by the people of the United States that no Senator on this floor during all these exciting discussions and all these pitiable and pathetic appeals to take from somebody else lands to give to settlers, it will hardly be believed when I assert that no man here has ever thought that the Government might give its own lands to settlers, its worthless lands, as they would have been without these railroads, to homestead settlers.

I commend—that is the object of these few remarks—I commend to the gentlemen whose hearts are overflowing with such professed sympathy, such worthy feelings for the landless people of the United States that they will think whether they will not work in some way, either before the debate closes on this bill or on some other bill, some expression in accordance with the suggestions I have made, and have the Government of the United States give these vast domains of lands to the settlers of the country without compelling them to go and pay $2.50 an acre when they want to make a home on these lands.

My speech is short. It is meant to be a little pithy. It is not very reproachful to anybody; but, if it does not awaken a little sympathy in the minds of these supersensitive gentlemen about lands and about the deprivation of the poor settlers who can not get lands, if it does not give them a little direction in favor of compelling their own Government themselves, where they may and where they have the right without question to throw open all that vast empire of the alternate sections of public lands, I shall be mistaken.

I think I may have been the means of opening by these few scattering suggestions and remarks which I have made the flood-gates of sympathy in another direction. Next week, or the week after, in the few days that are left of this session, and especially in the coming session, I shall expect every one of these advocates of the rights of the people, I shall expect every gush and every impulse of the nature of those gentlemen who have been so pathetic here, to run in the direction of compelling the Government to give its vast domain to its own people; and if I shall have accomplished that, sir, I shall have done more for the people who have no homes and no lands, and who desire homes and desire lands, to give them a home where there have already been railroads built within 10, 20, or 30 miles of these lands of the United States, than all this sympathy will do for them if it should be carried on to midnight by more pathetic and more gushing Senators than I have heard yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. DOLPH and Mr. EUSTIS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). On these questions I have been paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], but my pair has been so arranged as to permit me to vote. I do not know exactly how it is arranged; but I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], but upon all questions relating to this bill the pair has been transferred to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE]. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. FRYE (when Mr. HALE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HALE] is absent from the Senate, and is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. I understand that both Senators would vote "nay" if present.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. If he were present, I should vote "nay" and I understand that he would vote "yea."

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). As has just been stated by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is paired with him. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I desire to state that I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If he were here, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. My colleague would vote "yea" if he were present.

I wish to say in reference to the pair announced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] that his pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] was transferred to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], those two Senators differing on this question. The Senator from Indiana would vote "yea" and the Senator from Alabama would vote "nay" if present.

Mr. EDMUNDS (when Mr. MORRILL'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. MORRILL] is detained this afternoon by illness, and I think he is paired with some Senator, but I do not know whether upon this question or not.

Mr. CAMERON. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is detained from the Chamber by illness in his family. He requested me to pair with him on this question, stating that he would vote in the negative. I have arranged a pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], as has been stated by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. CONGER (when Mr. PALMER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. PALMER] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is detained from the Chamber by sickness. If he were here, he would vote "nay." He is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired, as has been announced, with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. If he were here, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when Mr. WHITTHORNE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. WHITTHORNE] is necessarily absent. He is paired generally with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], but not upon this question. Upon this question he is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HAWLEY. My colleague [Mr. PLATT] is absent, and is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—12.

Berry,	Cockrell,	George,	Maxey,
Blackburn,	Coke,	Gorman,	Van Wyck,
Call,	Eustis,	Harris,	Wilson of Md.

Gray,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,	Whitthorne.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. On the 28th of May, when this bill was up, I submitted an amendment, which was printed. The object of the amendment is simply to make definite a certain line in the bill. It makes no change whatever in any respect. I am sure that it is an amendment for which all can vote. I ask to have it read, and if any further explanation is desired I will make it in a few words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 13, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "line" down to and including the word "eighty," in line 18, and to insert:

Known as the "Harrison line," being a line drawn from Wallula, Wash., easterly to the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 5, in township 7 north, of range 38 east of the Willamette meridian.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. This amendment makes no change whatever in the bill. It simply defines with certainty a certain line defined in the bill, but in reference to which there is some doubt. ["All right."]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have an amendment which I gave notice I should offer, to come in as a proviso at the end of section 3 of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add after section 3 the following provisio:

Provided, That no patent shall hereafter be issued for any lands included in any grant of lands to aid in the construction of any railroad, which at any time has been liable to forfeiture for failure to comply in the time specified with the terms of the grant, until Congress shall authorize the issuing of such patent.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say in this connection that the only object is to prevent an executive officer of the Government of his own motion from determining the question which we have been discussing to-day, as to whether these lands belong to the railroad company or not. I understand that it has been for some years the practice of the Interior Department to grant patents of their own motion. I have understood that up to 1874 no patents were granted in cases of this kind without the affirmative sanction of Congress. The amendment is simply to reserve the right to Congress to determine the question as to whether patents shall be issued for these lands.

Mr. DOLPH. I simply wish to say that the amendment in effect would be worse than what is known as the Eustis amendment, because the executive officers would be governed by it, whereas the courts would determine the effect of the Eustis amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. I should vote "yea" if I were not paired. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. My colleague would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. PLUMB (when Mr. MORGAN'S name was called). The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I have transferred the pair with my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON] to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I vote "nay."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. I should vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CONGER. My colleague [Mr. PALMER] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CALL. I desire to announce, by request of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], that if he were present he would vote for the Eustis amendment and for the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. MCMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] would vote "nay" if he were present. His pair has been announced with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—14.

Berry,	Coke,	Gorman,	Van Wyck,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	Gray,	Wilson of Md.

Evarts,	Kenna,	Platt,	Voorhees,
Fair,	McPherson,	Ransom,	Whitthorne.
Hale,	Manderson,	Riddleberger,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I move to add at the end of the bill:

That the following words in the act of July 2, 1864, section 2, "and the right of way shall be exempt from taxation within the Territories of the United States," are hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

Mr. VAN WYCK. After all we have done and are now preparing to do for the Northern Pacific Railroad, it seems to be but a simple act of justice that we should at least put the Territories through which the road passes in the same situation as other communities and require this railroad company, which has 2,000 miles constructed, to bear its share of taxation. From 1864 to now their right of way has been exempt from taxation, which is 400 feet wide, and upon which are built their station-houses, their machine-shops, and buildings which are used as elevators, and that property should now at least be subject to taxation as other property is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. My colleague would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. My colleague would vote "yea" on this question. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If I were not paired I should vote "yea."

Mr. CONGER (when Mr. PALMER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. PALMER] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. I should vote "yea" if he were here.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. I do not know how either one of them would vote on this question; I simply announce the fact of the pair.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Beck,	Cullom,	Maxey,	Teller,
Berry,	Eustis,	Plumb,	Van Wyck,
Blackburn,	George,	Pugh,	Walthall,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. I move to amend the third section of the bill in line

4, after the word "failure," by the insertion of the words "past or future;" so as to make the section read:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to waive or release in any way any right of the United States to have any other lands granted by them to the said railroad company forfeited for any failure, past or future, of said company to comply with the conditions of the grant.

I desire to insert those words for fear that this bill, if passed, may be treated as an amnesty act as to all past failures of companies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That any railroad corporation to which grants of land have hitherto been made and which have not completed their full line of road within the time allowed by the terms of their charters and of the grants of such lands for the completion thereof, and which have since proceeded in good faith and with reasonable diligence to complete their line of road, are hereby authorized to complete the construction thereof within five years from the passage of this act, and all grants of land hitherto made to them shall be upon the condition of such completion within five years from the passage of this act and hereby are confirmed to them: Provided, That within ten years from the date hereof any and all such granted lands shall have been sold and disposed of to private individual owners, in tracts of land not exceeding 320 acres, all lands not sold within one year from the passage of this act at a price not exceeding $2.50 per acre, and upon the further condition that any and all portions of said granted lands not so alienated by such corporation within ten years from the passage of this act shall be forfeited and is hereby declared to be forfeited, and shall by proclamation of the President be resumed by the United States and restored to the public domain and made subject to disposition and settlement under the general laws relating to the public lands. All the lands granted to any railroad corporation since the year 1860, which corporation has not completed its road, are hereby declared to be forfeited to the United States: Provided, Such corporation shall not accept the conditions of this act and file its acceptance thereof with the Secretary of the Interior within six months from the passage of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. BLAIR. I opposed the bill in committee, and having taken no part whatever in the debate thus far, I will consume, if the Senate will consent to listen at this late hour, four or five minutes in saying why I opposed it, and why, if anything is to be passed, I desire that something of this kind should become a law.

The Northern Pacific Railroad Company has completed the greater portion of its line since the expiration of the time within which by its original charter the whole was to have been completed. It has gone on in good faith and with great diligence in the prosecution of this purpose. The Government has stood silently and quietly by acquiescing in its action, accepting the sections of road as constructed and certifying corresponding sections of land as they were earned from period to period until the road is now almost completed. There remains the branch which leads from Wallula to Portland, and the bill reported to the Senate was for the purpose of forfeiting the land grant opposite that branch. It was said in debate that there was no opposition to that forfeiture, and that the necessity for constructing that branch at the present time is not so great as for the completion of the main line through the Cascade Mountains to Puget Sound. That is very true; but the necessity of constructing that branch at some time is very great, and I have never understood that the corporation proposed to fail in that part of its duty.

It now has a temporary outlet to Portland, it is true, by way of a road owned by another corporation. That, however, is temporary, in that whenever that other corporation sees fit to impose heavier tolls and practically to control the fares and freights of the whole length of the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad it can do so. Therefore I think that the corporation should be held to its agreement with the Government and should be allowed the use of these lands for the purposes, at some time, and that not remotely, but within a reasonable period, of completing the branch from Wallula through to Portland.

The forfeiture of this part of the land grant was the purpose of the bill reported to the Senate. Since then it has been amended in such way as to interpose probably an impregnable obstacle in the way of the completion of the Cascade branch. That I think makes the bill very much worse than it was before.

But to reach the main point, as the matter lies in my mind, the general proposition which governs us with regard to all these forfeitures is this: Wherever a corporation has gone on in good faith since the expiration of the time limited by law for the completion of its road, using due diligence in the prosecution of its work, and the Government has permitted it to do so, it has given practically a license to that company to go on until it shall have ceased to prosecute the work with reasonable diligence and with an earnest, honest purpose for the completion of the road.

It is not a question whether 25 miles here or there be completed, but when the Government lies quietly by and allows it to go on, it is a question whether it be allowed to complete between the termini the whole road, and to make connection from one side of the continent to the other; and to interpose our right of forfeiture before the corporation has had a reasonable opportunity for that completion I think would be acting in bad faith with the corporation.

But at the same time it is a proper matter of legislation, whatever shall relate to the quieting of the titles to be derived through the railroads to the lands which have been granted to them, and therefore it is that in confirming these grants to roads which are engaged in the prosecution of their work and which may be expected to make, or which will make, the effort to complete them within a reasonable time, we may impose whatsoever conditions we see fit.

By our grants hitherto we have improvidently locked up these immense tracts of land in such a way that these corporations, or the syndicates to which they may dispose of the lands may come to control them for all time, and in the future these great monopolies will be sources probably of grave trouble in our country. If we can now in confirming these grants to such corporations as I have described impose conditions which would result in the near future in the alienation of all the lands from the corporations to private individuals and in small quantities in accordance with the general public sentiment and what seems to be indicated as necessary to the general public good, it would be a wise thing, as I think, to do.

Therefore it is that I have moved the amendment, and I am not willing that the debate shall pass away and this great question disappear, as it may, from the control of our practical legislation without being upon the record in favor of some disposition of these land grants in some such way as is suggested by the amendment in order to obviate and avoid the evils of the time to come.

I shall ask for a vote on the amendment, of course not anticipating that it will commend itself to the general judgment of the Senate as it does to my own.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask for a separate vote on what is known as the Van Wyck amendment. ["No!" "No!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded?

Mr. HARRISON and others. Let us take the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. I withdraw the demand.

The amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. CAMDEN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. My colleague would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Upon the passage of the bill I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. In its present shape he would vote "nay." I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. As I understand he would vote in favor of the bill if present. I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HAWLEY (when Mr. PLATT'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. PLATT] is absent, and is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. GRAY (when Mr. SAULSBURY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SAULSBURY] is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] on this question.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. I do not know how he would vote on the bill, and I shall not vote.

Mr. HARRIS (when Mr. WHITTHORNE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. WHITTHORNE] is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. RANSOM. I desire to state that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] are paired on this measure.

Mr. VEST. I shall vote in order to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to state that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] was obliged to leave some days ago under an order of the Senate and has not been able to return to the Senate. I understand that if he were here he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 42, nay 1; as follows:

AMENDMENT TO BUTTER AND OLEOMARGARINE BILL.

Mr. BLAIR. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine. I ask that the amendment be read for information, and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read if there be no objection.

The amendment was read, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed; as follows:

SEC. —. No matter of a yellow color, tint, or hue shall be introduced into the article described as oleomargarine in the second section of this act in the process of its manufacture; nor shall any coloring substance or coloring process be made use of in such manufacture or in the preparation of oleomargarine for sale or consumption which shall create a resemblance in the color of oleomargarine to the color of butter, as defined in the first section of this act. Any oleomargarine made in violation of this section shall be seized, forfeited to the United States, and destroyed.

PUBLIC-LAND LAWS.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. PLUMB. Let us just take up the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. I simply propose to take the bill up.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well; I withhold the motion.

Mr. BERRY. What bill is it proposed to take up?

Mr. DOLPH. The bill providing for the repeal of the pre-emption law, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Now I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 16, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 15, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday, when,

On motion of Mr. BEACH, by unanimous consent the reading of so much of the Journal as related to the introduction of bills and resolutions was dispensed with.

The residue of the Journal was read and approved.

BOILER PLANT, PHILADELPHIA MINT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with inclosures, an estimate from the Director of the Mint for an appropriation for changing the boiler plant of the United States mint at Philadelphia, Pa.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

FISHWAYS AT GREAT FALLS OF THE POTOMAC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the acting Chief of Engineers inclosing report from Major Lydecker, in response to a resolution of the House calling for information relative to the erection of fishways at the Great Falls of the Potomac; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 6395) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; which, with the Senate amendments, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LICENSING OF TOW VESSELS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 3037) relating to the licensing of vessels engaged in towing to carry persons in addition to their crews; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SOUTHERN UTE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1916) authorizing the removal of the Southern Ute Indians from the State of Colorado to the Territory of Utah; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

STEVEDORES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2313) defining the service of a stevedore as a maritime service and creating a maritime lien in his favor therefor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KING, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for five days, on account of sickness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. REED, of Maine, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Lewis M. Perry.

NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. NEGLEY. I ask unanimous consent to take up, for the purpose of concurring in the amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 4232) to reimburse the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for losses incurred through the failure of the Exchange National Bank of Norfolk, Va., and for other purposes.

Mr. RANDALL. In view of the desire to reach the legislative appropriation bill I must call for the regular order.

Mr. NEGLEY. I trust the gentleman will not object to the present consideration of this matter, because the bill contains provisions which ought to become law for the protection of moneys of the Soldiers' Home. My proposition is simply to concur in the amendments of the Senate, which perfect and simplify the bill. It will take but a second.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman think it will cause any debate?

Mr. NEGLEY. No, sir. The Committee on Military Affairs are unanimous in recommending concurrence in the amendments.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the amendments of the Senate; which were read, as follows:

At the end of line 7, page 1, insert "and any dividend hereafter made in favor of the home shall be paid to the United States and covered into the Treasury."

In line 9, page 1, strike out "Treasurer of the United States" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury."

Strike out the preamble.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. NEGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WOLFORD and others addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] insist on his call for the regular order?

Mr. RANDALL. I prefer to insist as against my own side rather than against the other.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

A bill (S. 2078) for the relief of Coronna, Taussig & Co. and others; and

A bill (S. 2135) to compensate Isaiah W. Lees and H. H. Ellis, of San Francisco, for services rendered the Government.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

Mr. HERBERT. I hope we will have the hour for the consideration of bills.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 91, noes 40.

So the motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. BLOUNT in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment, which was submitted by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1187, after the word "thousand," add "five hundred;" so that if amended the clause will read:

"Office of assistant treasurer at Saint Louis, for assistant treasurer, $4,500.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand that debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. The House, as I am informed, was dividing when the Committee of the Whole last rose. I was not in charge of the bill at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers had taken their places.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope, if gentlemen desire to debate this matter, they will take the opportunity on the next paragraph.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I wish only to state that this is not an increase. The amendment simply restores the salary to what it has been all along for the last ten or twenty years.

Mr. RANDALL. I think it right that I should say a word in answer to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL]. I understand perfectly well that the law fixes this salary at the amount named in the amendment, or even a greater amount.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Five thousand dollars.

Mr. RANDALL. But I feel it incumbent on me to state that I shall feel it my duty to resist every effort to increase the amount of the appropriations in this bill. The condition of the public revenues and the probable amount of the appropriations require, in my judgment, that I should do this, in pursuance of the action of the committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, I think I should be allowed to say a single word.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. This is not an increase over the appropriation which has been allowed for years past.

Mr. RANDALL. I have conceded that.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL], has made this statement to the House; and I hope that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. MORRISON] is present that he may hear what I have to say, and also any further explanation which the gentleman from Pennsylvania may be able to make in reference to this matter.

The aggregate amount of the appropriations made or proposed as the several bills now stand is $229,749,318.32. The amount of the sundry civil bill as agreed upon in committee is $21,053,822.04, and the deficiency estimates, $6,529,058.82; the fortification bill (amount last year), $725,000; the additions necessary to the naval bill as reported for pay of the Navy and to complete the cruisers authorized by act of March 3, 1885, and their armaments, $3,000,000; further miscellaneous appropriations, $2,000,000; to refund duties under the decision made in the case of Oberteuffer et al. vs. Robertson, $10,000,000; amounting in all to $273,057,119.18. The estimated annual permanent appropriations, including interest and sinking fund, are $118,910,955, making an aggregate of $391,968,154.18, against which we have the net ordinary receipts, estimated as amounting to $330,000,000, and the postal revenues, $47,542,000, aggregating $377,542,000, leaving a deficit for the next fiscal year of $14,426,154.18.

Sir, I have taken pains to collect carefully the amounts appropriated by the bills which have passed. I have also taken into account expenditures for the current year, together with the increased expenditures provided for the next fiscal year, and the result is as I have shown. The next fiscal year is to see a deficit of more than $14,000,000 upon the most conservative estimates.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire that we shall have order. The gentleman from New York is making some statements which I should like to hear.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, when the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means reported to the House his bill "to reduce taxation" he said the expenditures for the fiscal year 1885, including pensions and the legal requirements of the public debt, were $305,830,970.54; and, quoting either the language of the President's message or the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, he said:

> Neither the actual needs of an economical administration of the Government nor the patriotic expectations of the people justify any increase of this enormous annual expenditure, and we may safely estimate the annual surplus to exceed $30,000,000.

Sir, the permanent annual appropriations and the aggregate of the appropriations of the various bills already passed or proposed for the coming fiscal year reach, as I have shown, the amount of $391,968,-154——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HISCOCK. The amount I have just named is an excess of $85,-000,000 above the estimates upon which the Ways and Means Committee brought in their bill to reduce taxation. We are upon the eve, I understand, of an attempt to reduce tariff taxes, and I have thought now upon this occasion, at this day—two days before it is to be attempted—that it is proper I should call the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to these startling facts I have put this committee in possession of.

My statement will go into the RECORD before the day is over. I will state, and that will go into the RECORD, the expenditures by the Government for the present fiscal year, and to which I shall add the increases made or certain to be made, for purposes other than those for which the administration has expended money for the current year, to-wit, the river and harbor bill and some other items, and the same result will be reached. By adding to the expenditures for the present fiscal year the additions Congress will make for the next the deficiency will be apparent.

If you propose to keep good the sinking fund, and I apprehend under the pledges which have been made to pay off the national debt there is no one who intends to have that solemn obligation repudiated—if that is the purpose, I repeat emphatically, there is to be a deficiency next year. The revenues of the Government will not meet its expenditures and meet the requirements of the sinking fund.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, the statements made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] are not a surprise to me. They can be accounted for. In the first place, the increase in appropriations this year over the preceding year for pensions is about $15,750,000. There is no one here who is not willing, notwithstanding the aggregate of public expenditures may be largely increased, to give this increase as estimated, as an amount necessary to pay the pensions due to the soldiers.

Another cause of increase is the river and harbor bill, which I understood the gentleman from New York to include in his figures——

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes; I did.

Mr. RANDALL. Amounting to $15,142,100, the two items aggregating nearly $31,000,000; but all this money for rivers and harbors may not be expended. It never is.

The figures of the appropriations for the next fiscal year, stated in the manner the gentleman attempts, may be approximately correct, but they are based upon the condition of these bills at this time when some have not passed the House at all, while others have not passed the Senate or still remain in conference. It does not follow that the expenditures will be more than this year.

I am also aware, Mr. Chairman, that by reason of a recent decision of the United States court the Government is liable to be made to refund taxes it has received from customs duties—known as the covering decision—which may reach ten millions of money. That decision will likewise have the effect to decrease the annual revenues of the Government to the extent of $5,000,000 if the custom laws continue as now.

I think the gentleman's figures are too high, and I say further that in my judgment the appropriations will approach the estimate of revenues. The increase of revenue for this year indicates as possible that instead of being $315,000,000, as the Treasury estimates fix, it will approach $335,000,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. My estimate is based on the receipts of $330,000,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood the gentleman to say $315,000,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. No, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. I was not able to follow the gentleman's figures with certainty on account of the confusion in the Hall. My estimate of receipts for next year is $335,000,000.

The amount of indefinite and permanent appropriations will reach $118,000,000 if we take the estimates. The sinking fund is constantly increasing and the amount of interest to be paid constantly decreasing. I object to any such statement based on the assumption that the river and harbor bill is to be increased or is likely to be in the struggle for life between the legislative power and the Executive. It may not pass the scrutiny of the President.

Mr. HISCOCK. My estimate includes it as it has passed the House.

Mr. RANDALL. The estimate for rivers and harbors by the engineers was about $42,300,000. It was cut down by the officers of the Government to $10,176,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. I thank the gentleman from Tennessee. I do not think we need apprehend the danger which the gentleman from New York presents to the consideration of this House, for we have a surplus which will meet any extraordinary demand on the Treasury such as is presented in the pension cases and refunding of taxes in custom claims.

Nay, more sir, we have made a reduction with one exception in our annual appropriation bills, so far as they have been reported to the House, whether they be the bills which come from the Appropriations Committee proper or from committees to which have recently been assigned that duty. And the Senate in one instance, the Army appropriation bill, have reduced said bill below the amount as it passed the House about $138,000.

I am led to admonish the House, particularly this side, that they ought to follow closely the recommendations of every one of these committees having charge of appropriations, and to keep them down to the lowest possible point where we can go before the people of the United States, as we think we shall be able to go, and show an honest and honorable and a faithful discharge of our public duties in this most important particular.

The words of the gentleman from New York should be a warning to this side of the House in stronger terms and more definite language than any I can employ in appealing to the majority who now have control of this House to stand by the Appropriations Committee and reduce these expenditures. There is another point to which I wish to direct the attention of the gentleman from New York, and it is this, that his apprehension of a deficit in the coming year may be avoided because it is well known that the appropriations are always in excess of expenditures. In other words, that the Government always finds it possible, even after we have appropriated here, to reduce the expenditures of the Government below the amounts covered by the appropriation acts. I admit that there have been peculiar reasons for some of the increases which have been made; and I assert now, with all of the deliberation that a careful investigation of the subject warrants me in making, that there has not been thus far in any of the annual appropriation bills any undue extravagance, and I will illustrate it in the case of this very bill. The reductions will approach near a million dollars in extent before this bill is concluded in the House.

In the case of the sundry civil bill, now ready to be reported, and which will be reported so soon as the issue touching the question of tariff legislation shall be determined, it reduces this year's appropriation under that of last year to the extent of about $5,150,000. It is not one of apprehension, but it is one that appeals to us as demanding the utmost caution on the part of the majority side of the House who are to be held responsible to the public for the appropriations; and it becomes our duty under these conditions, independent of our obligations as representatives of the people, to see that not one unnecessary dollar is included in any of these annual appropriation bills which are to be passed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, concerning this question of economy, about which we hear so much, it may be well to keep in view the fact that there is an economy that is an honest economy, and there is also a dishonest side to the question. I protest it is not honest economy when you propose to put the hand of this Government into the pocket of an office-holder who is performing faithfully and honestly his duty and take from him $500 to which he is entitled by law. That is not honest economy, nor does the country ask it.

Here is a man who gives a bond in the first place for $200,000 for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office. The responsibility attached to the office is so great that while he has held his office for eleven years there is not to-day a single person looking for that position. Now, in order to make the cross-cut on expenses, you propose under this wild cry for retrenchment and reform which has been set up here by this committee to practically assess this officer $500 a year, although ten years ago this officer's salary was reduced in the appropriation bill from $5,000 to $4,500. You now propose to make another slash at it, and reduce it to $4,000 because you think he may stand it. That is not my idea of retrenchment, nor is it my idea of honesty. Standing here as a Democrat, I believe that a proper regard for the honesty and efficiency of the public service will not permit such an action.

I believe in getting the best men you can to fill your offices and to pay them proper prices. You are working here for $5,000 a year and give no bond. You realize what you can save out of your salaries. Here is a man who gives a heavy bond of $200,000 and who is responsible for the acts of his clerks and for any accidents which may arise in his office. One mistake of one man may rob him of his salary for years and yet you propose under this "cheap John" cry of retrenchment and reform to rob this man of a part of his salary. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MORRISON. Putting aside, as others have done, for a moment the question of the Saint Louis appropriation, I may be allowed to say that the purpose of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] in the statements he has made will be misunderstood by no one, and that his estimates of revenues and expenditures are as incorrect as his purpose is unjust and unrighteous. I mean, of course, the purpose of continuing unnecessary taxes.

I had occasion to state some time ago that the end of this fiscal year, the first full year under the present administration, would show increased revenue receipts and decreased expenditure. And now within two weeks of the end of the fiscal year I say what I know to be the fact, that I rather understated than overstated the increased receipts and decreased expenditures. At the end of the fiscal year two weeks hence the statement of expenditures and revenues will show the truth of what I have said and now repeat, that notwithstanding increased pensions less money will be expended this year in administering the Government than last, only a part of which was under the present administration.

Neither is the statement of the gentleman as to the appropriations correct, if I understood him correctly.

Every appropriation bill that has gone through the House, or has been reported during the session, is below that of the current year except perhaps that for the consular and diplomatic service, which is but a little increased, and the aggregate of that which is intended to meet the entire expenditure of the year not in excess of the appropriation for the present fiscal year, including the deficiencies estimated and soon to be reported and passed.

Mr. Chairman, it is true that there comes upon us an unexpected demand or expenditure out of the decision of the Supreme Court to the effect that the Government must refund duties assessed on packages or coverings on imported goods. Is the Democratic House responsible for that? Why, sir, that comes from yonder conference-room, where the tariff bill that you of the minority now passed was made and where you did not take to yourselves all you intended to grab. The decision referred to is the result of bungling there when you passed the commission or tariff bill of 1883. That is not chargeable to us.

Mr. Chairman, the end of the next two weeks will show, as I have said, a larger surplus for this the current year than we had at the end of the last year, 1885.

As to the question of taxation or reduced taxation, taking as a basis the receipts and expenditures of this fiscal year, eleven and a half months of which are gone, or estimating the expenditures of next year as indicated by the appropriations already made or reported, we will have a surplus of more than twenty millions, unless, of course, we should pass the pension-arrears bill and make other extraordinary expenditures which make no part of the expenditures in the last few years. In that case, of course, there would be a deficiency, without increased taxation or without a great revival of business resulting in increased consumption, and of course more revenue, which is paid on what we consume.

Mr. HISCOCK addressed the Chair.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a question of order. I understand in Committee of the Whole gentlemen can not speak a second time until others who desire to do so are heard. I want to speak to the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has stated the rule correctly.

Mr. HISCOCK. There were some things said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] to which I would like to reply at this time. I ask the gentleman from Missouri to yield to me.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to go on with the business and not debate politics.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Missouri insists the Chair will have to sustain the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from New York can speak after I get through.

I voted against the increase of salary of the assistant treasurer at Baltimore, I voted also against the Cincinnati increase, simply because the amendments proposed to increase the salaries of the assistant treasurers there from four thousand to five thousand dollars. I was quite willing to appropriate the salaries at Baltimore, Cincinnati, and Saint Louis precisely as they are now, $4,500. But this committee went to work and increased the salary of the assistant treasurer at Baltimore to $5,000, and also of the assistant treasurer at Cincinnati to the same figure. And yet the business in the office at Saint Louis is greater than at Baltimore and Cincinnati. The business at Saint Louis amounts to $57,000,000 annually, at Baltimore to $53,000,000, and at Cincinnati to about $52,000,000. And yet this committee have increased the salaries at those two offices to $5,000, $500 more than the assistant treasurer at Baltimore and Cincinnati are receiving now. And still it is proposed to reduce the salary of the assistant treasurer at Saint Louis to $4,000, taking away from him $500 of what he is now receiving.

I say, as a matter of justice and fair play this committee should do no such thing. While I voted against the increase to $5,000 I was quite willing you should let the salaries remain where they are; and that is what we ought to do with the Saint Louis office. If you vote the increase demanded here over the appropriation so as to give the assistant treasurer at Saint Louis a salary of $4,500 you give him what he has been receiving all the while and $500 less than the law allows him.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BLAND. Not at this moment. Now, I say that is not fair play; it is not just to increase the amount at Cincinnati to $5,000, raising the salary of the assistant treasurer there to $500 more than he is receiving when the business at his office is less than it is at Saint Louis. And the same holds true with regard to Baltimore. You raise the salary of the assistant there $500 more than he is receiving; and you propose to cut down the salary at Saint Louis where a larger business is done than at either of those offices. You propose to cut down the salary of that officer $500, giving him $1,000 less than the others; and yet the assistant treasurer at Saint Louis is doing more business than either one of them.

Now, I insist that this committee and this House should not under any pretext do injustice of that sort. We ask no increase for the Saint Louis office. We simply ask that the salary may remain what it has been, $4,500, $500 less than you have given to the corresponding officer at Baltimore and Cincinnati. I do not see how the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations can insist on this unjust discrimination.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to correct the gentleman in this; his language would seem to imply that the Committee on Appropriations have made the increase to which he refers.

Mr. BLAND. I did not mean that.

Mr. RANDALL. It was the Committee of the Whole that made the increase.

Mr. BLAND. The Committee on Appropriations reported an appropriation of $4,000 for these officers in the different cities, and the Committee of the Whole has increased the appropriation to $5,000 in the case of Baltimore and Cincinnati. We do not ask that amount for this officer at Saint Louis, but simply that the salary shall remain what it has been. I hope this will be agreed to.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I wish to say to the gentleman in charge of this bill that I was not aware that the amount for the assistant treasurer at Cincinnati had been increased beyond what the law allows. In moving the increase it was my understanding that the salary was fixed by law at $5,000. If the legal salary is only $4,500, I desire to fix that amount. I do not wish to have the salary increased or diminished, but simply to appropriate what the law allows.

Mr. BLAND. As I understand, the law provides a salary of $5,000 for all these officers; but the appropriation bills for probably the last ten years have appropriated only $4,500 in each case. No one of these officers has been receiving for some years past the full amount that the law authorizes. It has become customary to appropriate only $4,500 for these various assistant treasurers. By the action of the Committee of the Whole on this bill the salaries of these officers at Cincinnati and Baltimore have been raised to $5,000; and now it is proposed to cut down the salary of the corresponding officer at Saint Louis to $4,000. The proper mode would be to allow all to remain upon the basis on which they have been for some years, $4,500.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the House by its vote will restore these salaries to the amount recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLAND. I hope we shall agree in each case to the amount which has been appropriated for some years past. I think $4,500 is enough for any of these officers.

Mr. RANDALL. It seems to me that the impropriety and imprudence of the action of the Committee of the Whole—I say this with perfect respect to everybody—is shown in the very case of the assistant treasurer at Cincinnati, whose salary by the action of the committee has been increased beyond what the law authorizes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL].

The amendment was agreed to; there being—ayes 87, noes 38.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at San Francisco: For assistant treasurer, $4,500; cashier, $3,000; book-keeper, $2,500; one chief clerk, $2,400; assistant cashier, receiving-teller, and assistant book-keeper, at $2,000 each; coin-teller and one clerk, at $1,800 each; one clerk, $1,400; one messenger, $840; and four watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $27,120.

Mr. FELTON. I move to strike out, in line 1196, $4,500 as the salary of the assistant treasurer at San Francisco, and insert $5,000. I am induced to offer this amendment, not because an increase has been made by the Committee of the Whole in other similar cases, but because I believe it is due to the officer who occupies this position that he should receive the full amount of salary allowed by law. The subtreasury at San Francisco is, I believe, in point of business, the third in the United States.

When the present incumbent took possession of his office, something like a year since, there was committed to his custody over $80,000,000. This office at San Francisco is the chief disbursing and receiving office of the Government west of the Rocky Mountains. I think that a salary of even $5,000 is not at all commensurate with the services which this officer is required to render, the responsibilities and anxieties attendant upon an office of this character. The salary authorized by law in this case is $6,000. My amendment proposes to allow only $5,000, as that is the amount allowed to Boston and other large offices.

Mr. RANDALL. As the gentleman from California [Mr. FELTON] has said, the law fixes this salary at $6,000; but that was done upon the idea that the cost of living was greater in San Francisco than at any of the other cities having subtreasuries. That condition of things no longer prevails, and I see no reason why the salary of the assistant treasurer at San Francisco should be placed at a higher figure than that which has been voted by the Committee of the Whole for the corresponding officer at Saint Louis, $4,500.

Mr. FELTON. My amendment proposes to appropriate only $5,000.

Mr. RANDALL. That puts this office above the Saint Louis office——

Mr. FELTON. As it should be. It does five times the business of the Saint Louis office. The business of the office at San Francisco is more than three times that of some of those subordinate offices.

Mr. RANDALL. There is only a limited number of business hours in the day; and if more business is done at the San Francisco office than at other places it is probable there is a larger clerical force.

Mr. FELTON. The gentleman will allow me to ask whether he would be willing to assume the duties of an office involving transactions of millions of dollars per day at the same salary as an office where the business amounted to only $100,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say that in my view one of the mistakes of the civil-service system is in assuming that when you have examined a man as to his educational requirements that is an all-sufficient test of his qualifications for office. There are other things that come into consideration in determining eligibility to office. One is the industrious and energetic habits of the applicant; another is his integrity. I say that the assistant treasurer at San Francisco will be as honest and upright upon a salary of $4,500 as upon a salary of $5,000. It all rests in the integrity of the man.

Mr. FELTON. Why is the salary so much higher for New York? And the gentleman stated the other day that in his own personal business he would be willing to pay a salary of $5,000 for the services of such a man as the clerk of his committee; and I thought he was right when he said so.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir; and I consider the position of clerk of the Appropriations Committee a more important office—not perhaps in respect to integrity, but in point of information—than any of these positions.

Mr. FELTON. One more remark, this officer has been so unfortunate as to have lost two years' salary.

Mr. RANDALL. In what way?

Mr. FELTON. By loss of money.

Mr. RANDALL. Was it lost by default?

Mr. FELTON. Yes; and a gentleman preceding him some years since lost $10,000 by forgery after six years' service. He, however, was like Dundreary's brother Sam, "he was an ass," for he paid into the Treasury the loss, and while the Government has relieved, as they should have done, similar losses sustained by other treasurers, it has never reimbursed him.

Mr. RANDALL. Was there a defalcation?

Mr. FELTON. Losses by paying two forged checks. The treasurer at San Francisco is required to give a bond to the extent of one million, as it takes that amount to justify it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I misunderstand something in regard to this matter which I would like to have explained to me. I am told this officer by law is entitled to $6,000 a year for salary. The appropriation in the bill is $4,500. This amendment is to put it at $5,000. Now what do we gain by appropriating only part of what is due to this Government officer? Has he not a claim against the Government for the balance? Is it not a mere pretense of economy when we appropriate less than is due? It looks to me like a mere pretense of economy on the part of the Democratic majority. Now suppose some one of the unregenerate sons of Adam who sit in the reporters' gallery should tell the people of this pretense of economy, or suppose that other kind of unregenerate sons of Adam, known as Republican stumpers, in the interim between this and the next session of Congress, should also let it be known that this is a dead pretense of economy and that nothing is gained by it, what then would be the position of the gentlemen who urge it?

If this $6,000 salary is too much, then let us repeal the law, and do not under the pretense of economy appropriate below the amount required for this salary by law and call that saving money.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a vote.

Mr. HIESTAND. Mr. Chairman, in order to relieve my friend from Ohio, as well as the Democrats on the other side of this House who do not seem to understand the policy of this administration, I ask the Clerk to read what is said by a Washington correspondent of the Boston Advertiser. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A Washington correspondent of the Boston Advertiser says:

"A Democratic member of the Committee on Appropriations says that the President has called in members of the committee and urged on them the policy of economy, or a show of it, in cutting down the appropriations. He said: 'The parties are so nearly in harmony on all other questions that the only potential issue we can make before the people is that of economy. That must be our issue in the coming elections, and it must rely for support upon the showing made by the Appropriations Committee.'

"To the objection raised by a Southern member of the committee that there would be heavy deficiencies which would make a bad showing, the President said the first matter of consequence was to make a strong showing in cutting down expenses, and sweeping work could be done in cutting off useless officials. The gentlemen said further that Mr. CARLISLE had repeatedly conferred with the President on this matter, and then advised with the Democrats of the committee, urging the widest latitude in reducing the sums recommended for appropriations. As a result the sundry civil appropriation bill will be cut down $1,000,000, the legislative $1,000,000, and four hundred offices abolished.

"The President is reported as having been very insistent in this matter, and as saying: 'If you will take an extreme course in this matter of opposing liberal appropriations and indorse my policy of civil-service reform, nothing can beat us in 1888.'"

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. FELTON.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 72.

Mr. RANDALL. It is so close I ask for a vote by tellers.

Mr. FELTON. Does the gentleman want to make this an exceptional case?

Mr. RANDALL. It is an exceptional case.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania make the point of no quorum?

Mr. RANDALL. I do.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. RANDALL and Mr. FELTON to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 90, noes 80.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment coming over was the following, moved by Mr. CANNON:

In lines 1230 and 1232 strike out "293" and insert "358;" so it will read: "For the wages of workmen and adjusters, $358,000."

Mr. CANNON. I will detain the committee but a moment in order to explain briefly the purposes of my amendment. The appropriation as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations is $293,000. The only question at issue is whether the bill shall tell how much it cost for this purpose or whether it shall be paid secretly from the silver-profit fund.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no occasion for that amendment at all, and I know something about this, for it is in my own city.

Mr. CANNON. It is estimated and submitted by your Secretary of the Treasury and by the adoption of my amendment the bill shows exactly what this service costs the Government. You decrease the amount here and expect to make it good out of the secret silver-profit fund.

Mr. RANDALL. Just as you did.

Mr. CANNON. I beg pardon.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no secret about it. It is set forth exactly in the mint statement.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said a while ago, calling the attention of the country to the fact, this bill was $808,000 less for the current year. Now here is the appropriation of a hundred thousand dollars less than the amount necessary for this service, the expectation being the reduction will be made good out of the secret silver-profit fund.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Illinois misleads the House, of course unintentionally. [Laughter.] He knows as well as I do that the appropriation last year is just what it is for this year.

Mr. CANNON. I beg pardon. If the gentleman will look at it for last year he will find out it is not.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman will look at this item he will find it is $293,000, the same as is provided in this bill.

Mr. CANNON. I beg the gentleman's pardon; this is a reduction of the wages of workmen and adjusters. Two hundred and ninety-three thousand dollars is what you recommend, and this is a reduction of $65,000 under the item for the current year. Now, I will ask the gentleman are you going to do less in the way of coinage this year than you did last?

Mr. RANDALL. Well, the gentleman will give up, I suppose, when he is convinced by the reading of the law?

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. RANDALL. I have the law here; will you come over and read it?

Mr. CANNON. Read it yourself or send it over.

Mr. RANDALL. This relates, now remember, to the mint at Philadelphia:

For wages of workmen and adjusters, $293,000.

That is just the same amount that we have given here, so the $800,000 reduction, the gentleman will observe, is not made up in part by the reduction of $100,000, as he has stated, on this mint.

Mr. CANNON. I have the law here and have carefully examined it. I would be glad if the gentleman would allow me to see that act to which he has referred.

Mr. RANDALL. Undoubtedly; here it is. I offered to send it to you.

Mr. CANNON (after examining the act). Ah! the gentleman misleads the House now, unintentionally, no doubt. [Laughter.]

The estimate, when you get at the facts, is $65,000 for wages of workmen above the appropriation for the current year and above the recommendations for this year, and $10,000 for the contingent fund. But I am still correct, because you drop out the mint at Carson City altogether with its $114,000 of appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. But we have not come to that point in the bill yet, and the House may not agree to that. The gentleman said this was $100,000 less than the amount of last year; now I have convinced him to the contrary.

Mr. CANNON. I beg pardon. I was stating the amount with reference to the mints as a whole. You dropped out $114,000 for the Carson City mint, expecting that the mints at Philadelphia, San Francisco, and New Orleans will do all the minting that is required or that will be done for the current year. So that in fact it is $100,000, as I have said, and $14,000 more of a reduction. Now, who is misleading the House?

Mr. RANDALL. Well, you are. [Laughter.] There has been $1,700,000 of Bland money coined right along monthly at the Philadelphia mint. There is going to be no difference there in reference to the coinage. The appropriation for last year, which covered the entire expenditure, was $293,000, just as I have said. Now, finding that he is wrong, the gentleman shoots off to another position altogether.

Mr. CANNON. I was incorrect in reference to the specific point of the reduction; but, as far as the mints are concerned, I have shown that I was correct, and $14,000 more than correct.

Mr. RANDALL. I have only spoken of the mint that was directly under consideration, and I have borne out the statement by the figures.

Mr. CANNON. Having the whole mint service in mind, I was incorrect as to the wages of the employés at the Philadelphia mint, but I was upwards of $14,000 under in the estimate of the shortage when the whole mint service is taken into consideration. Now, when I have been frank, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is called upon to be frank also and to admit that fact.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, the gentleman's complaint is against himself and not against me. That is the worst one in the world to get into difficulty with, for you never get even. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Is it not true that the appropriation is $114,000 less, as recommended in this bill, than the appropriations for the present year?

Mr. RANDALL. The House will see that the gentleman started off with an assertion that this appropriation for Philadelphia was some $63,000 less than the appropriation for last year. Now, I have proven to him that it was the same as last year.

Mr. CANNON. And the House has found out that there is $114,000 less for the mint service than was appropriated last year.

Mr. RANDALL. I will talk about the general reduction when we come to the discussion of that part of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. And I hope the gentleman will explain the reason for this discrepancy.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to the law on this subject. The act providing for the coinage of the standard silver dollar contains this provision:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase silver bullion, at the market price thereof, not less than $2,000,000 worth per month, nor more than $4,000,000 worth per month, and cause the same to be coined monthly as fast as so purchased into such dollars; and a sum sufficient to carry out the foregoing provision of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

There is a standing appropriation, for what purpose? For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act, authorizing the coinage of the standard silver dollar; not only providing for the purchase of bullion, but for all of the expenses connected with the coinage of the standard dollar, and the appropriation is a permanent one under that statute.

I am aware there is an idea in this House and elsewhere that that statute ought to be repealed; and that instead of this being a standing and permanent appropriation it ought to be subject to the will of Congress at every session.

Mr. RANDALL. There is nothing in this bill touching that.

Mr. BLAND. I understand that. But that is the theory the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is going upon.

Mr. CANNON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The gentleman does not measure his words and does not state the fact correctly when he says so.

Mr. BLAND. I believe I am stating the fact correctly. The gentleman desires a specific appropriation in this bill for the purpose of employing laborers. Does not that law make the appropriation?

Mr. CANNON. It does.

Mr. BLAND. Why make another?

Mr. CANNON. Because I want this bill to show on its face what the expenses of this service are.

Mr. BLAND. But the act itself makes the appropriation; and hence it is not necessary to make another. Whenever it comes to the point that this House must make an appropriation every session for the payment of the expenses of purchasing bullion and coining standard silver dollars you will have the question up on appropriation bills, and we may fail to appropriate one session or the next. But I contend the law itself makes the appropriation, and a permanent one, to pay all the expenses of coinage so far as silver is concerned.

Mr. HEWITT. Will the gentleman read or allow me to read the next clause showing what is to be done with the profit and seigniorage?

Mr. BLAND. It is practically paid into the Treasury.

Mr. HEWITT. And how is it to be got out without an appropriation?

Mr. BLAND. The appropriation is made here.

Mr. HEWITT. That fund goes specifically into the Treasury.

Mr. RANDALL. The law provides that it shall be taken out, and it was taken out for the Bland silver-dollar service to the extent of $156,000 in 1885.

Mr. HEWITT. Does the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations hold that that is a permanent appropriation?

Mr. RANDALL. I am not bound to state what I hold. The Treasury so holds.

Mr. MILLS. The Treasury Department sent to Congress a statement containing a number of permanent appropriations—this is one among the rest—and asked to have them repealed.

Mr. HEWITT. It never has been judicially tested.

Mr. RANDALL. The Treasury Department gives its construction to the statute and they meet that with due and proper appropriations.

The question being taken on Mr. CANNON'S amendment, it was disagreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph under the heading, "Mint at San Francisco, Cal.:"

For wages of workmen and adjusters, $170,000.

Mr. MCKENNA. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 1249 and 1250 strike out "$170,000" and insert "$250,000."

Mr. MCKENNA. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars has been the usual appropriation for the San Francisco mint. In the amount as it comes from the Committee on Appropriations there is an apparent saving of $80,000; but it is only apparent, for the reasons already intimated—on account of the numerous funds to which the Department can resort for payment.

The question I was going to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] when I was interrupted by the gentleman from Illinois was this, Whether the expenses of the Philadelphia mint did not amount to $437,000 last year instead of $393,000 as appropriated by the bill? I now ask that question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. That is including what is paid out from the fund known as the standard-silver-dollar fund.

Mr. McKENNA. That fund is a permanent appropriation for special purposes. The Department uses what is called the bullion fund to buy the silver necessary to coin standard silver dollars. They use this permanent appropriation for the payment of the extra expenses that may be occasioned by coining the silver dollar or other expenses of the mint.

The Philadelphia mint is run night and day. It is strained to its full capacity for the coining of silver dollars. The New Orleans mint is run to its full capacity. But from the San Francisco mint is taken away the coining of standard silver dollars entirely. Why? Because it is part of the discrimination against the coining of the standard silver dollar. The coining is taken from San Francisco, where that money is popular, and it is brought over here, where a man apologizes if he gives it to you in change. The object is to crowd the Philadelphia mint to its utmost capacity day and night and take this service away from the San Francisco mint. The use of other funds is not apparent to the public, and although there is a decrease of $80,000 on the face of the bill, there is no real decrease.

It is the same pretense that appears throughout this bill, the same attempt to make a showing of a decrease of appropriations. Now, sir, I say that the appropriation ought to be restored to the San Francisco mint, so that if a change should come over the Treasury Department the money would be available to enable it to resume the coinage of the standard silver dollars on the Pacific coast, where, as I have already said, they are popular.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is not the permanent appropriation as applicable to the coinage of standard dollars at the San Francisco mint as at the Philadelphia mint?

Mr. McKENNA. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And therefore it is wholly within the discretion of the Government, and has nothing to do with this appropriation here?

Mr. RANDALL. The extra amount of coinage of the Bland dollars at the Philadelphia mint grows out of the fact that they can be coined there at less cost than at the other mints. I will submit——

Mr. McKENNA. They can be coined at somewhat less cost, but the Philadelphia mint is running day and night and is subjected to an extra strain for the coinage of these silver dollars, that have been taken away from the Pacific coast for no other reason, I believe, but to discriminate against the silver dollar. Now, let us restore this appropriation to the San Francisco mint. Then if the Secretary of the Treasury still chooses to use his discretion in favor of Philadelphia he can do so, but, on the other hand, if he changes his mind, this appropriation will be on hand to enable the coinage to go on at the San Francisco mint. What was the gentleman from Pennsylvania going to say?

Mr. RANDALL. I was going to submit a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, but I will state the substance of it and incorporate the letter in my remarks. The original estimate for the San Francisco mint was $150,000, but by a letter dated February 23, 1886, it was asked to be increased to $170,000. Now, that is the estimate and that is the sum given in the appropriation bill. The gentleman from California wanted to know about the estimate.

The following is the letter above referred to:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 25, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of letter of the Director of the Mint, of the 24th instant, in which he requests, for reasons therein stated, that the estimate of appropriation for "wages of workmen, mint at San Francisco," for the fiscal year 1887, to be found on page 34 of the Book of Estimates, be increased from $150,000 to $170,000.

Respectfully, yours,

D. MANNING, Secretary.

The Hon. SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF THE MINT,
Washington, D. C., June 24, 1886.

SIR: Referring to the estimates of appropriations for the support of the mint service for the fiscal year 1887, which I had the honor to forward to you November 5, 1885, I have the honor to state that the estimate for wages of workmen at the San Francisco mint was placed at $150,000. The appropriation for the current fiscal year for that purpose is $235,000. It will be seen that the estimate for the fiscal year 1887 is $85,000 less than the present appropriation.

The superintendent of the mint at San Francisco informs me that it will not be possible to properly execute the business of the mint with the amount for which appropriation has been asked.

As the coinage of small gold is by your direction executed at the San Francisco mint, the force of adjusters has been necessarily increased, and if the same character of coinage is continued during the next fiscal year, I am satisfied that the sum named in my estimate will not be sufficient.

I have, therefore, the honor to request that you will increase the estimate for wages of workmen at the San Francisco mint to $170,000.

Very respectfully,

JAMES P. KIMBALL,
Director of the Mint.

Hon. DANIEL MANNING,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. McKENNA. The estimate is influenced by the same animus that I have spoken of, the desire to coin these dollars on this side of the continent, where they are thought not to be popular, and to take them away from the Pacific coast, where they are deservedly popular. As I have already said, if this amendment restoring the appropriation for the San Francisco mint be adopted, it will not necessarily compel the money to be used there.

I wish to say, also, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question which the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] put to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] a while ago, that it is not the permanent appropriation that goes back into the Treasury. It is only the profit that is made upon the purchase of this bullion that goes back—the so-called seigniorage. But the permanent appropriation is there; it is perennial, and they use it to pay the expenses of this coinage, when on the face of the appropriation bill only a certain figure has been allotted for that purpose. I certainly think this amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I want to state in reply to the gentleman from California [Mr. McKENNA] that the permanent appropriation for the coinage of the silver dollar is available at any of the mints, wherever the Secretary of the Treasury and Director of the Mint discover that these dollars can be most economically coined. That appropriation goes so largely to the mints at Philadelphia and New Orleans because in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Mint the coinage can be done at those mints for less money than at San Francisco. For that reason, the Secretary of the Treasury recommended a reduction of $85,000, still leaving the amount necessary to continue the payment at the San Francisco mint for the coinage of minor coin, and of such gold coin as may be required.

Mr. HEWITT. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania answer a question?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. HEWITT. If there is any deficiency of silver dollars in California or anywhere else, is it not the duty of the Treasury Department to supply them without cost?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. McKENNA. Let me answer that by saying that the Treasury Department have purposely made it difficult for people on the Pacific coast to get these silver dollars distributed to them. How? Under the former administration application could be made to the subtreasury, but under this administration the application is required to be forwarded to Washington, thus occasioning additional delay.

Mr. HEWITT. Is there, in fact, any deficiency of silver dollars in San Francisco?

Mr. McKENNA. There is just as much deficiency there as anywhere else. There is a deficiency of subsidiary coinage, and there is a complaint of worn-out coin.

Mr. RANDALL. In reply to the remarks of the gentleman from California, I wish to say that the impression that the Treasury Department is inimical to the circulation of the Bland dollar is entirely erroneous. To any fair mind that has examined the matter every act of the Department in relation to this subject shows that they have endeavored in every possible way to get the Bland dollar into circulation. Injustice has been done to the Department in that respect. This shows, if I am not mistaken (and if I am the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] will correct me), that the maximum amount of Bland dollars in circulation under this administration is greater than it has been under any previous administration.

Mr. HEWITT. You are perfectly right.

Mr. McKENNA. Then will the gentleman from Pennsylvania explain why the Treasury Department requires these applications for the Bland dollar to be forwarded to Washington for approval, instead of permitting them, as the former administration did, to be made to the subtreasury at San Francisco?

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask if it has not been also the requirement of the present administration that people applying for the Bland dollar should pay the expense of its transportation?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is not so now.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, it has been so under this administration.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It was so under former administrations. The law has been changed.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, in connection with this question I desire to give the figures showing the circulation of the Bland dollar under this administration as compared with former ones. On the 31st of December, 1884, there were in circulation Bland dollars to the amount of about $43,000,000. On the 31st of December, 1885, the circulation of Bland dollars was about $52,500,000. This shows that the present administration, instead of failing to execute the law, has been industrious in trying to secure the issuance and circulation of the Bland dollar. I yield now to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is the discussion of the question of silver coinage in order at this time? If so, I shall ask unanimous consent to suspend business until I go home and get my silver speech which I failed to deliver here when the subject was under discussion before. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. I beg that the gentleman will not go, because the vote taken a few minutes ago showed that they were too many Democrats at home already. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. BLAND. So far as concerns the coinage of silver dollars on the Pacific coast, the complaint has been, and it seems to me very justly, that there has been more of such coinage in San Francisco than was necessary. I think there has been in the San Francisco mint from $48,000,000 to $50,000,000 of silver that has never gone into circulation. It is very true that certificates may be issued on this coinage, and those certificates may circulate throughout the country; but I see no necessity for coining so large an amount of silver dollars in San Francisco, away from the centers of population. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, we ought to have a mint in the Mississippi Valley, where this silver could be coined—in the center of population and contiguous to the mining territories.

With regard to silver going into circulation, it is true that the present administration has put more of this coin in circulation than has any prior administration; but I am sorry to say that so far as the circulation of certificates is concerned I see no very great improvement now as compared with former administrations.

I have one further remark to make with regard to this silver question and with regard to the Saint Louis assay office, which will be considered by the Committee of the Whole in a few moments. I see that the Committee on Appropriations has failed in this bill to appropriate one dime to carry into effect the law creating that assay office—an office authorized by law for the express purpose of compelling bullion holders in New York to deliver bullion at the New Orleans mint for the same price at which they would deliver it at the Philadelphia mint. The former Director of the Mint said that unless this was done he would open a bullion market at Saint Louis by establishing an assay office there, and would ship the bullion from Saint Louis to New Orleans to be coined. Yet I find that the Committee on Appropriations has failed entirely to make any appropriation for the purpose of carrying out this law providing for an assay office at Saint Louis.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it has been stated that the Treasury Department has done everything it could to force into circulation the standard silver dollars. Now, I attach no importance to any effort to force the circulation of the coin itself. Nobody cares whether the coin circulates or whether the paper representing the coin goes into circulation. What I complain of, if anything is to be complained of, is that opportunity is not given to every one to exercise his choice as between coin and paper, as between the silver certificate and the silver dollar. Under the law as it has been interpreted the coin must be deposited before the certificates can be obtained. I think the law ought to be so modified (if any modification is necessary in order to permit this to be done) that anybody may take his choice between paper and coin. There is no gain to anybody in this country or in the world by having the coin itself circulate in preference to the certificates which represent it.

Mr. HEWITT. But is not the provision of the law mandatory? I ask the gentleman as a lawyer whether the Secretary of the Treasury can do anything else than obey the law?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. A similar proceeding could be adopted in this case to that which has been pursued when greenbacks are offered at the custom-house in New York for customs duties. Greenbacks thus offered are accepted. Why? Because if the customs officers should refuse to accept them the notes could be handed in at the other counter where gold could be obtained for them, and then the gold could be offered to the receiver of customs dues. Of course the officer of the Government may in his discretion demand that I shall first deposit my $10 in silver at one counter before receiving the silver certificate at another; but no such interpretation of the law is necessary. If I ask for silver certificates instead of silver dollars, why may I not have them? Certainly the terms of the law call for no interpretation which would prevent this.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Under the administration of Mr. Folger as Secretary of the Treasury the certificates were always issued when requested instead of silver dollars.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I am aware that has been the practice heretofore. The Treasurer or assistant treasurer has paid out silver certificates when requested in lieu of coin; and this may be done, in my judgment, under the law. All that is necessary is to maintain stability of circulation; and whether that be through the circulation of coin or paper should be left entirely to the choice of those who circulate it.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the Committee of the Whole vote in this case the amount of the estimate.

The question being taken on the amendment it was not agreed to.

Mr. GLOVER. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1252 insert a new paragraph, as follows:
"Assay office at Saint Louis, Mo."——

Mr. CANNON. We have not concluded the mints or reached the assay offices yet. I have an amendment touching a mint.

Mr. GLOVER. I understand that my amendment is as much in order at this point as at any other.

The CHAIRMAN. The last paragraph of the appropriations for the mint at San Francisco has been read.

Mr. CANNON. But the assay offices have not been reached. They begin on page 53 of the bill.

Mr. GLOVER. An amendment with reference to an assay office must be in order at any point under the heading "United States mints and assay offices."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Missouri to withdraw his amendment for the present. The Chair will recognize him at a later stage of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield the floor to the gentleman from New York, who desires to be heard for a few moments.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to strike out the last word. I take the opportunity, Mr. Chairman, of replying to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], who said I was mistaken in my estimate of expenditures and receipts for the next fiscal year, and that I had made it here for some unholy purpose.

Mr. MORRISON. If the gentleman will allow me I will say that I said "some unrighteous purpose." And by that I meant a continuation of unnecessary taxes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understood him to say further than that that my estimates in reference to receipts were not high enough, and that in reference to disbursements I was too high. Now, I have before me the expenditures of the Government for the present fiscal year, estimated for fifteen days, amounting to $245,396,090.46; adding to it the amount due the sinking fund for the next fiscal year, $46,659,000, it aggregates $292,055,090.46.

It is proper to say, in making up that amount, the post-office expenditures enter into it only in so far as money is taken from the other revenues of the Government in excess of revenues from the Post-Office Department. Putting, therefore, into this statement the amount of expenditures of the Post-Office Department in excess of its revenues and including the amount due the sinking fund for the next fiscal year, the amount is $292,055,090.46.

I say this amount is taken from the books of the Treasury, and there is no mistake about it.

I repeat what I said earlier to-day. The total estimate of revenues of the Government for the next fiscal year, excluding the postal revenues, which ought to enter into the account (as they are not included in estimate of revenues and the expenses; disbursements of the Post-Office Department do not go into the expenditures of the Government upon the books of the Treasury Department except in so far as they are in excess of postal revenues), will amount to $330,000,000, possibly three million more than that at the utmost.

I deny the appropriations for the next fiscal year so far are lower than they were for the current year. But this last estimate is based not on appropriations, but based on expenditures of our Democratic administration in the first year of its service, when it is before the country on its good behavior. Take those expenditures; add the deficiencies the Government has submitted, $6,529,000, and which have been recommended and are now pending; add to it the amount carried by the law, $6,000,000, for the payment of the claims to the Geneva awards; add to it for pensions $14,754,000, the amount already appropriated for next year in excess of the payments for this; add to it $10,000,000 customs duties which have to be refunded under the decision in the case of Oberteuffer vs. Robertson; add to it the amount carried by the river and harbor bill—you will remember there were not any appropriations for rivers and harbors for the current year and no expenditures—as it passed the House, $15,142,100, all aggregating $52,425,153; add this to the expenditures for the current year, with the amount to be paid the sinking fund; next, the three amounts to be added are $245,396,090.46, $46,695,000, $52,425,153—aggregate, $344,470,243.46. The receipts at the outside are only $333,000,000; deficiency, $11,470,243.46.

My remarks on this question will appear in the RECORD to-morrow. I trust and hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] will be frank enough to examine them, and when he has made that examination he will say to this House my estimate of expenditures for the next fiscal year is correct, and my estimate of the revenues for the next fiscal year is correct. This is a question upon which we ought not to differ.

Mr. MORRISON. I want to say in reply to the gentleman from New York, and I will be as frank as he wants me to be, that I have already examined this whole question of current revenues and expenditures and have examined with especial care the estimates of both for the coming year. Of course what the revenues for the next year may be can only be estimated, because, as the gentleman himself very well knows, under the same revenue laws receipts change largely. The difference has been in receipts from customs and internal revenue more than $126,000,000 within five years. That is to say, from these two sources we got $240,752,304 in 1878 and $366,908,325 in 1882 under the same law.

Mr. HISCOCK. The average has been from four to eight millions since the passage of the last bill.

Mr. MORRISON. What amount?

Mr. HISCOCK. The difference in receipts varies only as I remember it. I can not be exact from four to eight millions since the passage of the last tariff bill.

Mr. MORRISON. They fell off more than twenty millions between 1884 and 1885, and since then have again increased. They differ largely in different years and I have already said I can not tell what they will be exactly next year. I estimate they will be as much next year as the receipts for the first eleven months of this indicate, and it is on that basis I place or fix my estimate. I assume we will not spend any more money next year than we will this, which is less than the expenditure of last.

Mr. RANDALL. Less.

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, we will expend less if we do not further increase expenditures for pensions, which of course we may do.

I ought to have said, in reply to the gentleman from New York not long ago, concerning the $10,000,000 which he says we will be compelled to pay as the result of his mistake or error or something else in the tariff bill, that there is plenty of money in the Treasury now to pay that $10,000,000 for the current year; and in future years, if we will but pass the tariff bill, containing, as it does and as a part of it, what is called Mr. HEWITT'S amendment—that is the bill last year introduced by the gentleman from New York and now incorporated in the tariff bill—that $10,000,000 will be paid into the Treasury and not out of it, which will add to instead of taking from the revenues of next year.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let me interrupt the gentleman to ask if he says the disbursements of next year will be no more than they are for the current year? I wish to call his attention now in connection with that question to the fact that here is in the first place an increase of $14,700,000 for pensions; here is an increase of $15,142,000 for rivers and harbors; here is a deficiency bill now in the committee of $6,000,000——

Mr. RANDALL. That may be only $4,000,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. Very well; that may be. You have already passed deficiency bills here at this very session amounting to $6,000,000, and I appeal to the gentleman in view of these facts to stand up to that assertion, that the disbursements will be no more than they are for the current year.

Mr. RANDALL. But the deficiency bill to which the gentleman from New York has alluded is now pending in the committee, and may not reach the $4,000,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, call it $4,000,000; admit that it will be that or less, and strike out the $10,000,000 for refunding customs, and then it simply balances the Government accounts.

Assuming that you will have the large amount that has been collected from customs for the current year, it simply amounts to an aggregate of $330,000,000 of receipts against $330,000,000 of expenditures, and you can make nothing else out of it.

Mr. MORRISON. The pension bill which has become law is but half the gentleman's estimate. The expenditures of last year mentioned in the tariff report contained both river and harbor appropriations and deficiencies, and I do not believe in the gentleman's balances. They are all unbalanced. Still, I but repeat in saying we can not tell what will be the revenues next year, so much depends on the condition of the country and the ability of the people to use the necessaries and comforts of life and to pay taxes on them. My estimates are based on the Treasury transactions of last year, the first eleven months of this year, and the most reliable information now to be had. I would not like to promise what the House might or might not do in the matter of expenditures or appropriations in the next few weeks.

But I do assume that the heads of Departments will do next year as has been done this, and will go on reducing expenditures; and if the gentleman from New York has examined for himself, as he says he has, he has found that less money is being spent this year than was spent last. Whatever, therefore, the House of Representatives, the gentleman from New York, or myself may do, I assume that no matter what appropriations are made the administration, the President and assistants, will go on in the next year reducing expenditures just as has been done up to this time. Of course any large increase of the pension-list or grant of arrears would need to be provided for.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask for a vote.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to add a single word, to ask a question of the gentleman from Illinois before he takes his seat; and for that purpose I move to strike out the last word.

Is it not true that you reported a bill for the reduction of tariff taxes upon the assumption that the expenditures this year were only about $303,000,000; and is not that the statement embodied in your report? Is it not equally true that for the next fiscal year your expenditures will reach $344,000,000, including in that only the excess made for the postal service in excess of the postal revenues?

Mr. MORRISON. I will say candidly, in response to the gentleman from New York, that I do not exactly remember the statement in the report, not having the figures immediately before me, but they are based upon estimates derived from the Treasury Department, and within the space of two weeks you will see whether they are correct or not.

Mr. HISCOCK. You will find that they are entirely in error.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read——

Mr. RANDALL. I believe there is an amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending, as the Chair is informed.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the section the following:

"Mint at Carson, Nev.: For salary of superintendent, $3,000; for assayer, melter and refiner, and coiner, at $2,500 each; assistant assayer, assistant melter and refiner, and assistant coiner, at $2,000 each; chief clerk, at $2,250; cashier, book-keeper, and weigh clerk, at $2,000 each; abstract clerk and register of deposits, $1,800 each; assayer's computation clerk, $1,200; in all, $29,550. For wages of workmen and adjusters, $60,000. For incidental and contingent expenses, $25,000."

Mr. RANDALL. I submitted an amendment, which will be found printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on the evening when this bill was under consideration——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state for the information of the committee that he has directed the clerks, wherever a paragraph was read under the order for that evening session, to which amendments were offered and to which paragraph objection was made, that the whole proceeding in reference to such section should begin de novo. That is to say, that all amendments to such paragraph must be again offered in the House when the section is reached for consideration.

Mr. CANNON. I should be glad to have the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. This amendment provides an appropriation for the mint at Carson, which is contained in the appropriation for the current year. It has dropped out from this bill. My amendment carries $114,550. I offer it for the purpose of calling the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the House to an item of reduction in this bill of that amount; and at the close of my remarks, or before the amendment is voted on, I will withdraw the amendment, that the gentleman from Nevada, who desires to address the committee, may renew it.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations omitted any appropriation for the mint at Carson City because it was omitted in the estimates. A letter was addressed to the committee by the acting Secretary of the Treasury, which, if the gentleman from Illinois will have read, explains this matter as well as anything that can be said on the subject.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to state the whole question as to the cessation of business at Carson mint. As the Director of the Mint has told us, it was for this reason, that when bullion was brought in there to be coined they refused to pay for it in silver dollars; they would pay for it only in drafts. That threw the expense of shipping the silver dollars from New York or San Francisco on the men who sold the bullion, whereas the dollars should have been coined and paid out there.

I further call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to this point: that in the two items we have just left there is a reduction in the amount for wages of workmen and adjusters at San Francisco of $65,000, and for incidental expenses, $10,000. This makes a total reduction in this portion of the bill of $180,550, a reduction that I intended to talk about a moment ago, when I had a controversy with the gentleman from Pennsylvania; so that here is a reduction of one-fourth in these items of the amount the gentleman boasted his bill was reduced below the current law. He boasted the amount was $800,000. This $189,550 must be paid from the permanent appropriation for the silver dollar.

I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WOODBURN. I renew the amendment.

That any member of this House should offer an amendment to put in operation the mint at Carson City is to me a most agreeable surprise. That mint was constructed in 1869, and ever since its completion has been in almost constant operation until the 1st day of April of last year, when an order from the Secretary of the Treasury suspended its operation. In the following September, by a subsequent order, the mint was definitely closed down and its employés discharged, retaining nobody there save and except the superintendent and a few watchmen.

On that very day there were over 3,000,000 silver dollars at the Carson mint, which could have been utilized in that section of country. There was enough bullion on hand to keep that mint in operation for the ensuing six months.

But mark further, during the year up to the 1st of April that mint, well equipped as it was and well conducted as any other mint in this country, covered into the Treasury of the United States $7,000 in excess of its expenditure. More than that, for the five years prior to that date it covered into the Treasury of the Government $67,000 and more in excess of the appropriation. So that it was no burden to this Government. It was running to its full capacity. It is situated in the heart of one of the greatest gold and silver producing regions of the earth. To-day within 20 miles of it we are producing a million of dollars in gold and silver, upon which we are compelled to pay freight to the city of San Francisco.

The people west of the Rocky Mountains—between the Rockies and the Sierras—have humbly petitioned the President of the United States to reopen this mint. The President said he would give the memorial his most solemn attention and report his conclusion, but he has never done it. We have hitherto appealed in vain to the Secretary of the Treasury for redress and he has given a deaf ear to our appeal. We have by resolution in this House asked this House to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to inform us why in direct violation of the law he ever issued any order closing down a mint created by Congress and that can only be destroyed by its creator. That resolution was never heard of since it was referred to the Committee on Coinage.

Now, this appropriation bill as herein introduced contains not the most remote allusion to the Carson mint. I ask most respectfully the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has not the Secretary of the Treasury recommended to your committee to make no appropriation in this bill for the continuation of that Carson mint? Is there not a recommendation on file?

Mr. RANDALL. I have stated that it was omitted in the estimates.

Mr. WOODBURN. I should like to have an answer to my question.

Mr. RANDALL. You shall have it.

Mr. WOODBURN. The Director of the Mint gives as the sole reason why that mint was suspended in April, 1885, that there was very little bullion offered for sale.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RANDALL. On last Friday I gave notice, as I supposed, of an amendment I was intending to offer when the paragraph was reached, and asked that it be printed in the RECORD; and in the RECORD I had printed a communication from the Director of the Mint relating to the mint at Carson City. I have no hostility, neither do I believe has any member of the Committee on Appropriations any hostility, to the continuance of coinage at that mint. But I believe that the real reason which prompted the Director of the Mint to stop the coinage there is stated clearly in his report. It appears from that report that the cost of coining each piece above the denomination of 1 cent at the mint in Philadelphia was for the year 1884 1.30 cents, and for 1885, 1.89 cents. At the mint at San Francisco the cost for 1884 was 4.37 cents, and for 1885 5.80 cents. At the mint at New Orleans for 1884 1.55 cents, and for 1885 1.49 cents; and at the mint at Carson for 1884 7.28 cents, and for 1885 9.13 cents.

It is proper to state, however, that the coinage executed at the mint at Philadelphia included over fifteen millions of 5 and 3 cent nickel pieces in 1884, and over seven millions in 1885; the cost of coining which is considerably less than that of executing gold and silver pieces.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I suppose it was in this view that no estimate was made for the mint at Carson, but there was subsequently addressed to the Committee on Appropriations a letter, which I will ask to have read as a part of my remarks, and which prompted me to give notice last week that I would introduce an amendment in relation to the Carson mint:

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., June 5, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to copy of a letter from the Director of the Mint, inclosed herewith, in reference to the omission from the legislative bill of an appropriation for the support of the United States mint at Carson, Nev., for the year ending June 30, 1887, with the recommendation that an appropriation be made in accordance with the suggestions of the Director of the Mint.

Very respectfully,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Acting Secretary.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF THE MINT,
Washington, D. C. June 5, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the fact that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill as reported to the House of Representatives is without any appropriation for the United States mint at Carson, from the fact that at the same date a letter was addressed you reporting the fact of the practical "cessation of all kinds of business at the mint at Carson since the suspension of the coinage of the silver dollar, June 1, 1885." I saw no grounds "for an estimate of expenditures at this mint for the coming year." But it was stated that "should the mint be closed as recommended the only provision which need be submitted to Congress accordingly would be for a custodian and for what assistance might be necessary."

In the omission of any specific estimate for the mint at Carson, therefore, no appropriation has been reported to the House. I desire to call your attention to the requirement of an appropriation of at least $7,500 for the proper care and custody of the building and of the delicate and valuable machinery and apparatus therein contained.

I have also to submit the proposition whether it would not be well to suggest for the consideration of Congress an appropriation the same as that for the present fiscal year, especially in view of the fact that representations have been made to the Bureau of the Mint of the readiness on the part of the producers of bullion to deposit the same at the mint at Carson, instead of sending it to private refineries, on condition that certain benefits which it is claimed are conferred by the law, and which during the present year have been withheld from this institution in common with some others by the action of the Department, are restored.

I may say, indeed, that it is doubtless true that the cessation of deposits at the Carson mint are very largely due, first, to the payment of depositors by draft instead of in cash; and, second, to the imposition of a "transportation charge" upon depositors for cost of transportation of refined bullion to some coinage mint or to the assay office at New York, especially as the charge made by the express companies to the Government, and so imposed upon depositors, has been in excess of rates paid by private shippers.

I desire also to call attention to the fact that omission of the usual appropriation for the United States mint at Carson will deprive that institution of the means to reopen, if in the course of the year, at the discretion of the Department, it should be deemed expedient.

I have already explained the details of this matter to the chairman of the subcommittee as well as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Very respectfully,

JAMES P. MITCHELL,
Director of the Mint.

The honorable SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. RANDALL. In compliance with the suggestion in that letter I submitted an amendment on Friday last, which appears in the RECORD of June 12. That is the amendment I desire to offer. When I presented the amendment on Friday evening I said: "I desire to offer an amendment in relation to the Carson mint. I suppose it will be objected to, but in connection with it I desire to have printed in the RECORD a letter which I have received from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the director of the mint at Carson."

I am entirely willing, in deference to the view expressed by the Director of the Mint, and under the discretion lodged with him, to give my vote in favor of an appropriation for the Carson mint.

I do not know whether the Director of the Mint will expend that money or not, but it is well, as he says, to provide for any and every contingency in connection with the general coinage that is necessary for the country. I ask now to have read the amendment of which I gave notice on Friday evening.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Appropriation for the Carson mint for the year ending June 30, 1887.

For salaries:
Superintendent	$3,000
Assayer	2,500
Melter and refiner	2,500
Coiner	2,500
Assistant assayer, assistant melter and refiner, and assistant coiner, at $2,000 each	6,000
Assistant chief clerk	2,250
Cashier, book-keeper, and weigh clerk, at $2,000 each	6,000
Abstract clerk and register of deposits, at $1,800 each	3,600
Assayer's computation clerk	1,200
Total	29,550
For wages of workmen and adjusters	60,000
For incidental and contingent expenses	25,000
Total	114,550

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, notice having been given on Friday last of intended amendments, are those amendments to be considered as pending to-day?

The CHAIRMAN. They are not.

Mr. PERKINS. Is this amendment offered as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. WOODBURN]?

Mr. RANDALL. They are both the same. I do not care where the amendment comes from, but I wish to say that this subject had been examined by members of the Committee on Appropriations and the line of the amendment practically agreed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report again the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, so that it may be clearly understood.

The amendment was again read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mint at New Orleans, La.: For salary of the superintendent, $3,500; for the assayer, melter and refiner, and coiner, three in all, at $2,500 each; cashier and chief clerk, at $2,000 each; assistant assayer, assistant melter and refiner, and assistant coiner, $1,900 each; abstract clerk and bookkeeper, at $1,600 each; weigh clerk and assayer's computation clerk, at $1,600 each; register of the deposits, warrant clerk, and assistant weigh clerk, at $1,250 each; in all $30,850.

For wages of workmen and adjusters, $74,000.

For incidental and contingent expenses, including repairs and new machinery, $35,000.

Mr. GAY. I move to amend, in line 1268, after the word "each," by inserting "cashier's clerk at $1,100."

Mr. Chairman, this clerk has been in the employ of the mint there for years, although he is not included in the present estimate, and I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to accept this amendment without putting it to the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] to tell the House some reason why the amendment should be accepted.

Mr. GAY. I will do that with great pleasure.

Mr. Chairman, the work done by the mint at New Orleans is as important in proportion to the expenditure made there, and as regular, as that at any other mint in the United States.

The force there is not large in proportion to the work. I was glad to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania read a statement from the Director of the Mint showing that New Orleans ranks next to Philadelphia in reference to economy of coinage, the rate of expense at New Orleans in 1884 and 1885 being 1.55 and 1.49 as against 7.28 and 9.13 at Carson City for the same years. Now, New Orleans is the wrong place at which to make a diminution in the force employed in the operation of the mint, for the reason that the summers there are excessively warm and the city is liable to sickness, so that if you remove the assistant cashier, as is proposed to be done in this bill, there will be no one left, in the event of the sickness or absence of the cashier, to take his place. This office of assistant cashier is a necessary office. The salary is only $1,100. I received only this morning a letter from the superintendent of the mint at that city, who knows better than any other man the necessities of the case. He writes:

I inclose a special from Washington which I clipped from this morning's Picayune. What does it mean? I don't understand it. Far from diminishing either the clerical or manual force of this mint, I think both ought to be increased. This mint is now being worked to its full capacity. With the end of June I will have coined since January 1, 1886, $5,400,000, which, allowing about twenty days for repairs and overhauling, is at the rate of $10,000,000 a year.

It will thus be seen that the superintendent of that mint, who is a most competent judge as to the needs of the mint, protests against dispensing with this officer, whose services he considers absolutely necessary. I would have been glad if the Committee on Appropriations had accepted this amendment——

Mr. RANDALL. I had no power to accept the amendment. I really do not know the reasons which prompted this omission from the estimates. The committee followed the estimates. I can only say in respect to the statement of the gentleman from Louisiana that if we once get away from the estimates we may enter upon the creation of a large number of officers whose services the Government does not require.

Mr. GAY. This is not the creation of a new office, but simply the continuance of one already in existence and which is really necessary.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a vote.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to state that in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bills for a number of years past an allowance of $1,100 has been made for the cashier's clerk at the New Orleans mint, and I see no reason why that office should be dispensed with this year.

Mr. RANDALL. I have stated the reason; it is omitted from the estimate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. There is no reason why it should have been omitted from the estimate.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. GAY was agreed to.

Mr. GAY. I offer a further amendment, to strike out, in lines 1260 and 1261, the words "sixteen hundred dollars each" and insert "eighteen hundred dollars each;" so as to appropriate $1,800 as the salary of the abstract clerk and the book-keeper.

Mr. RANDALL. I shall have to make a point of order on that amendment. In the law for the current year the salary is $1,600.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman refer to that law?

Mr. GAY. I would like to make an explanation for one moment if the gentleman will withhold the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly, I will do so till the gentleman has made his explanation.

Mr. GAY. As the gentleman pays great deference to the estimates I desire to read to him from the estimate made by the Director of the Mint:

An addition of $200 to the salary of the book-keeper and abstract clerk is recommended in consideration of the duties and responsibilities of that office.

The Director of the Mint makes that recommendation; and although the Committee on Appropriations has not adopted it, I ask the House to adopt it.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, the law for the current year contains this provision:

Weigh clerk, abstract clerk, book-keeper, and assayer's computation clerk, at $1,600 each.

Now, this amendment, as I understand, proposes to increase the salary to $1,800.

Mr. GAY. And it is embraced in the estimates.

Mr. RANDALL. I send to the Chair the provision of law to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania inform the Chair whether there is any other law fixing this salary than this provision from the appropriation bill?

Mr. RANDALL. I know of no law except the appropriation act. It is fixed by the act of March 3, 1885.

Mr. GAY. This is an appropriation act?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAY. The Director of the Mint, in pursuance of an urgent request from the superintendent of the mint at New Orleans, recommends that the salaries of these two clerks be increased by the addition of the pitiful sum of $200 each. I ask the Committee on Appropriations to assent to this amendment, or, if not, I hope it will be sustained by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Assuming that the salary fixed in the law for the current year is that applicable by law to these offices, and there not appearing any contrary legislation, the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read the following:

Assay-office at New York: For salary of superintendent, $4,000; for assayer and for melter and refiner, at $3,000 each; chief clerk, assistant melter and refiner, and weighing clerk, at $2,500 each; book-keeper, $2,350; cashier, $2,000; warrant clerk, $2,250; bar clerk, abstract clerk, and assayer's computation clerk, at $1,800 each; assistant weigh clerk, $1,600; register of deposits, $1,250; assayer's first assistant, $2,250; assayer's second assistant, $2,150; assayer's third assistant, $2,000; in all, $38,750.

Mr. HEWITT. I move, in line 1282, after "thousand," to insert "five hundred;" so it will read "four thousand five hundred dollars."

Mr. RANDALL. I will submit that to a vote of the House. That is the law in the last appropriation bill. The committee considered it should be reduced.

Mr. HEWITT. If the gentleman states the committee considered it should be reduced, I ask to be heard on that question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. They would not have made the recommendation if they had not so believed.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to hearing the gentleman's statement. I wish, however, to get on with the bill.

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Chairman, $4,500 is the existing salary in the case of a man who has been for thirty years in the Government service. He has received his position by his merits. He is not a partisan. He is not turned out; and he will not be turned out. I take it the object is he shall continue to render his valuable service on the same terms as heretofore. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For wages of workmen, $25,000.
For incidental and contingent expenses $10,000.

Mr. GLOVER. I wish to make an amendment to be inserted at the end of line 1299.

Mr. JAMES. I wish to move an amendment to the text of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York is first in order, and his amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word dollars, in line 1299, the following:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for parting or refining for private individuals or firms."

Mr. RANDALL. That amendment is subject to a point of order.

Mr. JAMES. I think not.

Mr. RANDALL. I will withhold the point of order to hear what the gentleman has to say.

Mr. JAMES. It does not change existing law. It simply says that this money shall not be used for parting and refining. They can carry on this work without using this money. I should like very much to stop this work of parting and refining at the Government mints and assay offices for private individuals, but in order to do that it is necessary to repeal the law. My amendment provides simply that none of this money shall be used for that purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. That is a change of existing law, as I will show.

Parting and refining is authorized by section 3524, as amended in Supplement to Revised Statutes, page 598, chapter 95, and the charges therefor are authorized to be used to defray the expenses. (Supplement to Revised Statutes, page 379, paragraph 8.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules the amendment out.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, I move the following amendment, to come in after line 1299.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assay office, Saint Louis, Mo.: For assayer in charge, $2,500; one clerk, $1,000; in all, $3,500.
For incidental and contingent expenses, including labor, $3,000.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time an attempt has been made to abrogate the assay office in the city of Saint Louis by the expedient of dropping it from the appropriation bill. I can not but conceive that the effort now made has something to do with the differences concerning the further coinage of silver which have been considered in this House at the present session. Gentlemen may differ from me in that opinion, but my view will be more plausible when there is made a comparison of statistics between the work done in this office and that done in the other four assay offices for which provision is made in this bill.

It would seem as though the proposition to strike off the last addition to the force of assay offices was meant to prevent the expansion of the machinery giving facilities for the further coinage of silver, as the selection of this office for elimination can hardly be explained upon any other view. It appears that although this is the youngest institution of the kind now in existence, its progress has been more rapid, it has done more business in proportion to the time it has been established, than any other of the assay offices, all things being considered. It was opened January 3, 1883, and has therefore been in existence only five years. Like a new business house, it is necessary such an establishment should become widely known before it is widely patronized, but its progress for the first two or three years has been as rapid as that of any other, and after that its business has been constantly and rapidly increased every year.

I will read to the House the statistics showing the business transacted for the four years beginning in 1882, and pointing out the increase in the business at this office.

In 1882 the receipts were $15,392.45; in 1883, $46,170.06; in 1884, $80,801.61, and in 1885, $120,680.88.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the amount covered by the amendment?

Mr. GLOVER. It is the reproduction of the last appropriation.

By receipts, Mr. Chairman, I mean the amount of bullion deposited and purchased for coinage on Government account, and I hold in my hand a letter from the assayer of this office informing me that the receipts of this office this year will amount to $160,000.

Now, I hear my friend from Ohio on the left, General WARNER, insinuate that these statistics are not imposing in themselves, and that the business of the assay office must necessarily be transacted at a loss. I am perfectly willing to deal with that phase of the question, and will proceed to do so by comparing the business of the Saint Louis assay office, which is stricken from the bill, with the business of the Boisé City office and that at Charlotte, N. C., both of which are retained in the bill. The assay office at Boisé City, Idaho, still in existence, had been open for seven years before it received in one year as much bullion as this office will receive during the current calendar year; and the office at Charlotte, N. C., still open, received in the tenth year of its existence only $133,544.27, which is less than this office will receive in its fifth year, and this was, moreover, the largest annual amount which that office had received up to that time.

It may be supposed that because this assay office is located in the Mississippi Valley, afar from the mines which exist in the West, that therefore a discrimination should be made against its continuance; but a direct comparison of the receipts as between the New York office and the San Francisco office show that this is no safe rule by which to govern the Appropriations Committee in its dealings with this question.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. REAGAN was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. GLOVER.

Mr. GLOVER. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Texas.

On this question of proximity to the mines, Mr. Chairman, it may be well to institute a comparison between the New York and Philadelphia offices and the San Francisco office. The usefulness of the assay office and the amount of its receipts depends as much on its proximity to the centers of trade, where the supplies are procured and the offices of the mining companies are located, as on its proximity to the mines themselves. In proof of this fact we find that the New York assay office received during the last fiscal year over $35,000,000 in gold bullion, or $10,000,000 more than the mint at San Francisco, which comes next in the list, and it received more gold of native production, that is, direct from the mines, than the Philadelphia mint and all of the other mints in the whole country combined, with the exception of the mint at San Francisco.

Now, I understood the gentleman from Ohio, General WARNER, to say that this office was not self-supporting, or to say something that would lead to that inference. I reply that none of the assay offices are self-supporting in the sense that the gentleman from Ohio means; and that this office is as much a self-supporting office as two or three of those whose existence is continued in this bill. That fact I will establish by a comparison of figures.

The assay office at Helena, Mont., expended $29,639.81 in the last fiscal year, and earned $4,704.30, or 15.87 per cent. of its expenses. The mint at Denver earned 17.59 per cent. of its expenses. This office at Saint Louis expended $6,509.09, and earned $783.65, or 12.05 of its expenses. The sum of $1,035.86, included in the expenditures, was spent for fitting up new rooms for a laboratory, an expense which will occur but once; and, it may be added, if this appropriation is discontinued it would be a direct loss to the Government of that expenditure. But the actual running expenses were therefore only $5,464.23, and the receipts were consequently 14.34 per cent. of the expenses. This is a larger average than that of two, or probably three, of the offices continued by this bill at the same period of their existence, and is within 3 per cent. of the record of the old and long-established Denver mint, in the heart of the mining country.

In fact, sir, one is almost led to expect that the prosperity of this young office and its prospects for the future are the inciting causes of the attack upon it.

Now, gentlemen, a word further and I am done. As my colleague from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] said the proposition is not what the expense is as compared with that of the other offices or the receipts as compared with the disbursement, but the indirect—I will not say the indirect but the direct—gain to the United States Government by having the office in existence; and I will cite to you a pertinent fact to establish the proposition that within one year the saving to the Government has been some $40,000. This was the fact as I understand it to which the gentleman from Missouri alluded when he arose. At the time it was proposed to abolish the office in 1884, Mr. Burchard, the Director of the Mint, stated that the existence of this office at Saint Louis enabled him to save about one-half of 1 per cent. on bullion purchased for coinage at the New Orleans mint, as by threatening to open the bullion market——

Mr. RANDALL addressed the Chair.

Mr. GLOVER. I should like permission to say one word more.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. GLOVER. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, by threatening to open a bullion market for silver at Saint Louis, where the works at Cheltenham belonging to the Saint Louis Smelting and Refining Company and the Kansas City Smelting and Refining Company, two of the largest refineries in the country, could deliver silver cheaper than in New York, he had virtually compelled the New York silver dealers to deliver silver to New Orleans at the same price as to Philadelphia, whereas the Government had been obliged before this office was opened to pay the transportation charges. Were it to be closed now no doubt it would have to pay them again.

Now, according to the report of the Director of the Mint for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, page 91, there was purchased for coinage for New Orleans, at the New Orleans mint, during that year, silver bullion to the amount of $8,549,171.95. One-half of 1 per cent. on this sum would be $42,745.85, or about eight times the total cost of running this office for the present fiscal year. It is clear in view of these figures the Government saved from $35,000 to $40,000 a year by keeping this office open.

Mr. RANDALL. I presume this omission was made because the subcommittee in the first instance, and the general committee subsequently, did not think this appropriation was necessary. But I would like to hear the exact reading of the amendment, so that I may understand the extent of what is proposed.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

After line 1299 insert the following:

"Assay office at Saint Louis, Mo.: For assayer in charge, $2,500; one clerk, $1,000; in all, $3,500. For incidental and contingent expenses, including labor, $4,800."

Mr. RANDALL. That is in excess of the estimate, and in excess of the amount appropriated last year. If the gentleman insists on $4,800 for that purpose, I must ask the committee to vote down the amendment. If, however, the gentleman will modify it by inserting in place of $4,800 the sum of $3,000, which is the amount of the estimate, I am willing to submit it to the vote of the committee without comment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Before this is done, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that assay offices, other than at Saint Louis, are located in Idaho, in Montana, in North Carolina, and in New York. This is the only one in the Mississippi Valley, and its removal will leave a gap of some thousand miles without such an office for the convenience of the people. I called on the Director of the Mint, and was assured by him he did not make this recommendation. He stated that he furnished the estimates for the continuance of the office, and that the suggestion came entirely from the subcommittee having this in charge.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to say as to this assay office, and all the others, unless it be the one at New York, that I am satisfied they should all be abolished, especially the one in North Carolina and the one at Saint Louis.

Mr. COX. Why does the gentleman object to the office at Charlotte?

Mr. CANNON. Allow me to proceed. There is some excuse for the office at Boisé City and the one farther west.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Why does the gentleman except one at Boisé City, where there are the largest expenses and the smallest receipts, and which is within 200 miles of the assay office at Helena, Mont.?

Mr. CANNON. I say there is some little excuse for the one at Boisé City and the other in Montana; not much, however. It is in a mining district and is convenient for the producers of bullion.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Will the gentleman pardon me one moment? The only office that the people of New Mexico and Southern Colorado can reach is the one at Saint Louis.

Mr. CANNON. That office is purely a convenience for the citizens of Saint Louis. It comes in competition with private assay offices and ought never to have been established. There ought never to have been any assay offices established anywhere, unless it be at New York, and I doubt the propriety even of that.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The gentleman is quite mistaken.

Mr. CANNON. There may be some little excuse for the assay offices in the mining regions, but their principal use is to furnish salaries to the people who run them.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It appears from the statement which has been made that it takes some $8,000 to do a little over $100,000 worth of work. That is, it costs 6 or 7 per cent. to do the work of this office. The sooner such offices are discontinued the better.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It only takes $5,000 to do the work, and the receipts are $120,000.

Mr. BLAND. I remember when the bill was pending for the establishment of this office before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures I reported the bill and it passed the House. The then Director of the Mint, Mr. Burchard, claimed the bullion dealers in New York were imposing on the Department by requiring it to pay the transportation of bullion from New York to New Orleans. To prevent this, and to enable them to get bullion as cheap at New Orleans as at Philadelphia, Mr. Burchard proposed to have an assay office at Saint Louis; and with that understanding the House passed a bill to establish that office, and since its establishment bullion dealers at New York have furnished it to New Orleans the same as at Philadelphia. Now, do away with this office, and you simply place this Government under the control to that extent of the bullion dealers of New York; you let them get the advantage of the Government to one-half of 1 per cent. on all these transactions. I do not think that the continuance of this assay office ought to excite the prejudices of any one.

The amendment proposed by Mr. GLOVER, as modified by striking out $4,800 and inserting $3,000, was agreed to.

The Clerk commenced to read the next paragraph.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment in line 1271.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that paragraph has been passed.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, I was on the floor and endeavoring to get recognition when the Clerk was reading the paragraph in regard to the mint at Denver, but he passed on quickly to the one in relation to the New York assay office, and when that paragraph was reached the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] was recognized. I tried to get the floor, as gentlemen around me will bear witness, but immediately after the New York paragraph was passed the gentleman from Saint Louis [Mr. GLOVER] was recognized. I was constantly endeavoring to get the floor, but the eyes of the Chair were on the Democratic side, and I did not succeed in attracting his notice. It may be owing to the mildness of my voice that I have been overlooked. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I will vouch for the fact that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES] was on his feet and endeavoring to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think it necessary to attempt to vindicate itself. The Chair has been endeavoring to act fairly and equitably. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] makes the point of order that this paragraph has been passed, and the Chair must sustain the rule.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we might go back by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Colorado certainly was trying to get the floor.

Mr. SYMES. I was trying to get the floor, but when the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] was recognized I did not want to go on shouting. I ask unanimous consent to return to the paragraph in relation to the mint at Denver.

Mr. RANDALL. The only trouble about it is that if I go back for one I will have to do it for all.

Mr. SYMES. Well, if you want to establish the precedent that we have got to stand down here in front of the desk and yell, I will take my chances of drowning the voices of other gentlemen. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled upon the point of order.

Mr. SYMES. Well, Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent to go back to line 1271.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado to return to line 1271 of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. SYMES. I move to amend so as to increase the salary of the superintendent of the Denver mint from $2,250 to $2,500. Mr. Chairman, I am only asking that this salary shall be continued at the same rate at which it has stood ever since the mint was established. I find upon examination that since the establishment of the mint the salary has been $2,500, and I find that this bill cuts it down to $2,250. I apprehend that there is no reason for that reduction. I have only to add, sir, that I hope I am not so narrow-minded as not to desire that the superintendent of that mint, now that he is a Democrat, shall have the same salary that his Republican predecessors have had, and I do know that no gentleman who is fit to occupy that position can live respectably in the city of Denver on less than $2,500.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, although the heading of this paragraph is "Mint at Denver," it is really an assay office, and this is the same salary that is allowed in the office at Helena, Mont. I hope the increase will not be made.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 55, noes 49.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Territory of Alaska: For salary of governor, $2,600; judge, $2,500; attorney, marshal, and clerk, $2,500 each; four commissioners, $1,000 each; four deputy marshals, $750 each; in all, $19,600.

For incidental and contingent expenses of the Territory, stationery, lights, and fuel, to be expended under the direction of the governor, $2,000.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting, after line 1331, this provision:

For the education of children of school age in Alaska, without reference to race, $25,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. RANDALL. In the absence of a reference to the law authorizing this amendment I must make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan claim that there is authority of law for this amendment?

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Chairman, we have a Territory in the Northwest——

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will pardon me, but I want to have a decision on the point of order.

Mr. TARSNEY. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend in line 1324 by striking out "twenty-six hundred dollars" and inserting "three thousand dollars;" also in lines 1325 and 1326, by striking out "twenty-five hundred dollars" and inserting "three thousand dollars." My reason for offering these amendments can be stated in very few words. The organic law establishing the Territory of Alaska fixes the salary of the governor and the salary of the judge of the United States court at $3,000 each. Within the last few years two gentlemen have been appointed to those positions respectively, and have gone out a distance of nearly 5,000 miles to enter upon the performance of their duties with the understanding and expectation that their salaries should be as fixed by law. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that there is no gentleman on this floor who wishes a judge of a United States court to have his salary reduced to $2,500, and I trust there is no gentleman here who desires that the governor of a great Territory shall have his salary reduced to $2,600. Surely such reductions would not be creditable to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. There would still be a balance due them under the law.

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir. They would have a valid claim, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, for the difference between the amount at which their salary is fixed by the law and the amount appropriated; so that in any case we would make nothing by the reduction.

Mr. RANDALL. The salary under existing law is, I find, $3,000, but the governors of the other Territories are paid $2,600 a year, and I do not like to see the House make an exception in the case of Alaska. I do not think the duties of the governor of Alaska and the judge are so important as to justify any increase of their salaries beyond the amounts paid in the other Territories. Indeed, I think they earn their salaries more by staying out there at all than by any duties they have to perform; but I am willing to submit the question to a vote.

Mr. BURNES. Does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania know that these two officers will have valid claims against the Government for the difference between their salaries as fixed by law and the amounts appropriated here?

Mr. RANDALL. I think they will not, when this bill becomes a law.

Mr. BURNES. The gentleman will find in the Statutes at Large the act establishing a Territorial government in Alaska, a separate independent act, which fixes these salaries at $3,000 each. Now I submit that under the law we are bound to pay these officers that amount.

Mr. RANDALL. I think that before this bill becomes a law some way will be found to prevent any person provided for in it from having any claim against the Government for any sum beyond that which is appropriated in the bill.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the salary fixed for these officers in Alaska is higher than the salary for like officers in the other Territories of the United States, but it must be borne in mind that the expenses of traveling to and from Alaska and the cost of living there are much greater. I know very well, Mr. Chairman, that nearly every proposition that has been made concerning this appropriation bill has been in favor of increasing expenditures. I am sorry that the whole session has passed away without our having had an opportunity to consider any proposition at all to reduce taxes. We have been informed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, that on Thursday next he will endeavor to bring up a proposition to reduce taxes and to economize in the administration of the Government. At that time I hope to see my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], who has such a well-earned reputation for economy, vote to consider that bill. I propose to vote in that way, without committing myself to vote for the passage of the bill in its present shape. While I am willing to vote to consider any bill reported to this House by any of its standing committees I do not thereby bind myself to vote for every proposition in it. I want that bill considered because I desire the opportunity to offer an amendment to strike out that clause which puts wool on the free-list. I will not vote for that provision; but there are a hundred good things in the bill for each of which I will vote; and I want the support of my economic friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in voting to consider that bill next Thursday.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. When does my friend expect to get an opportunity to offer that sort of an amendment or secure a vote on it? Not this session.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman does not know what is going to happen this session. If we take up and consider that bill as it ought to be considered in a deliberative assembly like this I take it for granted we shall have the opportunity during the consideration of the measure to vote on the proposition I have indicated.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have had the means within the last few weeks of learning a good deal about Alaska Territory, and my information is that immigration is pouring into the Territory all the time; that the Government has valuable property and vast interests to be protected there. I hope the House will adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri and let these salaries stay just where the law fixes them.

Mr. MCADOO. I move a pro forma amendment. I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman who now occupies the position of governor of Alaska is a very estimable person; and I believe, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HILL] has stated, that the Territory will in the future become very important, and immigration will undoubtedly be attracted there, particularly on the part of those who like cool summers. [Laughter.] But I wish to say that if this House is to raise the salary of the governor of Alaska, then I can not see how in justice to the gentleman occupying the position of governor of Arizona we can refuse to raise his salary.

Mr. HILL. I can tell the gentleman. The law fixes different salaries for the two offices. You can not raise the salary of the governor of Arizona Territory without subjecting your amendment to a point of order; but you can raise this salary.

Mr. MCADOO. I see the gentleman's point. But I say it would be an injustice to raise the salary of the governor of the Territory of Alaska and not to raise that of the governors of Arizona and Utah. Here are two men, each of whom is confronted with a great problem. In the Territory of Arizona the problem is the Apache trouble. In the Territory of Utah, the governorship of which, in my opinion, is an office next in importance to those occupied by the heads of Departments here in Washington, the governor is confronted with the Mormon trouble. To say that a gentleman of his ability (for a man must have considerable ability to occupy such a position) shall receive only the same salary as the officer who presides over the sparsely settled Territory of Alaska would be a glaring abuse of power on the part of Congress.

I believe that the salaries now established by law for the governorships of these two Territories are inadequate. These two governors ought to be men of first-class executive ability; in fact, they ought to be statesmen, men who would shine in any department of life; and that they should be sent to these important positions and expected to rule those two growing Territories, with the internal troubles every day arising there, for the beggarly pittance of $2,600, is something which ought to be remedied by legislation.

I therefore sincerely hope that the salary of the governor of Alaska will not be raised, because I believe that, taken in comparison with the salaries paid to the governors of the two important Territories I have named, it is adequate.

Mr. RANDALL. The law fixes the salary of all the Territorial governors except that of Alaska at $3,500; yet this bill provides in those cases for the payment of only $2,600. Hence, to raise the salary of the governor of Alaska from $2,600 to $3,000 would, it occurs to me, be unjust in regard to all these other officers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt it must strike the mind of every man that there ought to be an equality in the salaries of the governors of our Territories; but in view of the fact that the only clause in the bill which would lawfully limit the salaries of these governors to the amount proposed by the Committee on Appropriations has been struck out, and as it is apparent that we have not the power to economize by a reduction of these salaries, and in view also of the fact that the House seems to be in favor of voting the very highest salaries the law will permit——

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know that, until a vote has been had in the House by yeas and nays.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am satisfied from the votes already taken in Committee of the Whole that the disposition here is to give the highest salaries allowed by law; and the Committee on Appropriations is deprived of all opportunity to reduce expenditures by the reduction of salaries. Judging from what has transpired in the past, I have no doubt that when the vote shall be taken the House will put up this salary; and it seems to me, therefore, a waste of time to contend for any reduction in these matters.

I am satisfied, as is the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that these salaries ought all to be upon the same level, that there ought to be uniformity in the compensation of these officers; but from what has already occurred I anticipate what will happen in this case, and it seems scarcely worth while to spend time in resisting these propositions to enlarge official salaries.

Mr. RANDALL. The existing law, as I have said, fixes $3,500 as the salary of the governor in all these Territories except Alaska, as to which the salary is fixed by law at $3,000; but the proposition is now to allow the governor of Alaska $3,000 and appropriate for all the other Territorial governors $2,600 each. I hope the proposition will be voted down.

The question was taken; and Mr. BURNES'S amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Territory of Dakota: For salary of governor, $2,600; chief-justice and five associate judges, at $3,000 each; and secretary, at $1,800; $22,400.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out, in line 1349, "two thousand six hundred dollars," and in lieu thereof to insert "thirty-five hundred dollars;" so it will read:

Territory of Dakota: For salary of governor, $3,500.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the law provides that the governor of Dakota Territory shall receive a salary of $3,500 a year. This appropriation bill recommends $2,600, which is a reduction of $900 under the law. I think I need only state the proposition. This is Dakota Territory, and its governor, under the law, is entitled to $3,500 a year; why, therefore, should this appropriation bill provide only $2,600 in part payment of that salary, thereby sending to the Court of Claims this governor to recover the balance of $900 still due him under the law?

Mr. RANDALL. Let me ask the gentleman how long it has been since this salary has been reduced to $2,600?

Mr. CANNON. A good many years ago, no doubt.

Mr. RANDALL. It was ten years ago.

Mr. CANNON. Very well, then; say that it was ten years ago.

Mr. RANDALL. The governor of Dakota has been holding office at that salary for a good while. No removal has been made that I have heard of.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is not quite frank in his statement, for this salary has been reduced every year for nine or ten years by legislation. This year you have not attempted general legislation; you omit the legislation this time. The particular equity in this case is in the fact that here is the Territory of Dakota, the governor of which is entitled by law to receive a salary of $3,500 a year, and it is reduced in this appropriation bill to $2,600. This great Territory of Dakota has a population of 400,000 inhabitants. It is a Territory sufficiently large to make four States like that of Ohio. It is kept out of the Union, however, by main force, because the gentlemen on the other side of the House fear if they should admit it into the Union two or three Representatives on this floor and two Senators in the other branch of Congress would be added to the number already politically against them.

Now, until justice is done to the Territory of Dakota I think your former constituents, Mr. Chairman, and my former constituents, and the former constituents of other gentlemen upon this floor, should have the very best possible government they can get. I wish therefore in this bill to provide that their governor shall receive the salary which he is justly entitled to under the law. I think $3,500 a year is not too much. I do not propose to make the amendment in reference to the other Territories, although they are all entitled to $3,500, but perhaps $2,600 is enough in those cases.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does it not cost as much to live in the other Territories as it does in Dakota?

Mr. RANDALL. This salary was fixed in 1878 at $2,600, and my recollection is that it has been at that figure ever since. I do not see any particular necessity for raising it to $3,500 a year at the present time.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, these salaries are provided in this bill at just what they have been for eight or ten years. I insist, therefore, we are representing the sentiment which sent us here when we undertake to provide for these salaries no higher sum than heretofore has been allowed. I can speak unhesitatingly for myself on that question, because a number of these salaries, if not all of them, will be drawn by men of the party to which I belong.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, salaries were increased to such a degree as would make even the prodigal son ashamed. The people believing what was said in regard to that matter sent those here who reduced these salaries to a proper figure. Now, they have remained at that figure ever since, and I object to their being increased unnecessarily in this bill. In the Forty-seventh Congress when the House became Republican the gentleman from Illinois was here on the other side of the House, and he was a member of the Committee on Appropriations when the same doctrine was adhered to concerning these salaries which characterized the administration of the Democratic majority.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having been sent here upon the ground we should practice retrenchment and reform in the administration of this Government, I do insist under the circumstances it is not a fair thing for us to increase these salaries beyond the figure at which they have been fixed for at least the past eight or ten years. There are patriotic and able men all over the country who are willing to accept these positions at the salary fixed in this bill without any unseemly scramble for them. I do not say it is ignoble or improper because of the aspirations of an American citizen to hold a public office. It is his right, and I do not make any remark, therefore, or any point upon any man who seeks to serve his country. But what I do insist upon is that we are not under any obligation because the men who are to hold these positions are of the same party to provide higher rate of pay for them. It is our duty to adhere to this report coming from this committee, which feels there should be no increase, and in case an increase is determined upon the RECORD shall show exactly who it is that favors such increase of salaries.

I say let the salaries stay just where they are now. The country has approved of the reduction which was made years ago, and there is no principle of justice which demands us now to turn our backs upon that principle. It has been accepted in good faith and is satisfactory; and I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not think the proposition of my friend from Tennessee, that there are plenty of men seeking office, is any argument whatever against the amendment. It may be said that there are plenty of men in this country who would be glad to take the office of President of the United States without any salary whatever simply for the sake of the honor it confers. The same may be said of other offices. I do not know but that some of our fellow-citizens might be glad of an opportunity to occupy the positions that we fill without any salary whatever.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I am not urging that. I made no such argument.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But the fact is, if that rule be adopted, that no man can hold office in this country unless he be rich enough to give up his private business and live upon his own resources.

But the real point is, why should not this man have the salary fixed by law? If the salaries are too high, why do you not bring in a general bill and reduce them in a regular way? I do not believe in this indirect way of accomplishing legislative results. If you give any of these officers any part of the salary fixed by law, withholding the remainder, they undoubtedly have a case which they can take to the Court of Claims and require the Government to pay the remainder. They can go to this court and make far larger costs against the Government, which it must appropriate to pay for, than the mere payment of the salary involves. You will have to pay both the costs and the salaries. I do not know what the salary ought to be. I am not discussing that question. It does not enter into the consideration of this question at all; but since these salaries are fixed by law, then in obedience to the law we must pay them. The man who accepts that office accepts it with the knowledge that the law fixes a certain salary for it, and he has a right to expect that salary to be paid to him.

Mr. RANDALL. There is not an applicant for this office who does not know that this salary has been reduced to $2,600, and that it has been standing at that figure for years past.

Mr. MILLIKEN. That does not change the question. The law gives a certain amount of salary, and it is the duty of the Appropriations Committee to comply with the law. You have no right to change it in this manner.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, since the committee has determined to cut down the salary of the governor of Alaska I have no desire to increase the salary of any of the other Territorial governors, because I believe the governor of Alaska ought to receive a larger salary than any of the rest. I think in the present instance the salary of the governor of Dakota is large enough.

But I wish to say a word to my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] in response to his remarks complaining that Dakota had been kept out of the Union. I want to ask him why it was that his party in the Forty-seventh Congress, when they had a majority in both Houses, did not then admit Dakota as a State?

Why did the Senate of the United States in the Forty-eighth Congress vote down a proposition to admit Dakota into the Union? And further let me say to the gentleman that Dakota has never asked to be admitted into the Union as a State. There is no proposition on the part of the people of that Territory for admission. There is no memorial from her Legislature to come in. It is true that a part of her people held a mass meeting in the southern part of the Territory and got up what they called a constitution and adopted it, but that was done without consultation with anybody else.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I must raise the point of order, and object to the gentleman discussing this question on an appropriation bill. There has been a hit now on each side, and that is enough. The discussion of the admission of Dakota is not in order under this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 28, noes 51.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Territory of Montana: For salary of governor, $2,600; chief-justice and two associate judges, at $3,000 each; and secretary, at $1,800, $13,400.

For legislative expenses, namely: For per diem of members and officers of the Legislature, mileage, and for printing bills, laws, and journals, $17,724.80; rent of secretary's office, legislative halls, and committee-rooms, and storage-room for Government property, fitting up halls, removing furniture, clerk, porter, and messenger for secretary's office, postage, stationery, official printing, fuel and lights, stoves, carpets, furniture and repairs on furniture, and telegraphing, $4,275.20; in all, $22,000.

For contingent expenses of the Territory, to be expended by the governor, $500.

Mr. TOOLE. I move the adoption of the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding to line 1405—

"Provided, That the sum of $900 of said amount is hereby specifically appropriated for the salary of clerk in the secretary's office."

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve all points of order on that amendment until the gentleman from Montana makes an explanation of it.

Mr. TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not increase or decrease the amount appropriated by the bill. It simply provides that the sum of $900 of the gross amount appropriated shall be specifically set apart for the payment of the salary of the clerk in the secretary's office. In the first place, the clerk mentioned in the amendment is provided for in the bill, and the sum of $900 was the estimate made by the Department and furnished to the Committee on Appropriations for his compensation. I offer the amendment for the reason that I know personally within the last fiscal year the sum of $600 was required to be paid by the secretary himself as part of the salary of the clerk, being a deficiency to that extent; and the appropriation as now reported by the committee is $845 less than the estimates of the Department. So that it will be seen that this does not increase or decrease in any way the amount recommended, but simply specifically appropriates a sum for this payment.

Mr. RANDALL. On an examination of the estimates I find that provision has been made for this clerk; and I will not insist upon this point of order.

The amendment of Mr. TOOLE was agreed to.

The Clerk read to line 1433, under the heading "Territory of Utah."

Mr. RANDALL. Now I ask the Clerk to read the paragraph on page 62 relating to the office of Inspector-General.

The paragraph was read.

Mr. RANDALL. Some member objected to that paragraph and it was passed over, but no amendment was offered. I ask the Clerk now to read, on page 69, the paragraph relating to public buildings and grounds. I think no further objection was made as far as page 68.

The Clerk read the paragraph on page 69 relating to public buildings and grounds.

Mr. PRICE. Do I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that no objection was made as far as page 69?

Mr. RANDALL. I said page 68.

Mr. PRICE. The clause on page 68, from line 1657 to line 1668, appropriating for rent of buildings for use of the War Department was objected to by myself.

Mr. RANDALL. It is sufficient for the gentleman to say so. I do not have it so marked.

Mr. PRICE. I only made the objection with the view of calling the attention of the House to the fact that so large a portion of the sum appropriated by this bill is for rents.

I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of enabling me to say that there is in this bill $105,520 for rents. Nor is this all. There is, perhaps, an equal amount where the appropriation is partly for rent and partly for other things, and the exact amount for rent can not be ascertained. I can not learn it from the bill.

I claim, Mr. Chairman, that the committee should not be asked to appropriate $200,000 for rent. I know positively of $105,120; and I know there must be about as much more, but I can not learn the precise sums from the bill. It seems to me there is a useless expenditure of public moneys for rent, which ought to be avoided by some means—I do not know how.

In this connection I may say that all over the country we adopt the policy, where we have any public business to do, of appropriating money with which to erect public buildings for the use and benefit of the Government. Why that policy is not pursued at the capital of the nation I can not tell. Here a great deal of money is expended uselessly in my opinion in that way.

I may say also, a great deal of money is expended, in my opinion—I do not expect to change the bill, but I call attention to it—in buildings that are absolutely worthless for the purposes intended. I think we might by judicious management avoid the expenditure of so large a sum if we were to address ourselves to ascertaining how we might obtain these buildings at less cost than is provided for in this bill.

I do not think it is necessary for me to say anything more on this subject. I give it as my opinion that we are spending $150,000 or $175,000 for rents when we should not be expending any such amount. If the committee had done its duty a better plan might have been submitted, whereby money might be saved and the service of the Government be equally well performed.

I withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I renew the formal amendment and yield the floor to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CABELL.]

Mr. CABELL. The Committee on Appropriations sent out a subcommittee to look into this matter of renting houses and if possible to have the rents reduced. The Committee on Appropriations did its duty in this respect. As much time as it was possible to give to the question was given to it. If the gentleman will examine the bill of last year as well as the bill of this year he will see that reductions were made in two or three instances. Wherever we could make reductions we did make them, and we were just as anxious to make those reductions of rent as the gentleman from Wisconsin could possibly be. If he knows any means or method whereby we can reduce these rents from the present rate and will give us the information it will be a matter of great satisfaction to the committee and we will vote with him, I am satisfied, most cheerfully. We did our best and were anxious to do more.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is it not expected that on the completion of the new War Department these offices will be transferred to that building so that there will be a saving to that extent?

Mr. CABELL. Yes, sir; and it was for that reason we could not in some instances get the rents reduced, because it was understood by the people having houses to rent that that would be the case; that some of these offices would be removed. Consequently they would not make any reduction upon the rents of the buildings which they are now renting to the Government. They did not want to take any such risk. They regarded the Government's tenure as very uncertain, and were not anxious to rent to it at present rates.

Mr. PRICE. As gentlemen on the committee seem to desire some suggestion to aid them in the line of economical expenditure of the public moneys, let me make one suggestion to them. We have got between this Capitol and the river lands enough upon which to erect all the public buildings which we need. Money is worth to this Government about 3 per cent., and I venture the suggestion, though I do not absolutely know it, that we do not rent these public buildings for less than 16 to 18 per cent. of the cost of their construction. Now, if we took the land which we give to a railroad company—without, as I understand, getting anything at all for it—if we utilized that land and erected our own buildings upon it, would it not be better economy than this plan of renting buildings all over this city at a cost greatly in excess of the interest on the money for which these buildings could be erected?

Mr. CABELL. That may be very true, but that is a matter with which I had nothing to do and with which the committee had nothing to do.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Oh, we are putting up public buildings fast enough.

Mr. PRICE. But are you putting them in the right places?

Mr. CABELL. As for the rents we pay, they do not amount to so much as the interest upon the expenditures that would be required to erect suitable buildings. I may state, however, that in a short time removals will be made from some of these hired buildings into the new Pension Office and other buildings belonging to the Government.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Committee on Appropriations if they can give the House any information as to the percentage upon the value of the property hired that the Government is now paying in the shape of rent? My friend upon my left [Mr. WARNER, of Ohio] thinks that we are erecting public buildings enough.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have taken the position assumed by my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] that it would be much better for the Government to erect suitable buildings for its own purposes in this city with money at 3 per cent. than to pay from 12 to 17 per cent. upon the cost of the buildings we use, as I am informed we are paying now, in the shape of rent.

Mr. CABELL. That may be so, but I submit that that is a question that was not referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Our experience is that it costs more to keep our public buildings in repair than to construct them.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If gentlemen have any doubt as to the kind of buildings that we are hiring and paying rent for they had better go through the city post-office, a place which seems fitter for the habitation of rats than of clean Caucasians who like to occupy decent offices and to do business with reasonable convenience—a place, too, where the Government has not the slightest safety or protection for its papers and records.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the general scope of the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin; I believe we ought to gather these offices into our own buildings. The subcommitte on Appropriations sought to reduce the rents provided for in this paragraph. The Adjutant General's Office, for instance, and the Surgeon-General's Office are largely incidental to the Pension Office, and that source of expense will be reduced naturally as we get further away from the war. Now, in reference to this plan, the committee have provided in the sundry civil bill that the Indian Bureau, the Educational Bureau, the Land Office, the Labor Bureau, the pension agent of this District, and the Geological Survey shall go into the new Pension building; thus making an aggregate reduction of $37,100 in the rents now paid. It will be seen, therefore, that the policy of the committee is directly in the line indicated by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE].

The amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem in lieu of subsistence of inspectors and clerks detailed to investigate fraudulent land entries, trespasses on the public lands, and cases of official misconduct, while traveling on duty, at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding $2.50 per day, and for actual necessary expenses of transportation, $10,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to come in after the words "Secretary of the Interior," in line 1961.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1961, after the words "Secretary of the Interior," insert the following proviso:

"Provided, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall at once pass to patent, in due and ordinary course of law, without the obstruction of unauthorized boards, all homestead and pre-emption claims in the districts of agricultural lands upon which final proof has been made before the local land-offices, and against which no specific charge of fraud is proved or pending."

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment that it changes existing law.

Mr. LAIRD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There is no existing law. Your Land Commissioner is against the existing law; this amendment is not.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will give us the existing law.

Mr. RANDALL. There is not any existing law, as the gentleman from Nebraska admits; but this makes law, and therefore it is in violation of the rule

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For connected and separate United States and other maps prepared in the General Land Office, $10,000.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. Under the theory and guise of protecting the public domain from so-called "plunderers" the Commissioner of the General Land Office is running a vendetta against the best interests of all the territory beyond the Missouri River. By his order of April 3, 1885, he suspended the due operation of the land laws of the United States against half the continent.

Mr. RANDALL. This is not the place to correct anything that may be wrong in that respect, nor to discuss it.

Mr. LAIRD. Am I not in order, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, as the Chair understands, raises a question of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the gentleman shall confine himself to the proposition before the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LAIRD. Under the guise of the protection of the public domain this man Sparks is clouding the title and menacing the homes of the people in the country I represent.

Mr. RANDALL. Whenever that subject is appropriately before the House I will not throw the least obstruction in the way of debate by the gentleman from Nebraska or any other gentleman, but I must insist upon the rule being administered touching this bill because I desire to have it passed at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. LAIRD. Is not this bill subject to discucsion?

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, yes, as to any question really germane to the bill.

Mr. LAIRD. Is not this item subject to discussion? It proposes to make the Treasury of the United States pay the hire of a lot of political papsuckers who go around undermining the titles of honest settlers. I want to discuss this question.

Mr. RANDALL. I will join the gentleman in correcting any abuse which may exist in any proper way——

Mr. LAIRD. I thank the gentleman for his manly offer. If you will do that, will you allow me to proceed now?

Mr. RANDALL. No; I do not think I am warranted in allowing this matter to be discussed except——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska has moved a pro forma amendment, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania insists that the gentleman from Nebraska is not discussing the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on the discussion being germane to the bill.

Mr. LAIRD. I move to strike out the entire paragraph authorizing the employment of special agents. That is what I want to get at.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. LAIRD. In the moment allotted to me under the rules I desire to call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that Commissioner Sparks has in his brief career robbed or attempted to rob eighty-four thousand settlers, generally heads of families, representing a population of over 250,000 people, of their vested rights in and to 13,320,160 acres of land which they have taken from the public domain in compliance with the public-land laws of the United States.

Having accomplished this reform in less than one year, the Commissioner, backed and flanked by the band of hireling spies provided by this item, proposes to show the country what further he can do in the way of unsettling the land titles of half this continent, and driving the peaceful possessors of the soil supposed to be the common heritage of the people forth from their homes to the end that he may pose as a reformer, and drink the paid flattery of his gang of spotters, spies, and poisoners of the tenures of the settlers of the West.

Mr. Chairman, in the name of a constituency of brave and honest men, who are, however, slanderously denounced by the spies of this Department as land thieves—robbers of the earth—I protest against the great Government of the United States lending itself to an outrageous invasion of the property rights of the people as well as to an infamous libel upon their honor.

I trust that every man who stands upon this floor as the advocate and defender of the rights of the poor will vote with me to take from this man Sparks who, from either mistake or malice, seems bent upon the depopulation of the agricultural districts of the West, a power, namely, a band of secret and hired spies, which becomes in his hands a perpetual menace to the development of the agricultural lands across the Missouri, and particularly in the States of Nebraska and Kansas and the Territories named in his order of April 3, 1885.

Gentlemen ask how it is possible that such a gigantic outrage is possible. I will answer, but I can only state conclusions. He sends these agents into the field to find fraud. Mind you to find fraud. And they are advised that their reports are privileged. No claimant can see the report. It is sacred from the scrutiny of those whose rights are subverted by it. It is sacred to injustice and their master, the Commissioner. They have full license, and their opinion, founded upon stealth and sacred from inspection—their opinion, mark you—not their sworn and specific charge, but their loose and confidential opinion, derived from hearsay, becomes the ground of a general and sweeping order suspending the patents of eighty-four thousand settlers having under the statutes and the decisions of all the courts vested rights in over 13,000,000 acres of the public land, acquired by hardships which have tried the courage and endurance of the best and most honest of the entire population of the nation.

This is no declamation, Mr. Chairman, and I say out upon a policy which arms the Government against that class of its population which is its stay in war and its stability in peace; out upon a policy infamous in any country, but still more monstrous when applied to freemen in free America!

By the operation of the order issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office on the 3d of April, 1885, some eighty-four thousand homestead and pre-emption entries were suspended. Thereby the Commissioner impeached the testimony of something like two hundred thousand persons, the claimants themselves and their witnesses, backed up by the certificates of the appointed agents of the Government in the local land offices, who are called upon to pass upon the question of the sufficiency of this proof; and this was done upon the opinion, miscalled evidence, of from eighteen to twenty-seven special agents such as he proposes by this paragraph to turn loose upon a long-suffering community, already nearly persecuted to death.

The consequences of that upon the country west of the Missouri, in the States of Nebraska and Kansas and the Territories of Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Washington, &c., is that settlers there are practically driven from their homes. They are confronted by the fact that under the order of the Commissioner suspending the operation of the law they are unable to raise any money with which to provide themselves with bread during the time intervening from the date of settlement until their lands are in a condition to raise a crop.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Just at this point will the gentleman explain to the House the precise modus operandi by which a man acquires his right to a patent, and how he is injured by this delay?

Mr. LAIRD. I will do so. A person who is twenty-one years of age, a citizen of the United States, or has declared his intention to become such, or is the head of a family, moves onto a tract of land, subject to entry—that is not previously entered in good faith by another qualified person—and having settled thereon makes a homestead entry or pre-emption, filing literally an affidavit in which he sets out that he is of the required age, that he is a citizen or has declared his intention to become such, and that he has settled on and is then residing on the land described, and that he takes the same for a home. He must build a house on the claim and cultivate and make it his home, if a pre-emption, for at least six months; if a homestead, for five years, unless he was a soldier, in which case his service, not exceeding four years, may be deducted from the five years' required residence, unless he should desire to commute the entry, in which case he proceeds as in the case of a pre-emption claim before described. When he has done this and desires to "prove up," that is, take the title to himself, which, during the time of his settlement has remained in the Government, he gives notice for sixty days in some paper published and circulated in the county where the land is situated, stating that at a day named he will appear at the local land office with his witnesses, two in number, naming them, and make proof of his compliance with the law as to settlement on and improvement of the tract in question.

If he appears at the time mentioned and makes the proof required under oath and in writing, and the register and receiver of the local land office are satisfied with the sufficiency of the same, they receive from the claimant, in case it be a pre-emption claim or commuted homestead, $1.25 or $2.50 an acre for the land "proved up," or according as the land is within or not within the grant of a railroad, and thereupon issue to the claimant what is called a "final receipt," being the duplicate receipt of the register and receiver of the given land office, which recites that in consideration of his compliance with the law and the payment of the required fees and purchase-money the claimant is entitled to a patent to the tract described. In the case of an uncommuted homestead the claimant proves settlement and improvement as required by law and pays the land-office fees and takes his final receipt, which entitles him to patent.

These final receipts so acquired, and eighty-four thousand of which Commissioner Sparks has suspended and rendered inoperative, are held to be absolute title by all the supreme courts of all the States where land has been acquired from the General Government, and this decision of the State courts is affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and from this interpretation of the law no man on earth dissents except Sparks. Probably from five hundred thousand to a million people in the States of Kansas and Nebraska have no other or better title to-day.

As soon as a final receipt is issued for lands they become taxable and are taken and sold for State and municipal taxes. Millions of dollars of loans are held throughout the East on titles based on final receipts. This being the law it was always possible heretofore for a man to raise from $100 to $500 on a mortgage based on such a receipt. Now it is impossible to raise a penny, and that because of the order and general cussedness and uncertainty of Sparks.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having seen that there is no authority of law for the actions of the Commissioner, it becomes important to know what authority of fact he can furnish for his proceeding. Upon what authority of fact does the Commissioner arrest the due operation of the laws?

I hold in my hand a copy of his report and the testimony of eighty-four thousand claimants, backed up by two witnesses each, and the certificates of the officers of the Government who certify to the good character of those giving the testimony, which testimony is only given after sixty days' notice to all the world that the parties propose to offer it. And this entire mass of testimony is impeached upon the hearsay say-so of less than eighteen of those spies who go about the country to blackmail the title of honest settlers. I read from what one of these people says in his report.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NELSON obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD].

Mr. LAIRD. This man says:

In my opinion all the titles or 90 per cent. of the titles in the States of Kansas and Nebraska and the Territory of Dakota, &c., are fraudulent.

"In the opinion." Since when, Mr. Chairman, was a hired assassin of the titles of honest men entitled to give "opinions." Do we hold our rights subject to the discretion of a set of spies in the field and a demagogue in the position of the Commissioner of the General Land Office? Since when has not only the sworn testimony of over two hundred thousand persons and the certificates of the trusted officers of the Government but the presumptions of law that arise in behalf of the good faith of the proceedings of public officers been impeached by the "opinion" of a set of spies based on what they hear from persons unknown or what they see while traversing the country, forming their "opinion" of fraud from the window of a palace-car?

What right have such men to charge that in their opinion 90 per cent. of those who have entered claims and who are to-day living in Kansas and Nebraska have succeeded in securing such claims by fraud? Yet, sir, that is the character of testimony upon which the presumption has been raised and upon which the claims of thousands of people are "hung up" by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. He asks at the hands of Congress that this system, which has become infamous in the country, shall be continued by the payment of $10,000 more to this floating gang of secret spies who condescend to absorb our means, drink whisky at our expense, and ride down and damn our people.

Mr. Chairman, let me say in this connection that I do not stand here as a defender of the thefts of the public domain. I will go as far in any rational direction to defend it as will Commisssioner Sparks, but sir, in Nebraska and Kansas, in the region where there are a hundred applicants for every claim on the public lands, where the land offices are open to complaint against the sufficiency of any man's title, there is no question but the administration of the laws and the protection of the public domain can be trusted to the people themselves.

If I have acquired a title without compliance with the law concerning improvement and settlement, then A B can file his contest against me. The case will be heard and the decision made, and if I have not complied with the law I will be dispossessed and my claim will be delivered over to A B.

So it will be in every other case the moment it is proved that there has been a substantial violation of the law as to the improvement and settlement of settlers on the public domain in the region of agricultural lands. We have already at least fifty land officers in the States of Kansas and Nebraska. Are they not sufficient to watch over the public lands? You have them in every State and Territory. If you can not trust them to administer the laws put them out and put others in that you can trust—but save us from secret assault and mad reform.

What necessity then is there, Mr. Chairman, for this money? Nothing but this hue and cry against these settlers upon the public lands raised by these very agents. What is there to justify the charge that of all the men who live on these claims 90 per cent. are there through fraud? Nothing save a bought and "paid-for opinion;" and I therefore move to strike out the entire paragraph.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the gentleman from Nebraska has taken occasion at this time to attack the present administration of the Land Office under Commissioner Sparks, and especially on account of an order suspending final action upon entries on the public domain in certain localities.

That order of Commissioner Sparks was made when he entered upon the duties of his office, and was for the purpose of suspending final action, which was the granting of patents in certain instances upon the public lands and in certain localities for reasons which he has assigned in his report. Was he warranted in making this order suspending final action?

Let us see. I maintain that he was. The authority upon which the action was based was derived from information and reports of special agents of the Interior Department appointed by the previous Secretary of the Interior. These reports were made under the operation of an order issued by the former Commissioner of that office.

Mr. LAIRD. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. SPRINGER. I prefer not to yield the short time I have now. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that Mr. McFarland in several of his reports had directed the attention of Congress to this very fact and made similar recommendations.

Mr. LAIRD. Did he issue any general order suspending the operation of law in a whole Territory?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state to you exactly what he did. Mr. Sparks in his report used this language:

At the outset of my administration I was confronted with overwhelming evidences that the public domain was being made the prey of unscrupulous speculation and the worst forms of land monopoly through systematic frauds carried on and consummated under the public land laws. My predecessor—had for three years called the attention of Congress to the extent and magnitude of fraudulent appropriations of public lands, and, as shown by his general and special reports, had found it necessary to suspend the issue of patents in several States and Territories, either wholly or in certain classes of entries and special districts of country.

That is Mr. McFarland—

Mr. LAIRD. That was not with reference to the agricultural lands.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is what Mr. McFarland did. Mr. Sparks goes on as follows:

It appears that at the approaching end of the last administration these suspensions were removed by official order, and that a flood of suspected entries had been passed to patent and were passing to patent when I assumed the duties of this office. Applications for suits to set aside patents on ground of fraud, where the patents had been issued as late as the 3d of March, 1885, had already been presented. Reports of special agents, registers and receivers, and inspectors of surveyors-general and local land offices, communications from United States attorneys and other officials, and letters from public men and private citizens throughout the country, were laid before me, all detailing one common story of widespread, persistent public land robbery committed under guise of the various forms of public land entry.

These reports come, mind you, from the officials of the Interior Department who had been appointed by the predecessor in office of Mr. Sparks, the appointees of a previous administration. They were Republicans who made the reports, and not the "hirelings" of a Democratic administration, as my friend from Nebraska has been pleased to call them, and to which he asks the attention of the House as being engaged in this business.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let me ask my frind a question. Do you not think that in the wide sweep of that order, which included the innocent and the guilty alike, there was not the exercise of that wise and just discrimination that should characterize the administration of an officer charged with such a trust as is imposed upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. SPRINGER. The fact is, sir, that the fraudulent appropriation of the public domain was so widespread and so universal that there was but one way to meet the danger, and that was to suspend final action upon the granting of patents until all of the formalities required by the land laws of the United States had been complied with. That was all that Commissioner Sparks did in his order, and I defy any man to contradict that he has saved more acres of the public domain than any of his predecessors.

Mr. LAIRD. And I would like the gentleman to show that he has ever saved an acre of it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I repeat, he has saved the public land from spoliation and fraudulent entry, and for doing this he is to receive the thanks of the American people, who desire the lands to be used for homes for the honest toilers of this country, and not for rings of land speculators. This he will receive, Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the odium that is attempted to be cast upon him by gentlemen here to-day.

Mr. PERKINS. Where is the evidence that he has ever saved an acre of the public land?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will show the gentleman.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois how long Commissioner Sparks had been in office when he made this sweeping order?

Mr. SPRINGER. But a few days.

Mr. CUTCHEON. So I understood.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, I want to call the attention of the committee further to some statements contained in the official report of the Commissioner of the Land Office. He uses this language:

In many sections of the country, notably throughout regions dominated by cattle-raising interests—the vast area lying west of the ninety-ninth meridian—examinations, wherever made, had developed at all points that entries were chiefly fictitious and fraudulent and made in bulk through concerted methods adopted by organizations that had parceled out the country among themselves and were maintaining seized possessions of unentered lands by boundaries and inclosures defended by armed riders and protected against immigration and settlement by systems of espionage and intimidation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. TOWNSHEND was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. SPRINGER.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am much obliged to my colleague.

I continue reading from the Commissioner's report:

In other cases, as in farming regions approximate to the cattle belt, it was shown that individual speculation, following the progress of public surveys, was covering townships of agricultural land with entries made for the purpose of selling the claims to others, or by entries procured for the acquisition of lands in large bodies.

Again, in timbered regions, the forests were being appropriated by domestic and foreign corporations through suborned entries made in fraud and evasion of law. Newly discovered coal fields were being seized and possessed in like manner.

The question of my own duty, as the administrative officer immediately charged under the law with seeing that the public lands were disposed of only according to law, was at once forced upon me. Should I continue to certify and request the issue of patents by the President indiscriminately upon entries which there was every reasonable ground to believe were fraudulent in a greater part, or should I withhold such final action until examination could be made and the false claims separated from those that were valid?

I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that this is all that Commissioner Sparks has done, and in doing it he is entitled to the thanks of Congress and the gratitude of the country. He has simply withheld final action until he could sift out the fraudulent from the honest; and in doing this he ought to be assisted by Congress, and is being assisted by the agents, appropriations for whom the gentleman from Nebraska desires to strike out of the bill.

Mr. Sparks pertinently asks in his report:

Should I disregard cumulative evidences of the universality of fraudulent appropriation of public lands and become an official instrumentality of their consummation, or should I say, "I mean to know what I am doing before I ask the President of the United States to sign any more land patents?"

That was the question which was presented to the Commissioner, and this was the manner in which he proceeded to perform his duties.

The final action upon these patents was the issue of the patent with the signature of the President of the United States. It was not interfering with the operations of the Land Office in any remote district of the country; but it was simply to stop final action until such investigation should be had by agents of the Department so as to enable the Commissioner to determine where the fraudulent entries were. If gentlemen will read the report from page 50 to page 63 or page 64, they will find the reports of agents of land offices who were in office when Commissioner Sparks assumed the duties of his office, in which they stated, as was stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], my colleague, last Monday, in discussing the bill to repeal the pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land laws, that 90 per cent of these entries were fraudulent. And if the evidence had accumulated, showing the fact that 90 per cent. of the entries of the public domain were fraudulent, what would you have thought of a Commissioner, in the face of that evidence furnished by agents appointed by his predecessor, if he should have proceeded to grant patents? He should have been impeached and removed from office as a particeps criminis in the greatest fraud of the century, the spoliation of the public domain.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] to agree as to fixing some time for closing this debate.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think this matter had better be ventilated.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no disposition not to tell everything connected with this matter, so far as we know. That is not the point I want to get at. I want to know whether the gentleman from Nebraska and I can agree, and the House can confirm that agreement, as to the length of time desired for the discussion of this paragraph. I am desirous of getting on with the bill. I am not going to be exacting at all as to the time allowed, but I wish to have the time fixed.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I suggest to the gentleman that the country feels a great interest in this matter. I suppose his own constituents are interested in it, as certainly mine are. It is a question about which they are very solicitous.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand it is an important matter, but it is not more important than the passage of this bill and sending it to the Senate.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Perhaps I would have said the same thing by this time if the gentleman had permitted me to say it. I think some time might profitably be devoted to this matter, that the country may understand the position of it.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Ohio will remember that this discussion is more appropriate on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But since it is commenced here we may as well go through with it.

Mr. LAIRD. What does the gentleman from Pennsylvania say to the proposition of allowing an hour for debate?

Mr. PERKINS. An hour is not too much.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing that by unanimous consent the debate shall run for another hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition that the debate on the pending paragraph shall continue for one hour?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. The time already occupied I believe is even on each side.

The CHAIRMAN. Just even.

Mr. RANDALL. Therefore the rest of the time will be allotted by the Chair.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, from the vigor of the attack made upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office, both in this House and in certain public newspapers, one thing is absolutely certain, either Mr. Sparks is maladministering and disgracing his office, or else he has aroused the passions of certain persons who have an interest in getting hold of the public domain to the injury of the people of the United States. Now, Commissioner Sparks came into office under peculiar circumstances. There was an aroused public opinion throughout the country that the public domain of the United States was getting dishonestly into the hands of large capitalists. The bona fide settlers, the men who were making entries for the purpose of getting homes and building up the country, were sending out appeals through the press to the Government of the United States to protect them from parties who were making unfounded claims upon the public domain for dishonest purposes—retarding its healthy and enduring growth.

Nothing has been adduced here to show that the Commissioner of the General Land Office has not the discretionary power as to when he shall issue a patent. There is lodged in this officer discretion as to whether in his opinion the claim has been honestly pre-empted, the settlement honestly taken up, and the conditions of the law complied with. If he is not satisfied—and as an honest man he is obliged to be satisfied—that these conditions have been complied with, he is not required by the law to issue a patent.

Now, as he says so eloquently and pathetically in his report, when he was confronted with testimony, not of men whom he or this administration had been instrumental in appointing, but by the testimony of the agents of the last administration, by letters of the honest settlers in the West, by an aroused public opinion, that these laws had been used for the purpose of stealing the public lands, there was but one course for an honest public officer, and that was the one pursued by Mr. Sparks in stopping the final issue of patents until the law had been complied with. What honest man in these United States objects to this—that a public officer, striving to preserve the public domain against dishonest settlement, should stop the wholesale issue of patents in order to do so?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I supplement what has been read by the gentleman from Illinois from this report by showing in the language of the Commissioner what was the result of this course:

> The result of this action has been salutary, and has, when fully understood, met with hearty approval from bona fide settlers. I have received many letters expressing gratitude that steps are being taken to arrest the disposal of lands for speculation and monopoly to the disadvantage of those who desire to secure permanent homes. Settlers who go out on the frontier and endure the hardships of pioneer life do so with the expectation that they will be joined by others; that communities will spring up, churches and schools be established, the value of their possessions enhanced, and the conveniences and the advantages of civilized life attained; but speculative appropriations of public lands destroy these hopes and leave actual settlers isolated for years, or they are compelled to remove to other localities. From this, the bona fide, honest class, assurances of satisfaction have been voluntarily tendered for the action taken.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BEACH. If I can be recognized, I will yield my time to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] will proceed.

Mr. MCADOO. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the Commissioner states the truth in his report, no complaint has come from the honest settlers on our Western territory. Who are the men who complain? If the honest settlers, whom the Commissioner says he is protecting by the arrest of these patents, are not complaining, then the only complaint that is voiced here is from the speculators, the grabbers, the stealers, and the monopolizers of the public domain.

Let me read from the report of one of the special agents, the report of Special Agent Webster Eaton. It is dated "Duluth, Minn., October 28, 1884"—before this administration had been elected, so that it can not be said this is from one of the partisans of Mr. Sparks, who is endeavoring to back up the statement of the Commissioner's report. After recapitulating the details he says:

> Thus it will be seen that there have been over forty-three hundred final entries of this kind made, to say nothing about the cash entries and entries at public sale; and I know—

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] lays great stress on the fact that some of these special agents say "in their opinion." Here is an officer of the last administration who does not give his "opinion," but says "I know." Now, if he is to be confuted, and if the action of this House is to be honest, let us know something to the contrary. This is not a question of the opinion of these agents against the opinion of the gentleman from Nebraska; but this agent says:

> I know that there are less than one hundred actual settlers—
> Out of these forty-three hundred pre-emptors—
> living upon any of these lands in this land district who make a living by farming, or who are trying to make a living in that way.

How are these forty-three hundred pre-emptors who are not farming making a living? What are they doing? They are acting as the stool-pigeons, the decoy-ducks, the manipulators, and the tools of those who are striving to get great blocks of the public domain at little or no expense.

> And although I have made diligent inquiry during my stay of over one year in this place, I have yet to find one person who is making a farm or trying to make a farm upon a pre-emption claim. Therefore I think I am fully warranted in saying that less than one-thirtieth of the claims taken in the Duluth United States land district are taken for actual settlement.

Even if the Commissioner of the General Land Office had violated the letter of the law, then it was almost justifiable, if it is ever justifiable to stretch authority, in the fruits which it produced; for if the Commissioner had not thus stopped the issue of these patents, and brought the matter home to the head of the Interior Department for his approval or revocation, I am obliged to confess that in my opinion the Congress of the United States would not have done as it did the other day in repealing the timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land laws.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And the repeal of those laws was supported by an overwhelming vote of the House, and upon an admitted state of facts substantially as stated in the Commissioner's report.

Mr. MCADOO. That is the fact. I believe there was no division upon the final vote.

A MEMBER. There were only 7 votes in the negative.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, the proposition now before this House for consideration is one which concerns the people of the West deeply; and I question whether any man on this floor, who is at all familiar with the circumstances existing in that part of the country, or at all cognizant of the great wrong which has been done by the present Commissioner of the General Land Office, will stand here and justify his conduct for one moment.

Gentlemen living in New Jersey, gentlemen living on the Atlantic coast who have no practical or personal information on the subject, may defend him, but those of us who know from actual observation, who know from actual experience some of the conditions there, will in my judgment be far from agreeing to support in any degree the rulings, decisions, or regulations of that office.

It has been suggested by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] that the Commissioner of the General Land Office has expressed the opinion that 90 per cent. of all land entries in the State of Kansas as well as in his own State of Nebraska, and indeed in that whole territory west, are fraudulent in their character. Yet to sustain him in that position, to find some foundation for the slanders he has made of those who have made entries of the public lands, he takes the position that all who have mortgaged their lands after they have perfected their entry did so in violation of law and with fraudulent intent, and that therefore all their entries must be suspended.

Those settlers are the men who have been wronged. In most instances those men only sought the opportunity to mortgage their lands after making their entries in good faith for the purpose of securing money with which to cultivate and improve them. Yet these entries are suspended by the order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the settlers are libeled as public plunderers.

If they obtain credit on them by pledging them, or mortgage them to secure the payment of an honest debt, the Commissioner of the General Land Office holds that they do it in violation of law. The result is their credit is destroyed, and their opportunity to get money to improve their homes, to beautify their farms, to pay their debts, and to make them more comfortable is gone. The ultimate result is, Mr. Chairman, in many instances, to compel them to sell their homes to those who have means to improve them, or who have money to invest for purposes of speculation.

Almost every month of the year witnesses in my State the organization of some new county. Immigrants have been going there by the thousand, ay, by the hundred thousand, within the last eighteen months, and communities have grown with wonderful rapidity. All that great area lying west of the ninety-sixth degree has been settled by honest seekers for homes upon the public domain, and we ask for them some protection. They have, as a rule, taken it under the pre-emption law, and so far as I know not a single entry, after investigation, has been found fraudulent or canceled by this Commissioner of the General Land Office in my own Congressional district, and what is true of my district is true generally of the State I have the honor in part to represent upon the floor of this House.

Not one in one hundred, after investigation, has been found to be fraudulent. Yet this man soon after he was inducted into office arrogated to himself the right to suspend every entry in all that territory and to brand the people as pilferers, and thus bring suffering and distress to this whole class of worthy settlers. And not content with this, we find him suspending the statutes of the United States and organizing a government of his own.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. LAIRD. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Why, sir, we find this officer suspending the statutes of the United States and declaring to those in charge in the various local land offices that they shall not receive a filing under the pre-emption law; that they shall not receive a declaratory statement under the desert-land act; that they shall not receive evidence or a declaration under the timber-culture law. He has by this order assumed the functions of legislation, and suspended all these statutes of the United States and compelled the officers in the local land offices to violate their oaths by refusing to execute the laws in behalf of these settlers on the public lands. Is it remarkable, therefore, that the Secretary of the Interior should say to this Commissioner of the General Land Office, Why, sir, you can not in that way strike down the legislation of this great Government?

As I have already stated, he has given it as his opinion that 90 per cent. of these entries are fraudulent, and, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD], I challenge him to present a particle of evidence to prove that slander upon the people of my State.

Let me suggest, in answer to the gentleman, that the men investigating these claims are not the men who were employed or appointed by the predecessor of the present Commissioner of the General Land Office. So far as I know—and I know many of them personally—every one of those men has been recalled, and the men now in the field conducting these investigations are men appointed upon the recommendation and at the request of the present Commissioner.

The opinion of his predecessor has been called into question here. I challenge the gentleman from Illinois, or any other gentleman on the floor of this House who desires to sustain the present incumbent of this office, to produce a single order made by Judge McFarland or any other predecessor in which entries in that entire region or in a good agricultural section were suspended.

Individual entries have been suspended, I confess, and rightly, but I take the position that the occupant of this Land Office has no authority to suspend entries in an entire region to correct some unlawful or improper entries in individual cases. Let the wrongdoer suffer, but do not destroy the credit of these men throughout that great area of country who occupy these lands and are struggling with adverse circumstances to make for themselves comfortable homes.

The gentleman from New Jersey says that the settlers are not protesting against it. By what authority is this statement made? I say to him that the occupants of the lands are protesting against it. Mr. Chairman, he is not familiar with the circumstances of the case or he would not have made that assertion. He does not know the facts as they exist.

Why, against the arbitrary orders of the Commissioner of the General Land Office there comes up a voice from the West that should be irresistible and that should be heeded by this House in its action upon such questions. It is against these practices that the voice of the people of my State has been already raised. With such unanimity and to such an extent has this cry been raised in Kansas, that the Legislature of the State last winter passed a joint resolution invoking the power of Congress to protect the settlers against the tyranny, the libels, and the unauthorized wrongs of this wrecker who sits enthroned in the General Land Office. And what is true of my own State is true in greater or less degree in every State and Territory of that great West.

Attention has been called to the repeal of the pre-emption and timber-culture acts. I confess that the House did within the last few days pass such a bill; but it was put through under a suspension of the rules, when but fifteen minutes' debate could be given to the consideration of that important subject.

If that bill had been submitted to a candid and careful consideration and discussion here it might have been otherwise. I do not say that it would not have been passed even under such circumstances; but, sir, it is remarkable to me that a committee that is privileged, that has the right to call up a bill whenever it can get recognition of the Speaker, finds it necessary to have its measures passed under a suspension of the rules, and to give to the opponents of the bill, the men who do represent the settlers and these important interests in the West, but fifteen minutes' time for discussion and for a consideration of the measure. That is, in part, the wrong of which I complain; and if in connection with this bill we can do anything to protect the settlers against the unjust exactions, the arbitrary and unauthorized decisions, the misrepresentations and decrees which strike down the just with the unjust and ruin homes and wreck legitimate enterprises upon the public domain, we should do it, and teach this possesser of brief authority that there is a limit to the endurance of the people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word or two on this subject.

I voted the other day for the bill which was reported from the Committee on the Public Lands by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB], by which the power to take the public lands could only be exercised under the one process of law, that is to say, by settlement under the homestead law. I sincerely hope that that bill may soon become a law, and that the present mode of settlement upon our public lands may be utterly overthrown.

It is unquestionably true that very large portions of the public domain are taken up by single individuals under the present complicated system of entries; and it is also unquestionably true that the Commissioner of the Land Office had good reason to take steps with a view to breaking up this system of obtaining large tracts of land by single individuals. So far as he has gone in that direction and in efforts to prevent fraudulent entries of the public lands, and the absorption by the few to the exclusion of the many, his course meets my commendation and approval, and I believe it will meet the commendation of the country. There doubtless have been some things done that have worked hardships to honest bona fide settlers.

I could not help believing, when I heard the gentlemen from Nebraska and Kansas and other gentlemen here who are familiar with the facts in discussing the question now before the committee, that some of the orders of the Commissioner of the General Land Office have worked harnships and grievous difficulties to a considerable number of settlers, many of whom experience trying times before they make the lands on which they enter profitable and productive.

I do not know myself what course he could have pursued which would have drawn a line of distinction between those who entered upon the lands for fraudulent purposes and those who are bona fide settlers; but this I do say, that it was the bounden duty of that officer, and it is the bounden duty of the Interior Department, to prevent the kind of frauds that have been perpetrated unquestionably to a very considerable extent in many States and Territories of the West. There is not a scintilla of doubt, Mr. Chairman, about the truth of the assertion that a great many frauds have been perpetrated. To what extent I do not pretend to say.

The reports of the Commissioner of the Land Office set forth the fact that only about 30 per cent., perhaps, of the settlements of certain parts of the country are bona fide. That may be an exaggeration or it may only apply to particular sections of the country. But if fraudulent entries have been and are being made to any considerable extent, it is the duty of the Commissioner of the Land Office to use all the measures which are placed at his disposal to prevent them. The public lands belong to the people of the United States, and those who want them for homes and for purposes of cultivation—not speculation—should alone have the opportunity of taking and enjoying them. That is the course dictated by wise policy. I think, sir, the bill which was passed by the House, if it shall pass the Senate and be approved by the President, will have the effect of bringing about that condition of things.

I sympathize with the bona fide settlers of the West as much as any one can do. There have gone from my section of Pennsylvania a very large number of people to the Western States and Territories with a view to settlement; and of course it is my desire to encourage them, and give to every man who goes on a piece of public land intending to occupy it the right to have it patented to him. I want the old soldiers of the Republic to have these lands, and I want every one who will avail himself of the provision of the law to have the opportunity to obtain 160 acres of land.

If the Commissioner of the Land Office has issued an unnecessary order which will preclude bona fide settlers I regret it. I hope he will modify or rescind such order, and enable them to go on the lands and occupy them without unnecessary delay.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It would be as well if the Secretary of the Interior rescinded it. He has rescinded almost all his orders.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not care by whom it is done; but I would like to have it rescinded or modified in the interest of honest settlers, and therefore in the interest of the people.

Mr. COBB. There never was any trouble about the bona fide settlers. It was the thieves that made the trouble.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. What are the complaints made here to-day against the Commissioner of the General Land Office? His order suspending these entries and withholding patents can not ultimately result in injury to any honest man. It may result in causing temporary inconvenience to some honest men, but that is all.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. It may have the effect of starving them to death.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. How can that be? There is no likelihood of that. If a man enters upon land in good faith he can cultivate it and make a living, and if he is an honest man he should be willing to suffer a portion of the inconvenience, in order to bring to light the frauds which we are officially informed amount to 90 per cent. of the entries. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is the duty, and it ought to be the pleasure, of every member of this House, without regard to party, to stand by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in his endeavor to preserve the public domain for bona fide settlement.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. No, sir; I have only five minutes.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Do you think there are 90 per cent. of fraudulent entries in your State?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. There are no homestead lands in my State. I would like to know what object the Commissioner could have in adopting a policy which would result in inconvenience to the great body of honest settlers? He could certainly have no such object or intention. Here is a public officer sworn to discharge his duty, and doubtless he knows more about the facts connected with this matter than all the balance of us put together, for the reason that it is his exclusive business; certainly more than any man who does not devote the same amount of time and attention to it. It is his judgment, when brought face to face with these facts, that a large proportion of the entries are fraudulent; and that being his judgment, it is his duty to do all in his power to preserve the public domain.

Mr. ROWELL. Did he acquire all that knowledge in three weeks?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Why not? There is not a member of this House, unless it be some member of the Committee on Public Lands, who has devoted three weeks to the study of this question. None of those who are criticising the Commissioner of the General Land Office, I venture to say, has devoted three weeks to it. I do not risk much when I say they have not devoted three days to patient investigation. The Commissioner, on the other hand, had all the appliances and conveniences which the General Land Office supplied for informing his conscience and his judgment. I shall stand by him, and this House should stand by him and hold up his hands.

There can be no question the Commissioner is acting honestly; there is no question that he has more information than anybody else; and there can be no question or denial of the fact that there have been a large number of fraudulent entries on the public domain. It has been the rule and not the exception for the past ten or fifteen years.

I want to see fair play to this officer, who is standing there heroically and making a battle against a confederation of public-land thieves who are seeking to aggrandize themselves and deprive poor and honest people of homes. The Commissioner is not seeking to injure honest men. He is their friend and protector. I think it would best comport with the duties of members of this House to stand up for this laborious, faithful, and couragous public officer.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not propose in this discussion to call names. I do not propose either to proclaim one man a tyrant or another man a thief. I propose to ask the attention of this House to the admitted facts of the case. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] has just overwhelmed us with a declaration of the immense knowledge the Commissioner of the Land Office must have had when he began this business. Now, he entered upon his office on the 26th of March, and he issued this order on the 3d day of April. How must he have filled up his mind on the Sabbath which there was between?

Every defense here which is made of the Commissioner of the Land Office is an attack upon the Secretary of the Interior; because this very order of April 3 which was issued by the Commissioner has been annulled by the Secretary of the Interior. What was the foundation of this action on the part of the Commissioner? It was a declaration on hearsay evidence, such as could not be admitted to invalidate a single title, that 90 per cent. of the land entries were fraudulent.

Does any man in this House believe that story? Does any man believe that 90 per cent. of the immigrants into the West are thieves or fraudulent persons? If so, how does it happen that all this fraud is in the West and none of it in the South? The truth is, those who know Mr. Commissioner Sparks can understand the working of his mind. He came into office with a great idea that this country had been flooded with fraud. The Commissioner of Pensions shared that idea. The Auditors and Comptrollers were all agog to punish fraud which they thought had been committed; but in every instance they found out their mistake, and the Secretary of the Interior, under his official seal, has condemned the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Why, look at it, see what the nature of this proceeding was. If the Commissioner of the General Land Office had any right, if he had any duty to perform in the premises, it was the right and the duty to annul particular entries as to which there were charges of fraud.

Instead of that, what does he do? He suspends every land entry. Now, what does the law require? Is the law so silly as to leave this country open to the pillage of a thousand men, nine hundred of whom can be successful thieves? What is it necessary to do in order to prove up a claim? It is necessary to have the man's oath, to have the testimony of two witnesses, to have a magistrate declare that he knows those witnesses and knows them to be veracious men, and it is required that there shall be publication in the newspaper nearest to the district, so that the whole thing may be open to the prying eyes of the people of the vicinage, the men that used to constitute the jury in old days. What a silly thing it is then to talk about 90 per cent. of these claims being fraudulent! If you want to judge of this Commissioner take one plain case. He took it upon himself to annul the law of the land, to declare that no other entry should be received in certain cases, simply because Congress was considering a bill to stop such entry, and his action in that matter was promptly suspended by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. STEELE was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. REED.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There is nobody in this country that objects to the pursuit and hunting down of fraud. There is nobody that finds fault with any honest effort to hunt down wickedness, whether it be in the North or in the South, in the remote West or in the East. We all join with hearty accord in that. But, in order to strike down cases of fraud, what is the necessity that every honest man shall have the presumption of law turned against him and be pronounced a scoundrel until he proves himself a virtuous man to the satisfaction of Mr. Commissioner Sparks? The Commissioner may strike down the statute law of the land, but are you willing that he should strike down the presumption which hedges around every innocent man under our law?

What has been his defense here to-day? Has there been any proof from disinterested witnesses? Not one syllable. The defense has been readings from his report, with the interesting commentaries of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO]; which last gentleman admits that the Commissioner has violated the law, which first gentleman simply contents himself with epithets. Is this the kind of defense that you have for your Commissioner? His report! What is the effect of his action? Is anybody from the West, where they know the facts, produced to approve of it? No; but Mr. Commissioner himself, sitting in his office here in Washington, says that the result has been salutary, and the gentleman from New Jersey is perfectly content, and the whole Democratic party is pleased, and thinks Mr. Commissioner Sparks ought to have a vote of thanks! What a spectacle this is! Here is a system of land laws which has been attacked by this Commissioner, a system under which the most magnificent States have been added to this country, and without a word of proof, without a syllable of evidence, thousands and thousands of poor men, honest settlers on the soil, have been put to great discomfort and disadvantage and loss. "Oh, but," says the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], "it will eventually come out all right. If these settlers have honest titles they will eventually get their property."

But what will happen to them in the mean time? The same thing will happen to them that happens to the hundreds of honest claimants against this Government who besiege our doors from year to year, and whom we regularly refuse to relieve. What will happen to them? How are these settlers going to obtain a living? How are they going to obtain the means of cultivating their lands? The normal and natural way, if they have not money—and they are not millionaires—the natural way is by mortgaging their right and their title to the land. This right and title is precisely what is denied them by the Commissioner, and that being denied them they are compelled to sell out to the very speculators against whom this man is loudly proclaiming that he intends to defend them. I do not know about the wisdom of this particular amendment; probably it was offered only to call the attention of the House to the subject; but I do say that before Congress adjourns, if the Commissioner still persists, something ought to be done to do justice to this class of men that we are all so loud-voiced in praising in the abstract and so reluctant to do anything for in the concrete.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, it must be a matter of deep regret to all of us who admire the powers of the gentlemen from Maine that in this instance he should appear in court without a client. For whom does the gentleman from Maine expend his wit and his eloquence? For the honest settlers on these public lands who have made complaint to Congress or for the loan-offices of the West? And when I say this I do not mean to impugn the gentleman's motives; but the men who are clamoring against the order of Commissioner Sparks are largely those who manage the loan-offices of the West, who have traded upon these dishonest pre-emptions, who have made loans upon them.

Now, I want to adduce here as a witness on behalf of this maligned Commissioner of the General Land Office, who has been execrated here to-day as if he were a sort of American Guy Fawkes, the evidence of an impartial observer. That standard publication the North American Review went to the expense of getting a commissioner to go out there and investigate this system. The services of a member of the British Parliament were obtained. This gentleman, after a personal inspection, makes a stronger report than any inspector of the Land Office. He says:

> No one can travel in the border States, where there yet remains some public land to be disposed of, and inquire among the land-offices there, without feeling that by paltry and occult methods the United States is being defrauded of nearly is much of its domain as by the depredations of railroad corporations and the extravagance of legislators. In Dakota and Minnesota I have seen men farming land and paying half the crop as rent to quasi-landlords who actually had no title whatever to the holdings. They had filed timber-culture entries, by which, on payment of a fee of $14 and signing an agreement to plant 10 acres of trees within four years' time, they were allowed to use 160 acres of prairie land, to which their title would be perfected when the agreement was fulfilled.
> The entryman, under the timber-culture act, is not compelled to plant any trees until the third year from date of entry, when if he likes he may file a relinquishment of his claim, and the land is again open for entry. Thus a man without the faintest intention of planting a tree or doing a stroke of work can get possession of 160 acres of land, let it to a tenant, and pocket a heavy rental—half the fruits of another's toil—for three years. The most astonishing thing about this is that such a man can find a tenant. Others file timber-culture entries solely with a view to holding the land out of market until the growth of the community around it puts up its value. At the end of the third year the entryman will agree with another for a sum of money to make a written relinquishment so that the other may file a new entry on the spot.
> The second speculator will repeat the process, only charging a heavier consideration to the next entryman when the time comes for his relinquishment. So the process goes on, without a tree being planted on the land, and the honest settler is kept hopelessly out of it. This sort of thing is carried on by wholesale; and on a larger scale still are frauds perpetrated under the desert and timber-land acts, which enable capitalists in combination, by means of dummy entrymen, to appropriate miles of territory. The dummy entryman is also used by capitalists on an immense scale under the homestead and pre-emption laws.

Thus it appears that without the faintest intention of planting a tree or doing a stroke of work a man can get possession of 160 acres of land, upon which he can pocket a heavy rental or hand it over for cash to the foreign and domestic land-stealers.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCADOO. I hope my friend from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] will allow me one moment more.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Just one moment.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, why was there not in this House eloquent denunciation of the late chief of the Interior Department, who, if he did not violate the letter, certainly outraged the spirit of the law when the expiring moments of his official term were devoted to granting millions of acres of the public lands to railroad corporations?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LAIRD. Why does not the gentleman strike at him instead of at these settlers?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The gentleman from Maine complains that we have not brought witnesses from the West into the House to testify as to the facts which have been presented. But everybody knows that the files of the Land Office are loaded down with testimony of fraudulent entries and of devices of every kind to get hold of the public domain. It is known by evidence accessible to everybody that nothing which could be done by the land-grabbers to gobble up the public lands has been left undone, and that these lands were fast passing into the hands of speculators, who were acquiring them by all kinds of fraud, until the time seemed near at hand when it would be impossible for anybody to find anywhere in this broad country a quarter-section upon which to settle and make a homestead. It was to stop this and retain the public lands for actual settlers that the bill repealing the pre-emption laws passed here the other day by an overwhelming majority.

When Commissioner Sparks came into office and found from abundant evidence the state of things, there was but one practical way to deal with the question, and that was to stop the final issue of all patents until full investigations could be made. Possibly there may have been hardships in particular cases; but the facts are being investigated and patents issued as fast as possible to those entitled to them. It is simply a fight between the land-grabbers and the Commissioner in behalf of the people and the homestead settlers, and in this contest the Commissioner will be sustained.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, I apprehend that no gentleman here, in anything that has been said, desires to encourage fraud in the acquisition of the public lands. I assume that no gentleman on this or the other side of the House desires to do anything which shall prevent the executive department of this Government from arresting the unlawful "grabbing" of valuable tracts of public land.

But, sir, let me state what is complained of. The action of the Commissioner in some of the orders which he has issued reminds us of the old Indiana justice of the peace, who, after listening for two long days to the evidence pro and con in a criminal case, wound up his decision upon the conflicting testimony by saying that he had grave doubts as to the guilt of the prisoner, but whereas when a law student he had read in Blackstone that it was better that ninety-nine innocent men should be punished than that one guilty man should escape, therefore he would find the prisoner guilty. [Laughter.] That decision illustrates the general sweeping orders which have been made by the Commissioner.

For one, I want to see all fraudulent entries set aside and the authors of the frauds punished. I would encourage the Commissioner in prosecuting these frauds. But it is not necessary to work great hardship and injustice on thousands of innocent settlers in the prosecution of fraudulent entries. These sweeping orders of the Commissioner have worked such hardship, and that is what I complain of.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine stated that no man in this House believed that 90 per cent. of the land entries under the timber-culture, the desert-land, and the pre-emption laws were fraudulent. My colleague [Mr. PAYSON] made that statement the other day, and he has proved it in his remarks, which are printed in the RECORD of last Thursday. I commend that speech to my friend from Maine and other gentlemen on this floor who say that Mr. Sparks had no justification for issuing this order.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB].

Mr. COBB. Mr. Chairman, I am astonished at gentlemen on the other side, especially the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and one or two others, who have made such a ferocious attack upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office. They charge him with violating the law and with the violation of precedents in this order which he has made for the protection of the public lands.

Now, if they would examine this question as they ought to do they would not thus charge the Commissioner. Let me say to these gentlemen that I can show them more than fifty precedents for the action of the Commissioner in withdrawing lands from settlement under the operation of the pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land acts.

And yet they would undertake to prejudice the Commissioner before the House and the country for his recent actions. Let us see how much justice there is in this complaint.

These lands were withdrawn from settlement many times for railroad purposes in the past and gentlemen did not complain; but when they are withdrawn for the purpose of protecting the people, then it is that these gentlemen rush to the front and make this savage attack upon the Commissioner. Why, I can point to instances under former Commissioners of the Land Office and Secretaries of the Interior where they have withdrawn the lands in contemplation of legislation when the legislation was never had; and afterward, some year and a half after, they have revoked the order; and yet gentlemen insist here that there is a great violation of the law in this order of Commissioner Sparks. For forty-four years this has been done under nearly all of the administrations coming down from that time to this, and yet it is said that this is a precedent which has never been set before. I respond, Mr. Chairman, that the Commissioner has done nothing but to follow the law, and I have the evidence here.

I will not take time to discuss it in the short time remaining to me, but at some future time I propose to present to the House evidence which can not be questioned in this regard. I propose to produce orders which I hold in my hand and place them in the RECORD showing what I have said to be true. I have only a part of them here now, but I will produce the others when occasion arises. When that is done gentlemen who make this zealous assault upon the Commissioner of the Land Office will be able to see whether they were right or not in their hasty conclusions.

They want their constituents to take the public lands as they have been doing in the years past. We want to preserve these public lands just as the Commissioner of the Land Office does, and hold them for the benefit of the actual settlers. What does it matter to a man living upon a homestead entry out in the Far West whether he gets his title to-day or to-morrow? He knows that he is complying with the law, and that it is but a question of time as to the perfection of his title. He knows that the time will come when the Government will have to give him a good title. It is the men who are stealing these lands who are opposed to this order and complaining about its effect. It is the men who want to commit depredations upon the public lands that denounce Mr. Sparks, and the men who want their people to do these things as they have been doing in the past who denounce him. That is the trouble. Their constituents "have a part of the pork," as has sometimes been said.

Now, in view of the legislation which was pending here in Congress repealing the pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land laws, Mr. Sparks withdrew from the operation of these acts by his order a certain amount of the public lands. But he did nothing more in principle than had been done in the numerous cases to which I have referred. Lands were withdrawn for railroad corporations, millions of acres; yea, more than a hundred millions of the public lands, in order to let the corporations have the benefit of them or to await the time when Congress should pass an act to give them to the railroad companies.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. And they make no complaint of that.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Indian Office: For compensation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $4,000; assistant commissioner, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $3,000; one financial clerk, at $2,000; chief of land division, at $2,000; chief of accounts division, $2,000; one principal book-keeper, $1,800; four clerks of class 4, eight clerks of class 3, one draghtsman, at $1,600; one stenographer, at $1,600; ten clerks of class 2, fifteen clerks of class 1, nine clerks, at $1,000 each; twelve copyists, one messenger, two assistant messengers, one laborer, one messenger-boy, at $360; two charwomen, at $180 each; in all $93,460.

Mr. NELSON. I make the point of order against the second portion of that paragraph—the following words:

Assistant commissioner, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $3,000.

I make the point under Rule XXI, that it is new legislation, and it also increases the salary from $2,000 to $3,000. It is clearly within the rule. I must say, in addition, that I am somewhat surprised to find this committee reporting, in view of their pretenses of economy, a clause creating a new office and increasing the salary $1,000.

Mr. RANDALL. The statement of the gentleman is correct. The warrant of the committee was that such a bill was reported favorably from the Indian Committee, of which I think the gentleman is himself a member.

Mr. NELSON. That would be but another reason why it should not be included here. It is the substance of another bill pending before the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I will not insist that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. CANNON. I would be very glad if the gentleman from Minnesota would consent to withdraw the point of order and test the sense of the House touching this amendment. I think I can convince him it is an apt thing to do.

Mr. NELSON. I am so well satisfied that it is an improper thing to do from first to last, that for that very reason I can not withdraw the point.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say one word. So far as I know, the report would seem to show that the recommendation from the Committee on Indian Affairs was unanimous.

Mr. NELSON. Not at all.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This is a very important office. It is the only bureau of the Interior Department that has not an assistant of this character. I know that the Indian Office requires an assistant commissioner, as much perhaps as any bureau of the Interior Department, and I trust the gentleman from Minnesota will, in the interest of public business, withdraw his point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Minnesota attacks the extravagance of the Committee on Appropriations, and yet he is not on record in any way as being against this very proposition reported from the committee of which he is a member.

Mr. NELSON. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania at the time the Committee on Indian Affairs considered that bill I was away on a short visit to Minnesota; but before I went away I stated expressly I was opposed to that proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. I presume the Committee on Appropriations, seeing a unanimous report, so far as the record went to show it, were induced to put this provision in the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that the fact that a member of Congress had to go away during the session of Congress ought to show him that a commissioner may require to go away sometimes, and somebody should be provided to administer the office in his absence.

Mr. RANDALL. Is the point of order insisted on?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order in part only. He does not sustain it as regards the language "assistant commissioner," but he does as to the amount.

Mr. RANDALL. Then we will have to put in $2,000 after the words "chief clerk." I offer that amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Has the Chair ruled on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled that so far as the amount of money to be paid is concerned the point of order is well taken. As to the words "assistant commissioner," the point of order is overruled.

Mr. NELSON. I submit to the Chair that this creates a new office.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that under the rule which has been cited it is competent to increase the number of employés in a Department.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "chief clerk" and inserting "assistant commissioner."

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I do not think it fair to withhold this officer's pay.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a point of order. I wish to inquire, will the assistant commissioner come under the civil-service law?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. BAYNE. The chief clerk would.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, no; he gets $2,000.

Mr. NELSON. I submit this is creating a new office.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If I understood the ruling of the Chair correctly it is this: that it was in order to constitute an assistant commissioner of Indian affairs, but it was not in order to increase the salary from $2,000 to $3,000. If that is so, then I desire to change the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania so that this officer shall be designated as assistant commissioner, with a salary of $2,000.

Mr. RANDALL. What the Commissioner wants is to have one who will perform the duties both of assistant commissioner and chief clerk, but at different times. When the Commissioner finds it necessary to go away some one should be left in the office to perform such duties as are required of the Commissioner. Therefore the language we really want is "assistant commissioner and chief clerk, $2,000," but the salary ought to be $3,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars" insert "chief clerk, $2,000."

Mr. NELSON. I make the point of order against that amendment under Rule XXI. The chairman of the committee has just ruled that the words "assistant commissioner"—an officer that is not known to our Indian law—shall remain in the bill. If this amendment is adopted you will have an assistant commissioner and also a chief clerk not now in the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I will make the language so that it will not have that effect. I will modify the amendment so that there shall be an assistant commissioner and chief clerk with a salary of $2,000.

Mr. NELSON, But the gentleman knows there is no such officer as assistant commissioner.

Mr. RANDALL. The chief clerk in the absence of the commissioner can act as assistant commissioner.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already ruled upon the point of order. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is pending and the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1970, strike out "three" and insert "two;" so that it will read: "Assistant commissioner, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $2,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pension Office: For compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, $5,000; first deputy commissioner, $3,600; second deputy commissioner, $3,600; chief clerk, $2,500; assistant chief clerk, $2,000; medical referee, $3,000; assistant medical referee, $2,250; two qualified surgeons, who shall be experts in their profession, at $2,000 each.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to that paragraph.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas on the point of order, after which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] will be recognized.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I make the point of order that the words "five thousand dollars," in line 1984, and the words "two thousand five hundred dollars," in line 1987, are not in accordance with existing law. I understand that there is no law giving the Commissioner of Pensions $5,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the law fixes the salary at $3,500.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. The law fixes it at $4,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The appropriation bill for the current year fixes it at $5,000. That is the present law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will understand that a distinction has been drawn all the way through between the law fixing a salary and the salary as fixed by the amount appropriated in an appropriation bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. As I understand the matter——

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to have the point of order settled, and not to have the merits discussed on the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not want to discuss the merits, but I want to call the attention of the Chair to what I understood to be the ruling of the Chair the other day to the effect that the appropriation bill of the current year is in the nature of a law, and that if a change is made from the current appropriation bill that is a change of existing law. Now, in this particular the Committee on Appropriations have simply followed the bill of the current year, so that under the ruling of the Chair, as I understand it, there is here no change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has misunderstood the ruling of the Chair. Where a salary has been fixed by a general provision of law the Chair has held that it was not in order to reduce it, but that where there was no law the bill fixed the salary. But the Chair understands that there is a general provision of law fixing the salaries of these officials, and, if so, in the opinion of the Chair that is the law governing the salaries, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I move to strike out "five thousand," and insert "four thousand."

Mr. PRICE. Mr Chairman, that is the amendment I sent up to the desk some time ago, and I desire to be heard upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Texas simply on a question of order, taking the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] off the floor, with the assurance that he would be recognized later.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, on the question of the amendment I have offered——

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the amendment read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, in line 1984, by striking out "five" and inserting "four;" so that the clause, if amended as proposed, will read, "For compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, $4,000.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman does not need that amendment if the point of order is sustained.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I am probably the best judge myself of what I need.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] that the amount of $5,000 to which he objects goes out under the ruling of the Chair sustaining the point of order.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on this provision of the bill. I want to say, in the first place, that it is clearly in violation of the Revised Statutes, and is therefore obnoxious to the rule. In addition, I want to say that if it is possible to make that salary still less than I have proposed, the acts of the present Commissioner of Pensions abound with evidence that would justify such a procedure. [Laughter.]

First, as to the law; that point has been settled. Secondly, I say I want to reduce the salary below the amount proposed in my amendment because the gentleman now in charge of the Pension Office is not properly discharging the duties of the high trust to which he has been called by this administration.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, with great respect to the gentleman from Wisconsin I submit that there is really no amendment pending.

Mr. PRICE. Very well; then I will move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will allow the Chair to make a suggestion, the "five thousand" goes out of the bill under the ruling of the Chair upon the point of order, and the Chair now suggests that the gentleman move to insert the amount he proposes.

Mr. PRICE. Then I move to make it $3,000, and that is too much pay. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I give it up. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that we are appropriating this money to a man who is not discharging legally, intelligently, or conscientiously the duties of his office. To prove this, I call attention to page 14 of his last report, where he says:

It is now an offense, prohibited by orders as well as repugnant to all fairness, for any employé to act as the agent or attorney of any outside party.

So it always was. The Commissioner proceeds:

Yet within a recent period one clerk has confessed to the Commissioner that he acted as agent for one man in aiding to prepare from three hundred to four hundred cases. This instance is only solitary in its extent, not its character.

I stand in my place in the American Congress to denounce that statement as absolutely, unconditionally false. I have weighed my words. I know what I mean and what I say. I have talked to the Commissioner on this subject; and that statement refers to a gentleman who is acting as my private secretary. This clerk has admitted to the Commissioner that he had prepared slips simply calling up three hundred or four hundred cases. I know that he never prepared the papers in any pension case in his life; nor did I. He did not do this for an agent, but for me, and he so stated to the Commissioner. I have never yet acted in the capacity of a claim agent. I want to make this declaration clear and emphatic; and if, after the long months of maladministration of that office, the present Commissioner has a friend on this floor who dare deny it, let an investigating committee be ordered, and I will prove the correctness of my statements.

Look again at the language of this report. I read from the lower part of page 14:

Still further; human ingenuity has been exhausted in the attempts at furnishing tests and barriers against claims.

True, every word of it; and it is a lamentable truth, reflecting directly upon the official character of this officer. Had it been stated that human ingenuity had been exhausted in attempts at furnishing tests and barriers against unjust claims, the conduct so described would have been permissible and commendable. But it is against all claims that these "tests and barriers" have been erected. The language is:

Human ingenuity has been exhausted in the attempts at furnishing tests and barriers against claims.

That is true to-day; it is true to the everlasting disgrace of this Government and this Congress which permits it. Cases almost without number might be stated where men have secured in support of their applications for pensions the testimony of a long line of witnesses—sixteen, eighteen, or twenty; and then this Pension Bureau has sent out a man under its employ who would find somebody to say, under oath or otherwise, that one of these eighteen or twenty witnesses constituting a chain of testimony was not a man entitled to credence. And on that showing the claim is rejected, and the applicant for a pension goes begging.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] moved, as I understand, an amendment to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$3,000" as the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions. I propose to amend by inserting "$4,000," and I do so on this ground: I see that the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs are each allowed in this bill $4,000, and I can not conceive of any reason why the Commissioner of Pensions should be allowed a larger salary than the Commissioner of the General Land Office or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. Chairman, I have adhered pretty steadily to the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations so far as this bill has progressed, but in regard to cutting down the salaries of the assistant treasurers of the United States my judgment did not approve of the action of that committee, because I felt that these assistant treasurers should have adequate compensation not only with reference to the amount of business they have to transact but also in view of the great responsibility devolving upon them.

It will be remembered that upon the question of allowing increased salaries to clerks of committees in this House I opposed the proposition. I believed it wanton extravagance on the part of Democratic members of this House to allow annual clerks to committees who have no business to do during the vacation of Congress.

In the present case, I can see no reason why the heads of these different bureaus should not be placed upon an equality. No gentleman, I think, can state any justification for paying the Commissioner of Pensions a salary of $5,000 while the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs receive only $4,000 each. Gentlemen have been warning members of the House in regard to entering upon extravagance on this bill. I say to the committee, and especially to my Democratic associates, that on all these points to which I have referred I have acted in the line of economy and with a view to the just demands of the public service. In offering my present proposition I have nothing to say against the Commissioner of Pensions, for I regard him as an able and conscientious officer. I simply maintain that there is no reason why he should have higher compensation than other officers of like grade.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised at the venomous assaults which come from the other side of the House against the Commissioner of Pensions. It is not my intention to make any reply to them. Those who know General Black, those who are familiar with the manner in which he has discharged the duties of his office, can not but concede that a more able, intelligent, conscientious, and faithful officer never occupied a position under the Federal Government. I will say further that no gentleman who has ever held the office of Commissioner of Pensions has done more work in the administration of the office than General Black has done. As the record will show, he has examined patiently and industriously and disposed of more claims for pensions than any preceding Commissioner ever did in the same length of time. If the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] has not discovered this fact, I can tell him that in his own neighborhood in the State of Wisconsin he will find among the veterans who have been applying for pensions proof of the assertion which I make, that General Black has been more liberal in the allowance of pensions than any Commissioner who ever preceded him.

Mr. PRICE. Do you deny the statement I made?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. One word further. So far as concerns the intellectual ability of General Black or his eminent qualifications for the duties of his office, he needs no defense from me.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then he is not a "physical wreck?"

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Perhaps the gentleman from Illinois can get the gentleman from Wisconsin to explain how it was he made use of the services of one of the clerks in the Pension Office.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes; the gentleman might explain how it was that he used the services of one of the clerks of that bureau to fill out some three hundred blank slips in pension cases. I thought the clerks in that bureau had enough to do through the day and were entitled to a rest at night; but it seems my friend here has or had some friend in that department who does this kind of work for him.

But, Mr. Chairman, I rose for the purpose of denying the charges made against General Black. I do not wish to detain the House.

Mr. PRICE. Is there any man of intelligence on the other side bold enough to deny the statement I made?

A MEMBER. What is the statement?

Mr. PRICE. That when the Commissioner penned the statement I read he penned a statement which was absolutely and unqualifiedly false.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What is the gentleman's statement?

Mr. PRICE. I have called attention to it.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman from Illinois is not responsible for what my colleague does not know. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What is the statement?

Mr. PRICE. It is to be found in the second clause from the top of the fourteenth page of his report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I stand here ready to defend General Black against any charge made by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. THROCKMORTON'S amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE'S amendment as amended was then adopted.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I now make the point of order on line 1987.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no law fixing the amount of that chief clerk.

Mr. RANDALL. It is fixed by section 4040 Revised Statutes.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the appropriation in the bill for the current year?

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill fixes it at $2,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MORRISON. I move to insert "$2,000."

Mr. RANDALL. That follows as a matter of course.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on fixing the salary at $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that section 4042 of the Revised Statutes fixes it at $2,000.

Mr. RANDALL. So I understood, but I may be wrong about that.

Mr. STEELE. I move the committee rise.

Mr. TAULBEE. Before the committee rises I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania move the committee rise for the purpose of extending the time?

Mr. RANDALL. I would like by unanimous consent to have the time extended to 6 o'clock.

The motion to rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. LAIRD, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

And then (the hour of 5 o'clock p. m. having arrived) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WILKINS: Petition of J. A. Cowell, James S. Minnis, and 200 others, citizens of Tuscarawas County, Ohio, praying for the passage of Senate bill 1886, for the relief of disabled soldiers of the late war—to the same committee.

By Mr. WISE: Papers relating to the claim of Elizabeth H. Clay, of Manchester, and of Jane M. Thompson, of Hanover County, Virginia—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 16, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is necessary to have a short executive session for a few minutes, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. There are some resolutions of the Massachusetts Legislature which my colleague [Mr. DAWES] is about to present, and which will take only a minute. I should like to have that done now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will withhold the motion until the strict morning business is through, if that be necessary, although I did not know but that it would be more convenient in respect of public business to have an executive session now.

Mr. HOAR. The morning business will require but a few minutes probably.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of 511 dairy farmers of Ohio, praying for the passage of the bill regulating and taxing imitation butter; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Philadelphia Wool Merchants' Association, praying for the passage of the amendment to the oleomargarine bill proposing to put worsteds on the same basis as woolens; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DAWES. I present resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts in reference to the recent unjustifiable proceedings of the Dominion Government invading the rights of our fishermen. I ask that the resolutions may be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolutions relating to the seizure of American fishing vessels by the Canadian authorities.

Whereas the people of this Commonwealth view with deep concern the official seizure of vessels belonging to its citizens, the breaking up of their voyages, and the spoliation of their cargo in the British province of Canada; and

Whereas the fishing interests have ever been regarded as not only among the most valuable and important as a source of food supply, but invaluable as a nursery for the naval service of the nation in time of war: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the senate and house of representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in General Court assembled look to the Congress of the United States and the executive department of the National Government for prompt and decided action, to the end that American fishermen may be protected in the exercise of their lawful rights, and that further complications in regard to the commercial privileges of our citizens in British ports may be avoided.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the Senators and Representative in Congress from this Commonwealth, and to Hon. Thomas F. Bayard, Secretary of State.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 3, 1886.

Adopted. Sent up for concurrence.

EDWARD A. McLAUGHLIN, Clerk.

SENATE, June 9, 1886.

Adopted in concurrence.

E. HERBERT CLAPP, Clerk.

A true copy.
Attest: EDWARD A. McLAUGHLIN, Clerk.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, upon the question of the reference of the resolutions I wish to say that the constituency represented by my colleague and myself is more largely interested directly in this subject than any other State in the Union, as is well known. I suppose the State of Maine comes next in regard to the number of persons whose livelihood is affected by the present conduct of the Dominion of Canada.

There is still, naturally, of course, a great feeling of uneasiness on the part of the Massachusetts fishermen; and I wish to say through you to them that I am sure the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate is thoroughly possessed of the justice of their case, and thoroughly alive and alert in regard to the necessity of preserving the honor and dignity of the United States and the interests of this most deserving class of our citizens.

There is no class of American citizens a wrong upon whom would excite in this body more instant sympathy and desire for redress than the American sailor, the men who follow the sea, especially the fishermen; and under the lead of my honorable friend, the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], who, I suppose, knows as much about this subject as any man in the United States, whether in the public service or out of it, there is no question that everything legislative power can accomplish will be done to maintain the position of the United States in this controversy.

I wish to add that in my judgment it will be necessary to enlarge somewhat the scope of the legislation which has already been adopted as an amendment to the shipping bill, and to put in the power of the President of the United States the right not merely when a certain commercial privilege is denied to any ship of the United States to retaliate by a denial of the like commercial privileges, but to clothe the President with the power in his discretion of denying all commercial privileges in our ports to the vessels of the power where such privileges are denied to us, or of any particular port, province, colony, or dependency thereof, as he shall see fit; and this proposition, which is embraced in a bill introduced elsewhere by my colleague from the Cape district in Massachusetts, has my hearty support and sympathy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAMERON. I present a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pa., opposing the passage of the so-called oleomargarine bill, and as the resolution is very short I ask that it may be read at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read if there be no objection.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

PITTSBURGH, PA., June 15, 1886.

Senator J. D. CAMERON:

At the regular meeting of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh held this day the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas a bill is now pending in Congress (which has already passed the House of Representatives) defining butter, also imposing a heavy tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine; and

Whereas such legislation will have a tendency to destroy an industry which has for its object the production of a cheap and wholesome food, of which more than 200,000,000 pounds are now produced and used in this country: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh is opposed to any legislation against this large and growing industry, and that copies of this resolution be wired and forwarded to the Senators from Pennsylvania with the request that they use their influence in defeating said bill.

JOHN F. DRAVO, President.
S. L. McHENRY, Secretary.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of the American Agriculture and Dairy Association and 461 dairy farmers of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the bill regulating and taxing imitation butter; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CULLOM presented the memorial of Isaac H. Knox and others, engaged in business at the National Stock-Yards at East Saint Louis, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of the oleomargarine bill on the ground that it would depreciate the value of cattle and destroy a legitimate industry; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the memorial of G. F. and E. C. Swift, of Chicago, Ill.; of citizens of New York, Boston, Baltimore, Washington, D. C., and 100 other prominent citizens of the United States, praying Congress to authorize the Secretary of War to contract with Charles Stoughton and his associates for the building of the Harlem River Canal for a sum not exceeding $1,295,000, including the right of way free to the United States Government, to be completed by July 4, 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HALE presented the petition of Emory K. Gott and 9 other captains of fishing vessels, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season; which was referred to the Committee on Fisheries.

He also presented the petition of F. P. Allen and others, of Sedgwick, Me., praying for the passage of the bill now before the Senate to regulate the sale of imitation butter; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. LOGAN. I present a petition of citizens of Libertyville, Ill., stating that:

The undersigned dairymen and butter-makers respectfully petition your honorable body for the adoption of the bill of the American Agricultural and Dairy Association.

This is the bill which passed the other House and is now before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I also present various petitions of the same purport from citizens of Crescent City, Saint Joseph, Oregon, Sparta, Godfrey, Onargo, Princeton, Chicago, Yellow Creek, Centennial, Chatham, and Saint Anne, all in the State of Illinois. I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN presented a petition of citizens of Colorado, praying that a land office be established at Akron, Colo.; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present, in support of the bill granting a pension to Mrs. Emily J. Stannard, widow of the late General Stannard, the affidavits of Dr. L. M. Bingham, Dr. Walter B. Carpenter, General William Wells, General P. P. Pitkin, Hon. E. R. Hord, Hon. John L. Barstow, Mr. John A. Arthur, Mr. Sayles Nichols, Hon. G. G. Benedict, General Theodore S. Peck, and General William W. Henry. I move the reference of the affidavits to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present sundry petitions from citizens of Livingston, Linn, Sullivan, and adjoining counties in Missouri, praying for the passage of the bill regulating the sale of and taxing imitation butter. They represent a very large number of the persons engaged in the dairy and agricultural interests in those counties. I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON presented resolutions adopted by the Traveling Men's Association of Iowa, favoring the passage of the bill to remove the tax or license now being levied upon commercial travelers for goods sold by them by sample in the several States and Territories; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VEST presented petitions of citizens of Chillicothe, Lathrop, Macon, and other localities in Missouri, praying for the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of George S. Coe, president of the American Exchange Bank; H. P. De Graaf, president of the Bowery National Bank; William Dowd, president of the Bank of North America; F. A. Potts, president of the New York, Susquehanna and Western Railway Company, and 101 other prominent citizens of New York city, praying Congress to authorize the Secretary of War to contract with Charles Stoughton and his associates for the building of the Harlem River Canal, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the American Agricultural and Dairy Association and 82 dairy farmers of Kansas, praying for the passage of the bill regulating the sale of and taxing imitation butter; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 855) for the relief of David Armstrong, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2117) for the relief of the estate of Francis M. Murray, deceased, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2646) authorizing the Postmaster-General to pay rent on certain buildings leased for post-offices, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GRAY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 21) for the relief of Adelicia Cheatham; and

A bill (H. R. 7809) for the relief of Edwin Stevens.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4527) granting a pension to Elizabeth Slenbaker, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2010) granting a pension to William Jumper, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1172) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Franklin Thompson, alias S. E. E. Seelye, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3384) for the relief of James M. Bacon, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5866) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Knoxville, Tenn., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 8142) granting a pension to Mrs. Annie S. Webb;

A bill (H. R. 7018) granting a pension to Aretus F. Loomis;

A bill (S. 2497) to increase the pension of James Johnston; and

A bill (H. R. 5715) granting a pension to Mary Sprague.

KANSAS CITY, FORT SCOTT AND GULF RAILWAY.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred yesterday the bill (H. R. 6391) to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, have instructed me to report back the same without amendment and to ask present action upon it.

I will state the circumstances which lead the committee to make this request. A similar bill passed both Houses and went to the President some two weeks ago. It was found after it had passed out of the possession of the two Houses that by a clerical error there had been left out of the provisions of the bill a small reservation of Indians across which the description of the direction of the road was found to lead, and it was necessary to include them in the provisions of the bill. The bill was called back for that purpose by the House of Representatives and the House of Representatives retraced all its steps by reconsideration till it came to the point where amendments to the bill were in order. Then the amendments, which were half a dozen or more, all of them verbal, having that purpose in view, and that only, were adopted by the other branch; and then the measure thus amended was sent here as a new bill. So it is necessary, if it pass, that it be read three times in the ordinary way as if it had never been here. It has been considered on its merits in both branches, and there appears to be no objection to it. It is so merely formal that I think the Senate would not object to having its consideration completed at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill reported by him at this time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Reserving the right to object for a minute, I ask the Senator whether the bill has the safety and repealing clauses in it?

Mr. DAWES. I believe it has. I prefer to have it read. I am quite confident it has. Let the bill be read.

Mr. MAXEY. The bill has that clause in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

Mr. DAWES. The clauses to which the Senator from Vermont referred are found in the twelfth section of the bill, which reads as follows:

> That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act; and the right of way herein and hereby granted shall not be assigned or transferred in any form whatever prior to the construction and completion of the road, except as to mortgages or other liens that may be given or secured thereon to aid in the construction thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 2665) granting a pension to John C. Rhoads; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2666) granting a pension to William Ogden; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2667) for the prevention and cure of contagious and infectious diseases in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2668) for the relief of Joseph R. Anderson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2669) for the relief of I. L. Cain; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 2670) granting an increase of pension to James H. Thomas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2671) granting one condemned cannon to the Grand Army Post at Ayr, Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 2672) to protect the freedom of commercial intercourse; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2673) granting an increase of pension to Garrett Wall; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2674) granting a pension to Will T. Jaccard; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GEORGE introduced a bill (S. 2675) for the completion of a public building at Santa Fé, N. Mex.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4232) to reimburse the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for losses incurred through the failure of the Exchange National Bank of Norfolk, Va., and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1486) to authorize the Denison and Washita Valley Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 3110) directing the Secretary of War to amend the record of Harrison Dewey; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 4,000 copies of the reports of the consuls of the United States on cattle-breeding and dairy farming; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 453) to forfeit the lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 4232) to reimburse the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for losses incurred through the failure of the Exchange National Bank of Norfolk, Va., and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 3110) directing the Secretary of War to amend the record of Harrison Dewey was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CONSULAR REPORTS ON CATTLE-BREEDING AND DAIRY-FARMING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

> Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 4,000 copies of the reports of the consuls of the United States on cattle-breeding and dairy-farming; 2,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 copies for the use of the State Department.

PUBLIC-LAND LAWS.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7887, to repeal all laws for the pre-emption of the public lands, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes, was announced as being before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

POSTAGE ON FOURTH-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask, in pursuance of the notice I gave on last Friday, that this order of business may be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate take up Order of Business 585, being Senate bill 1079.

Mr. CHACE. That I understand is the bill in regard to the fourth-class mail matter.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHACE. When the Senator makes his remarks on that bill I should like also to have the privilege of making some little reply. I should like the reply to go into the RECORD together with his remarks. If it would suit the Senator just as well to call the bill up to-morrow it would suit me much better. I am not prepared just at this time to go into the subject, and I suggest that he postpone his remarks until to-morrow.

Mr. HARRISON. To-morrow is set apart for the Calendar.

Mr. CHACE. This is on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the pending bill be informally laid aside so that he may be allowed to make his remarks on another bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to report an appropriation bill. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5201) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments. I ask that it be taken up for consideration at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill just reported. Is there objection?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will not object to that, retaining the right to the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, subject to the right of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. LOGAN. It is a very short bill and will take but a few moments.

By unanimous consent the bill (H. R. 5201) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 17, to increase the appropriation "for fees and expenses of examining surgeons" from $500,000 to $821,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the clause making appropriations "for the salaries of eighteen agents for the payment of pensions," after line 92, to insert:

And hereafter the provisions of section 3 of the act approved July 5, 1884, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes," are hereby extended and made applicable to all official mail matter of agents for the payment of pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LOGAN. Now, Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD the letter of the assistant Secretary of the Interior and the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions making the suggestions in reference to the amendments which have been made upon which the committee based their action. I desire also to have printed in the RECORD a comparative statement of the appropriations, estimates, &c., of last year and of this year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the papers referred to will be printed in the RECORD in connection with the Senator's remarks.

The papers are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, June 11, 1886.

SIR: This Department is in receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, inclosing copy of H. R. 5201, "an act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes," and requesting information if any additional appropriation will be required to be made therein, and, if so, the amount of same, in consequence of the act of March 19, 1886.

In reply thereto I transmit herewith a copy of a statement from the Commissioner of Pensions, to whom your letter of inquiry was referred.

It is his opinion that no additional appropriation will be necessary for the payment of the pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, the sum appropriated in the above-mentioned act, $75,000,000, being deemed sufficient.

The Commissioner, however, makes other recommendation relative to legislation that will the better enable him to adjust the business of his office in connection with the payment of pensions.

The views and recommendations expressed therein, I beg leave to state, meet the approval of this Department, and are respectfully submitted to the Senate Committee on Appropriations for appropriate action.

Very respectfully,

H. L. MULDROW, Acting Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 10, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by your reference dated the 9th instant, of a letter addressed to you on that date by Thomas P. Cleaves, clerk of the Committee on Appropriations of the United States Senate, who states that he is directed by the chairman of the committee to inclose a copy of House bill No. 5201, making appropriation for invalid and other pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, as well as a copy of the act of Congress approved March 19, 1886, increasing the pensions of widows and others, and asking whether any additional appropriation will be required to be made therein by reason of the passage of said act.

The Commissioner is of opinion that the $75,000,000 provided for in the pending bill will be ample for the payment of all current pensions during the fiscal year beginning July 1 next, as well of those now on the rolls as of those hereafter likely to be admitted, including the additional rights conferred by the act of March 19, 1886.

In this connection the Commissioner takes occasion to invite attention to the provisions of this bill in so far as they relate to the appropriation for clerk-hire and other necessary expenses of the agencies.

For clerk-hire, fuel, and lights the bill is believed to sufficiently provide, but for postage on letters to the Executive Departments and to pensioners, stationery, and other necessary expenses of the pension agents the $9,000 appropriated is largely insufficient.

For the nine months of the present fiscal year ending March 31 last the eighteen pension agents expended for the several items referred to amounts as follows:

For postage, $23,766.22; for stationery, $6,281.86, and other necessary expenses, $3,646.50, making a total of $33,694.58. For the remaining three months of the present fiscal year it is fair to assume that a sum one-third as great will be expended under these items, so that the gross amounts expended and to be expended during the present year will be $44,926.10.

The amount which will be required for these items for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, can not, in view of the increase in the pension-roll, be less than the sum stated herein, and I am of opinion that the appropriation of $9,000 for these items should be increased to $50,000.

The estimates for the fiscal year of 1887 contained no appropriation for postage on letters to the Executive Departments and to pensioners, and this omission was due to the fact that it was believed in view of the change in the method of paying pension agents, as provided by the act of March 3, 1885, there would be no difficulty in securing for them the use of the penalty frank envelope, a privilege which I am advised is being enjoyed by all similar officers in this Department in their official correspondence.

The existing law on this subject in terms excludes the pension agents from the list of those entitled to use said envelopes, and their exclusion is without doubt due to the fact that when the law was passed the agents received not only a salary of $4,000 per annum but an additional allowance at the rate of $15 per hundred for all vouchers prepared and paid at their agencies in excess of four thousand per annum. Compensation on account of vouchers was subsequently reduced to $12.50 per hundred and so continued until the act of March 3, 1885, directed that the fees on vouchers should be available only for the payment of clerk-hire at the agencies.

The compensation of pension agents is therefore at this time merely $4,000 per annum each, and the Government is required to pay all expenses incident to their official duties. The Commissioner can see no good reason why the pension agents should not be permitted to use this penalty franked envelope. It is to be desired upon a number of grounds.

This office has experienced great difficulty in adjusting intelligently the accounts of pension agents on account of this item of postage. There are no safeguards yet devised by which to determine even approximately what amount a pension agent can legitimately expend for postage in his official correspondence, the volume of which is uncertain, and the opportunity for illegitimate use of postage-stamps comparatively easy.

If an amendment to the pending bill can be added authorizing the use by the pension agents of these envelopes, and it become a law, each illegitimate use of the penalty envelope would be subject to detection and punishment.

Again, the Government derives no benefit from the appropriation in favor of pension agents for postage, as the receipts shown by the records of one department are offset by the expenditures of another. Then the labor incident to the use of postage-stamps, it will be seen, is considerable when it is remembered that there were 345,125 pensioners on the 30th of June last, that the roll is increasing, and that each of these pensioners had to be addressed at least four times in each fiscal year, not to speak of the numerous letters of inquiry to which the pension agents are required to respond.

The Commissioner is of opinion that the interest of the Government will be better served by the use of these envelopes than by the appropriation for postage, and he earnestly recommends that said amendment be passed as a part of the pending appropriation bill. If the amendment referred to does not become a law, the appropriation for postage, for stationery, and other necessary expenses should, as stated before, be increased from $9,000 to $50,000.

The appropriation provided in the pending bill for fees of examining surgeons is not sufficient for that purpose. I have had a careful examination and computation made of the accounts of examining surgeons for the first six months of the present fiscal year, and the amount necessary to pay them was $434,552.50, and upon this basis there will no doubt be required for the whole of this present year at least twice as much, that is to say, $869,105. In addition to this amount, there were remaining unpaid accounts of examining surgeons for preceding fiscal years amounting to $178,339.31.

To satisfy the accounts of examining surgeons during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, for services performed in that year, there will be required a sum not less than $1,000,000, and the Commissioner recommends that the amount of $500,000, which it is proposed to appropriate for this purpose in the pending bill, be increased to $1,000,000.

At the time the estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, were submitted, it was thought that $576,000 would be sufficient for fees and expenses of examining surgeons. This was based upon the experience of the office in prior years, but since the submission of the estimates the volume of business done by the examining surgeons has grown to such great proportions as to make the amount appropriated in the pending bill entirely inadequate for the purpose; hence the recommendation that the amount be increased from $500,000 to $1,000,000.

He further recommends that the limitation in the pending bill, that each member of an examining board shall receive the sum of $2 for each examination provided no more than five are examined in any one day, and that he shall receive only $1 for each examination in excess of five, be repealed. It is found also in the appropriation for the present fiscal year, approved March 3, 1885.

He is of opinion that there is no sufficient reason for denying to an examining surgeon the fee of $2 for each examination in which he participates, regardless of the number of applicants who appear.

Very respectfully,

JOHN C. BLACK, Commissioner.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOGAN. I now report from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. 5886) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887. I will state to the Senate that the bill is reported by the committee just as it came from the other House, with no amendments whatever, and it will take but a short time to consider it if the Senate will take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill just reported by him from the Committee on Appropriations. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to have the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill simply to record my vote against the bill, and to say further that in pursuance of what has been my purpose heretofore in regard to matters of the kind, I shall not vote for any more appropriations for the Military Academy at West Point until there is a change in the law whereby at least one-half of the appointees to fill the vacancies occurring in the Army shall be taken from civil life, whatever may become of the young gentlemen who graduate at West Point. My own belief is—I do not care to argue it at length—that we are building up in the exclusiveness which we are creating in the Army an aristocratic and anti-republican institution which will some day return to plague us. I therefore desire to express my view against this bill by casting my vote against it. I ask for the yeas and nays on its passage.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I do not see the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] with whom I am paired, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. My colleague [Mr. WHITTHORNE] is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] on all questions, but on this question the Senator from Oregon is at perfect liberty to vote if he chooses.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon (after having voted in the affirmative). I had forgotten the pair and withdraw my vote.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator need not do so.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Very well; let my vote stand.

Mr. CAMDEN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], but as I understand he would vote "yea" I will let my vote stand.

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN], who is absent, but I presume he would vote "yea" if present, and I vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is detained from the Chamber by sickness. He would vote "yea" if he were here.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 4; as follows:

YEAS—42.

Allison,	Cullom,	Hawley,	Mitchell of Oreg.,
Berry,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Payne,
Blair,	Dolph,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pugh,

Evarts,	Mahone,	Sabin,	Wilson of Md.
Fair,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Saulsbury,
George,	Morgan,	Stanford,

So the bill was passed.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask leave to file a brief statement explaining the bill to save me from the necessity of making remarks. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The statement will be printed in the RECORD unless objection be made.

The statement is as follows:

THE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is entitled to the floor on the bill which the Senate took up at his request.

Mr. ALLISON. Before my colleague proceeds I think I ought to state to the Senate that there are still five of the regular appropriation bills which have not yet reached the Senate, two of them the most important bills of the session—the legislative, executive, and judicial and the sundry civil bill. We are now within two weeks of the expiration of the fiscal year. In the nature of things it will be impossible for these bills to pass before the 1st day of July, as the Senate can not consider them by that time after they come from the House. I desire that the Senate should know that this is no fault of ours.

Mr. BECK. The naval appropriation bill had better not be omitted. That is an important one.

Mr. ALLISON. The two most important are the sundry civil, and the legislative, executive, and judicial. Of course the naval bill is also important.

In the nature of things, I repeat, it will be impossible to pass these bills before the 1st day of July; and whatever responsibility attaches to the failure to pass them can not be charged to the Senate and whatever embarrassments may result from their non-passage prior to the expiration of the fiscal year can not be charged to the Senate. I would state that there are no appropriation bills now pending before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. All that we have received from the House of Representatives have been disposed of.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have the consent of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to call up the joint resolution to print the report of the Commissioner of Labor, which was laid on the table yesterday for an arithmetical correction, which has been made. An addition of 4,000 copies was ordered to be printed.

I will explain to the Senate that the joint resolution providing for printing the first annual report of the Commissioner of Labor was before the Senate yesterday and its consideration nearly completed when an additional number of 4,000 copies to be printed was added, which required some little change in the figures of the appropriation, and it was temporarily laid on the table for the purpose of having the necessary correction made. I ask that the resolution be now taken up and concluded.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 183) providing for printing the first annual report of the Commissioner of Labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. The committee has amended its amendment. Only the second amendment need be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as now proposed by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the second section, so as to make it read:

That the sum of $18,808.20, or so much thereof as may be necessary to defray the cost of the publication of said report, and the further sum of $275, or so much thereof as may be necessary to defray the cost of wrapping 15,000 copies for the Department of the Interior, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

POSTAGE ON FOURTH-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

The bill (S. 1079) to regulate the rate of postage on fourth-class matter was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CHACE. Before the Senator from Iowa proceeds I wish to say that I was absent from the city last Monday when he gave notice that he would call this matter up to-day, or I should have asked the Senate to allow me to reply at once. It will not be convenient for me to reply immediately, and if the Senator goes on now, I shall ask the Senate on a week from to-day to permit me to submit some remarks in reply to the Senator from Iowa in regard to this matter.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, the author of the book entitled The Expansion of England commenced his first lecture therein contained with the following sentences, namely:

It is a favorite maxim of mine that history, while it should be scientific in its methods, should pursue a practical object; that is, it should not merely gratify the reader's curiosity about the past, but modify his views of the present and his forecast of the future. Now, if this maxim be sound, the history of England ought to end with something that might be called a moral. Some large conclusion ought to arise out of it; it ought to exhibit the general tendency of English affairs in such a way as to set us to thinking about the future and divining the destiny which is reserved for us.

The maxim here stated and the conclusion drawn from it apply as forcefully to those who are intrusted with affairs of government as they do to the writers of history. Facts which are of importance to the writers of history are none the less so to those who make and execute laws. The lawmaker who fails to see the close connection existing between the work of his predecessors and the conditions which require remedial or preservative action by him will rarely act with that considerate wisdom which alone can best conserve the true interests involved in public affairs. None of the disturbing conditions which exist in the affairs of this country will be rightly understood or properly adjusted if we fail to study the causes which have induced them. In this manner we may advance upon a knowledge of the general tendency of American "affairs in such way as to set us to thinking about the future and divining the destiny which is reserved for us."

We have some mighty problems demanding solution. No country ever had greater complexity in its affairs than has ours to-day. No lawmakers were ever confronted with more serious, delicate and exacting responsibilities than those of this Republic. Turn which way we may this truth appears. Externally and internally this truth commands our attention. It is present in our foreign affairs, in our domestic concerns, in our commerce, in our manufacturing and producing industries, in our financial systems, in our general business, in our employments, in our divisions of population, in the relations of wealth and poverty, in whatsoever we have that can be affected by the making or unmaking of laws. No man can be so little informed as not to know that there is much of discontent in respect of many things in this country; and he is an inapt reader of the signs of the times who does not realize that there is need for him to "modify his views of the present and his forecast of the future" if in these respects his judgment has led him to believe that the conditions which attend us are free from evil tendencies.

Mr. President, the subject embraced by the bill which we are now considering is one from which we may gather some lessons of wisdom. Why is this bill here? Such things do not come of their own accord. They are not the products of chance. It is not here because of any cause stated or intimated in the report of the committee. That report treats the subject of the bill as an isolated fact in the affairs of our national administration. This is a very mistaken view of the case. A careful consideration of the subject in connection with its surroundings will disclose that it is not an isolated fact, but, on the contrary, is one of a group in which it is an active force, sustaining close relations with each and every other member. And the misfortune of the country is that these facts and forces have too long and too persistently been treated as isolated factors in our national affairs.

The unrest and agitations which now disturb this country largely owe their existence to the unskillful treatment of the connected relations which the said subjects bear toward each other and to the general affairs of the country which has marked our past legislation. There are now pending in Congress many bills whose preparation and introduction were induced by the results which have sprung from the absence of considerate, studious, comprehensive action in our past legislative movements. We have bills for the regulation of interstate commerce, for the adjustment of the relations between labor and capital, for the solution of conflicts of employers and employed, for the elimination of alien landlordism, for the better protection of individuals and communities against the evil effects of harmful practices which have sprung from insufficiently guarded privileges and powers granted with good intent but without requisite and thoughtful caution, and many others of kindred character that might be mentioned. Why have these bills been introduced? Not because they relate to new subjects, nor because they have not been legislated on before. It is because results have been induced, so threatening in character, and so inimical to the general welfare, as to command our attention and enforce obedience.

Mr. President, what has induced so great attention in the matter of the regulation of interstate commerce? Is it merely because we have railroads in the country? Surely no one will contend that this is the cause. Railroads are necessary to our progress and prosperity. But we all realize that few subjects have ever caused more profound and determined agitation than that which embraces our transportation system and the methods of its administration. Many Congresses have given earnest and protracted attention to this subject without solving its problems or arriving at any comprehensive and definite result. Nor will we reach an adjustment of this subject and subdue the popular agitation, which it has induced, by mere denunciation of its elements of friction and evil. It must be studied in connection with its relations with many other things.

This course will lead us to conservatively care for all of the public, corporate, and private rights and interests which are connected with each other by indissoluble ties that make each a part of the whole. I have presented the features of this case which I now have in mind to the Senate on former occasions. But the more I reflect upon it the greater its significance appears, and it defines to my mind very clearly some of the legislative mistakes of the past. We have too often legislated in respect of subjects of great public concern as though they were isolated facts sustaining no important relations to other things. Our course in this regard has been marked with great singleness of purpose. This may be a good method in the matter of enforcing results, but it imports many dangers when employed in the formulation of public policies through whose operation we seek to evolve results.

When we have this latter purpose in hand we must keep in mind the relations which the subject commanding our immediate attention sustains toward other things to be affected by it when our legislation shall have made it an active force. And it seems to me that we have reached a point in our national progress presenting conditions which ought "to set us to thinking about the future and divining the destiny which is reserved for us," and of significance enough to suggest to the American statesman that the time has arrived when it may be well for him to "modify his views of the present and his forecast of the future."

Mr. President, popular demand is not always the safest guide for the legislator. Especially is this true if by legislation we are to understand such official movement as projects measures and policies with a purpose single to public good and general welfare. This is not always the character of legislative action, as this country has come to realize from many costly and unpleasant experiences. We have had much bad legislation in this country. But it has rarely been enacted with bad intent, and in almost every instance it has been enacted in response to popular demand. The people in each of these instances have had their minds fixed on accomplishing some definite purpose and have demanded legislation for its realization. Rarely do such demands pass unheeded. Almost always the legislative ear catches the sound, and the legislative mind busies itself in the formulation of prompt response. Many times the response has been much too prompt. Speed rather than caution has too frequently been the rule of legislation, and so it has often happened that the best-intentioned legislation responsive to popular demand has induced most unexpected and unwelcome results.

A few years ago the popular demand was pronounced for a pre-emption law, later for a homestead law. An affirmative response was given by Congress. Had a little more of studious care been observed in the enactment of those laws some of the results which have come to us from them and which we are now trying to change by further legislation could not have transpired. The purpose of those laws was to enable the people to secure homes on the public domain with the least cost, inconvenience, and delay compatible with the public interests they were designed to conserve. The pronounced policy of those laws was to multiply homes by making their acquisition inexpensive and limiting the number of acres that each person might acquire. This was a grand policy, and it has worked wondrous results.

But we are not satisfied with some of the practices which have obtained under those laws. While they have enabled hundreds of thousands of our people to acquire free, or at little cost, homes, and assured to the prudent comfort, if not fortune, they have also made possible foreign landlordism and boundless landed estates. With these latter we are now trying to deal through legislative action in such manner as to abolish both. We have come to realize that the ownership of vast estates in the lands of this country by persons who neither reside in the United States nor owe allegiance to the Republic is not an assuring fact of the presence of best conditions in our future.

And when this is supplemented by the fact that millions of acres of land have passed to the ownership of a few of our own citizens, and we realize that both of these threatening features of our national case were made possible by defects in legislation that was designed for wholly different results, we may well start the inquiry whether or not other laws carry in their seemingly wise, proper, and conservative lines possibilities which may develop into disturbers of our progress and peace.

Do we not all now realize how much of the perplexities of these times might have been avoided if, when the popular demand of but a few years ago induced the legislation which devoted empires of the public lands to the construction and development of our railway system, a hesitating and prudent forecast of the possibilities involved had marked the action of Congress? Had this obtained at that time we should have but little cause now to engage in wrestling with the difficult subject of the regulation of interstate commerce, nor would that commerce have been weighted down with a burden of nominal cost in the instrumentalities through which it operates of more than three times the actual expenditures involved in their creation.

True there might not have been the multitude of colossal private fortunes evolved that now make this country exceptional in that regard to almost all others. But if this were true we would now be rid of one of the most disturbing factors in the financial, commercial, and general business affairs of this country. It is possible that those gigantic gambling institutions commonly called stock exchanges might not have flourished in the more conservative conditions which painstaking prudence and study could have established through even slight modifications in the legislation to which I have referred. This would have been no calamity, as all thoughtful men will now admit. And had our course and legislation been such as to have avoided the results indicated another demoralizing presence in our present business system might not have appeared. I refer to those other organized instrumentalities of chance operations so baneful in their effects on values, the boards of trade, and other like organizations.

Mr. President, I have not time now to follow this train of thought into its comprehensive grasp of the details of causes of unrest, disturbance, and discontent which prevail in this country. It is enough for me to say in this connection that the conditions which have forced us to consider how we can devise legislative remedies are not of spontaneous growth, but come from causes imbedded in the defects of past governmental action, both national and State. The past has been too unmindful of the effects likely to result from the causes which it organized. We have been too intent on forcing rapid development to concern ourselves with anything else. We have been content to boast of so-called wondrous progress without care for or study of our danger charts. We seem to have believed that going fast was going safely. We are beginning to realize that something has gone wrong. We are not all likely to agree in our diagnosis of the case. This has long been evident from the conflict of proposed remedies. But there is one fact involved about which there will be but little dispute. I think that the tendency of the present time toward centralization will be admitted by all. There may be disagreements in respect of the ultimate effect of this tendency, but I doubt if there can be any as to its existence.

I do not use the term centralization in its political sense, and as applied to the movements of the Government. I use it in that more comprehensive sense which applies to the general conditions of the country and the complex affairs of our people. Almost every complaint which has addressed itself to Congress for a remedy has its origin in the general tendency of the times toward centralization. We see evidences of the truth of this statement on every hand and in all directions. It applies to capital, to the power of corporations, to industries, to methods of business, to the ownership of land, to the employments of men, and in all of these respects and the many others I will not now stop to name, its effects are prejudicial to the best interests of the country and to the best conditions of our people.

Practically the individual has been abolished in this country. Nothing is done but by combination, which is but one phase of centralization. Capital moves in this line, and, as a natural result, labor, in its defensive efforts, has associated, combined, centralized. Hence individualism has been suppressed. The man who toils for wages is no longer master of his own movements. The society or order to which he belongs determines when and how and for what and for whom he may work. Any system or condition of society, in any country, which enforces such results can not but be harmful. It is destructive of the doctrine on which our institutions rest, the equality of all men. There is not equality in any system which forces men to surrender their individuality and subjects them to the decrees and orders of associations in respect of their daily employments. Nor would the wage-workers of this country submit themselves to such conditions had not our methods of business forced them into defensive movements.

The independent, self-reliant man, free to consult his own necessities and to obey the dictates of his own judgment, will rarely fail of success. We have evidence of this in almost every line of our history and in every department of our activities. Thousands of names of men whose early experiences were in our fields, our mines, our workshops adorn the pages of our history which record the beautiful and wondrous stories of successful American lives. In politics and public affairs, in private occupations and personal ventures, in science and its bewildering unfoldings, in invention and its startling transformations, in commerce and its achievements, in trade and its sturdy struggles, in literature and its beautiful creations, in art and its priceless treasures, in wealth and its commanding influences, and, indeed, in every department of human endeavor wherein resolute men have won success and renown, we find in conspicuous places the names of men who began at the foot of the ladder and toilsomely worked their ways to its top. This was made possible by that freedom of individual action which allowed the ambitions and aspirations of the poor boy to find realizations in the triumphs of the successful man.

These things could not have been but for that American system of equality which recognized each man's right to order his own ways and assured him that freedom of personal action which enabled him to work his way from rear to front and from the bottom to the top. Hence whatever assaults this system of equality or interferes with this freedom of personal action or obstructs the forward and upward movements of our people is inimical to the true interests of every boy and man who must depend on his own exertions for success in life. Such things tend to the creation of classes in society and to impact them into social strata from which there is no escape. When this condition prevails the stratum into which the father was born receives the son, the grandson, and so the process goes on through the generations. The toiler of to-day is assured that his descendants will be toilers. The worst features of the Old World systems of society will be transferred to this country, to evolve the germs of discontent which may in time develop into social disorder and political revolution.

Mr. President, have we not already indications in this country of sufficiently serious import to put us on earnest inquiry in respect of the causes which have induced them. Is it not apparent that something has induced the workingmen of this country to believe that the time has come when they must abandon reliance on freedom of personal action, surrender individualism, and resort to defensive associations which absorb the units of workers into an aggregated control which marks the first stages of class stratification? I know that this is not a result desired by the workingmen of this country.

I know that great masses of them feel how hard a lot it is to be forced toward any such realization. They prefer the former and better conditions which assured to each and every man that masterful freedom of action and forceful possession of himself which has heretofore enabled so many of them to go to the front and to the top. And I feel that it is quite time for us to seriously consider whether or not there are defects in our public policies and laws resulting in tendencies and practices whose logical results are evidenced by the discontent of those who work in the fields and shops of this country, and is rapidly extending to other callings in the regions more or less remote from our great business centers.

We know that this discontent exists and that it is increasing and spreading to regions and employments which have not long been affected by it. We have also come to realize that these tendencies and practices have been induced, or at least made possible, by the character and provisions of some of our past and best-intentioned legislation. This result springs from a fact stated in the earlier part of my remarks to-day, when I said: We have often legislated in respect of subjects of great public concern as though they were isolated facts sustaining no important relations to other things.

An illustration of this statement is presented by the subject embraced in the bill and report now before the Senate. The bill proposes an increase of the rate of postage on fourth-class matter, and, when considered in connection with another bill touching the same subject, proposing a reduction of the postage on certain fourth-class matter, is, in substance and effect, a measure for doubling the rate on merchandise packages sent by mail. The introduction of the bill was induced by complaints, coming from various sources, representing that the present law relative to postage on merchandise packages is an active and effective instrumentality in the matter of centralizing trade in the few great cities of the country to the serious injury of the general mercantile interests in all other sections of the Union.

The introduction of the bill served one practical purpose. It at once disclosed how far we have advanced toward the centralization of mercantile trade in the great cities. The first assault made upon the measure came in the form of a charge that it was induced by the express companies, and that they had probably used money to secure its introduction into Congress. This was a valuable suggestion, inasmuch as it disclosed a knowledge on the part of those making it that the transportation of merchandise by mail had reached such vast proportions that it was so materially interfering with the business of the express companies as to cause them to move on Congress for its abolition. This was a definite suggestion touching the magnitude of the mercantile carrying trade conducted by the Government by means of the mail.

Following upon the charge that the express companies were the instigators of the movement, the merchants and advertising agencies of the great cities set the newspapers at work and denunciations came to hand thick and fast. But the articles published in the city papers were not always of the most discreet character; for they, too, served to disclose the magnitude of the retail trade of the city merchants carried on through the mails to the injury of the business of the local merchants throughout the country. City merchants had themselves interviewed and their statements were given to the public by the newspapers. The press of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia was prolific in this kind of literature, supplemented by editorial articles. But the effect of it all was to show how this trade by mail had mounted into tens of millions of dollars. The New York Tribune, in an article introductory to interviews had with some of the leading merchants of that city, said:

The large dry-goods firms in New York and other cities, who have built up an enormous trade by correspondence in the last ten years, are naturally indignant at the bill which strikes at this system, which puts city and country customers almost on a par as regards ease of selection and cheapness of delivery, and has increased and stimulated high-class shopping to the benefit of everybody but the express companies and the local dealers.

And then in the interviews which follow may be found such expressions as these:

We do not pay the charge on goods in small parcels either by mail or express. If the rate is doubled the loss falls on the out-of-town customer. * * * The merchants here will take some concerted action on this bill soon.

Another merchant in the same column is reported as saying:

The passage of Senator WILSON's bill will damage our country trade, however, seriously.

And still another:

We are opposed to this bill because it will prevent shopping by out-of-town people.

And yet another:

The passage of the Wilson bill would be a hardship to all the large dry-goods houses. * * * The loss to the New York merchants alone would amount to several millions a year if we have to fall back on the express companies for everything.

Another New York paper remarked as follows about the bill and the merchants of that city, namely:

Merchants of this city who have built up a large trade with country customers through the mails are very much interested in the bill introduced in the Senate by Senator WILSON, of Iowa, proposing an increase in the rate of postage on fourth-class matter from 1 to 2 cents an ounce. Hundreds of merchants here oppose the bill, thinking that it is destined to materially injure a business which since the reduction in fourth-class rates they have built up to one of very large proportions. Most of the large retail firms dealing in dry goods and fancy goods have departments with large numbers of clerks employed who do nothing but attend to orders received by mail for goods to be shipped to all parts of the country by mail or express.

I might multiply evidences of the magnitude of the retail trade by mail to an almost endless extent and from others of the great cities, but do not deem it necessary so to do. There is, however, some official testimony upon the subject which I deem of sufficient importance to present. It is an official statement prepared by the postmaster of New York showing the transactions of that office in respect of the several classes of postal matter handled during the last fiscal year. The statement is as follows, namely:

Statement of the character and quantity of packages of mail matter of the fourth class (ordinary and registered) passing through the post-office of New York, and of the various kinds of merchandise and other articles inclosed therein.

FOURTH-CLASS MATTER—ORDINARY.

The statistics called for as to this class will be found in the fourth item of the table below, under its appropriate head. It has been thought advisable to give also, for purposes of comparison, those relating to first, second, and third class matter. Examination of the table will clearly show the different sources of the postal revenue and the causes of deficiencies therein. The figures given are those for the last fiscal year.]

A study of this exhibit, keeping in view the fact that it relates to a single office, will readily disclose the vast proportions to which the merchandise package business by mail has grown, and how small a percentage of the postal revenue it pays, and the same officer states concerning registered packages that—

It is estimated that 75 per cent. of the parcels registered at this office are sent by merchants to their customers throughout the country. Dry goods, clothing, boots and shoes, bonnets and other millinery goods, gloves, tools, whips, cheap watches, toys, fancy articles, &c., make up their contents.

A large proportion of these articles is sent long distances, many going across the continent to San Francisco, Cal., and other remote points. A careful estimate of the cost of transporting merchandise packages by mail shows that the Government sustains a loss on each one carried over 200 miles, and this accounts for a very large percentage of the deficiency in postal revenue. Hence the Government at a heavy loss to itself puts the retail merchants of the great cities in direct competition with local dealers the country over, and thus aids in the centralization of the business concerned in those centers of trade. Could it be expected that this process should be continued without attracting attention and inducing complaint? And when we consider the magnitude of the retail trade with remote regions the merchants of the great cities have built up, need we wonder at the sharp opposition they have organized to this bill?

The character of the complaints which came to me, both before and after the introduction of the bill, show that its subject embraces more than the questions of cheap postage and postal revenue. One correspondent said:

I never go the post-office without being vexed at what I see. Almost every mail brings bundles of goods of some kind to those who ought to buy at home and in this way help to keep our town prosperous. The people are fooled by all sorts of circulars and advertisements sent here from the cities, and they get no better bargains than us merchants here could give them for the same kind of goods if trade would stay at home.

Another said:

This thing of the Government helping New York and other big-city merchants to compete with us in the smaller towns is an outrage. It takes away from us most of the cash trade in many things, and leaves us all of the credit business. The customers that order from the big-city houses by mail and get their goods that way have to pay cash, and the city houses have no risks to run. But we have to do all of the credit business and take all the risks. It is not right. It hurts our business and our town and ought to be stopped.

And yet another wrote:

I am glad you are trying to do something to stop this city retail business by mail. I have been a merchant here for over ten years, and I have noticed our own local trade going away from us to the cities. This is hurting us badly, and I do not think it is right for the Post-Office Department to do this work for city merchants, and I hope your bill will pass; for the way this thing is going it not only hurts the business here, but it does not help the people who buy away from home. We could do as well by them as the city merchants do if they would only give us a chance. It is all stuff about it making goods cheap for the people.

Very many letters of like character have come to me from different sections of the country, and others presenting different and very pertinent views of the subject. Here is an extract from one of the latter. The writer says:

In this town there is one man who does more business in the course of a year than any merchant or firm in the place. He has no capital invested, and does not need any; but still he does more business than any of us, and makes more clear money. He solicits orders in town and country, and sends them to Chicago, New York, and other cities. His stock in trade is a lot of illustrated catalogues, pamphlets, &c., and even these do not cost him anything. His business is all cash, but he does not even pay any taxes. When the assessor comes around this man has nothing to put down on the tax-book; but when the assessor calls on me and the other merchants and business men here he finds us with stocks of goods, capital, and store-houses. We go down on the book and have to pay the taxes to meet the public expense. We can not feel that this is right, and the Government ought not to help put this wrong on us.

It would be difficult to find any rule in political economy to refute that correspondent's statement or to negative his declaration; but his is not an isolated case. Indeed, there is scarcely a phase of business experience that is not presented by one or more of my correspondents. I select the following as an additional example. The correspondent says:

I read that interview with you that was printed in the Inter-Ocean. I think you are right. There is too much of this thing of running everything into the cities going on. I know you are right when you say that the low rate of postage on goods carried by mail is hurting local business in all of the towns. It is not only doing this, but it is affecting the value of property, too. I own two business houses in this town. The business that goes away from here by mail has reduced their value not a little. The merchants who occupy them say that so much of the best trade goes to Chicago and other cities that they must have lower rents; and I hear the same said by other men, and I know it is the same in other towns.

These are not frivolous complaints. They are all full of meaning. They are indications of the rapid formation of an additional cause of discontent, the effects of which will be of more universal application than any other now existing; for they will operate in greater or less degree on every community in the land, and Congress is allowing this formative process to go on without any adequate excuse, and withholding all effort to provide a remedy even to the limited extent of the pending bill. And this condition is allowed to continue in spite of the advice of one of the best informed officers in the postal service. For when this bill came before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate it was referred to the Postmaster-General with request that he give his views concerning it and obtain those of the postmaster at New York.

The report of the committee quotes from the reply of the Postmaster-General and shows that both he and his Third Assistant are opposed to the passage of the bill, but it wholly ignores the response of the postmaster at New York, who, in the matter of practical knowledge of the present system, is by far the best qualified to speak on the subject. In his letter addressed to the Postmaster-General, who, at the instance of the committee, had directed him to communicate his views touching the bill and its subject, he expressed himself as follows, namely:

POST-OFFICE, NEW YORK, N. Y., OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER,
February 17, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of 10th instant, inclosing a copy of Senate bill No. 1079, and requesting an approximate statement of the character and quantity of fourth-class packages and the kind or kinds of merchandise contained in such packages passing through this office.

In reply I beg leave to say that I have caused the desired statement to be prepared, and inclose the same herewith.

In answer to your further request for such suggestions and information on the subject-matter of the bill as I may be able to furnish, I have to say that the increase in postage rates for which it provides is in my opinion an important step in much-needed postal legislation; that the speedy enactment of the bill is in every way desirable; and that the interests of the Post-Office Department (and consequently those of the public) would be greatly promoted if such action were followed by further legislation in the same direction.

This is the official opinion of a man who is brought into never-ceasing contact with the subject of which he speaks. It can not be said that his judgment is tempered by the bias of his local surroundings. New York merchants desire a continuance of the present system. He says that it should be changed, and that the bill reported adversely by the committee is an important step in much-needed postal legislation, and that its speedy enactment is in every way desirable. But the judgment of this well-informed officer will not now be accepted by Congress. The reform proposed will not now prevail. The tendency of the present times is against it. We must wait until the evil gets its full growth.

We are repeating the mistake which attended the development of the evils which all now admit attend our transportation system, and are not likely to attempt its correction until it shall have become strong enough to resist, possibly for years, all efforts in that direction. But the time will come in this regard when the American legislator will be forced to "modify his views of the present and his forecast of the future" relative to this subject, as he was forced to do in respect of the transportation question in its relations to interstate commerce.

Mr. President, for years we have been accustomed to hear denunciations of the so-called railway kings. Some of these denunciations have been and are reasonable, some unreasonable. The men so denominated are comparatively few in number, all possessing great wealth, and residing at a few of the principal business centers of the country. It was not the men or their wealth that engendered the bad feelings manifested by the denunciations which have been heaped upon them. The cause is to be found in the uses of the power they possessed over the business and general interests of the people. This is why Congress has struggled for years to regulate their methods. Success has not yet been reached in this regard.

We still have that conflict on our hands, and while it progresses we have warning that our railway kings are to have the companionship of merchant princes; and that, in combination, they will carry on the movement toward a more perfect business and capital centralization in the great cities. This will tend to multiply causes of discontent and force dangerous factors into our political affairs, and we may now assure ourselves that the time will come when the people of this country will resolutely resist the domination of the great cities and enforce their demand for the enactment of laws to put an end to the now well-defined tendency of the times toward centralization.

He is an inapt reader of passing events who can not see in our present conditions abundant cause "to set us to thinking about the future and divining the destiny which is reserved for us." And if we will but settle down to this task with serious purpose to resolve it we will not fail to discover that we are not conserving the best interests of the country by allowing the present tendencies to uninterruptedly go on; that our drift has been, and now is, too decidedly toward the establishment of dominating and, in a certain sense, autocratic aggregations. The excitement which has attended the phenomenal movements of the forces that have wrought out the many admirable, not to say wondrous, results of our much-applauded progress has closed our ears to the voice of caution and shut our eyes to the danger-signals that have been planted along our way.

Our headlong speed has been an exhilaration, and we have been all too unmindful of the character of the methods that have promoted it. Whatever has promised a quick result, a speedy gain, a new development, a phenomenal transformation, an exceptional experience in harmony with desire has been embalmed in our laws and public policies without the accompaniments which prudent forecast of the possibilities involved would have invoked and established. And this explains why it is that, now that many of the possibilities have resolved themselves into facts, we are casting about for counteracting forces through which to correct the errors of the past, and accounts for the presence of the many bills now pending in Congress in respect of the several subjects and interests to which I had reference in the earlier part of my remarks. For years such bills have been pressed in Congress. Each succeeding year has added force to the insistence with which they have been pressed.

The present session of Congress is likely to realize the enactment of some of them. Those that fail will be here again, and in time those that deserve success will overcome the resistance now opposed by the aggregations of wealth and influence and persuasion and interest and tenacity, and take their places among the laws of the land and the reforms of the times. Some of them may have to wait until conditions grow worse and more harm shall have been done. This is likely to be the case with the effort, now unsuccessful, to reform the evils attendant upon the system of transportation of merchandise packages in the mails at a positive loss to the Government revenues, the aggravation of the causes of discontent indicated by the letters from which I have quoted, and the unsatisfactory condition of the various characters of business involved which is sure to arise from continued and absorbing centralization in the great cities. I have made an effort at reform in this regard.

For the present it is defeated. Time and the worse phases of experience will ultimately bring it success. It were better it should come now. This is the lesson taught by our experiences in the other fields to which I have referred. What we have learned in them will be repeated in the one to which the present case relates. Then will come the remedy, but its work will be far more difficult than if attempted now. The country will then understand that it is not a question of cheap postage confronting it, but a demoralized condition of business which no people can stand and prosper.

PUBLIC-LAND LAWS.

Mr. DOLPH. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHACE in the chair). The regular order will be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That section 2299 and section 2301, and chapter 4 of title 32, excepting sections 2275, 2276, 2283, 2286, and 2288, of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby repealed: Provided, however, That this repeal shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accruing under said laws, but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated upon surveyed or unsurveyed lands before the 1st day of July, 1886, may be perfected, upon due compliance with law, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitation, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed; that all entries made under the pre-emption laws, on which final proof and payment may have been made and certificates issued, and to which there are no adverse claims originating prior to final entry, and which may have been sold, after final entry, to bona fide purchasers, for a valuable consideration, shall be confirmed and patented upon presentation of satisfactory proof to the Land Department of such sale: And provided further, That any person who has not heretofore had the benefit of the pre-emption law, and who has failed, from any cause, to perfect title to a tract of land heretofore entered by him under the homestead law, may make a second homestead entry in lieu of the pre-emption privilege hereby repealed; but this provision shall not apply to persons who shall perfect title to lands under the pre-emption or homestead laws under proceedings already initiated: And provided further, That all outstanding certificates of deposit on account of surveys heretofore issued under the provisions of sections 2401, 2402, and 2403 of the Revised Statutes, and acts supplemental thereto, shall be receivable as cash (except for fees and commissions) in the sale and disposal of public lands, at the land offices at which such certificates are now receivable in commutation of homestead and in payment for pre-emption claims: And provided further, That all certificates heretofore issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to soldiers, or their widows, or their minor children, under section 2306 of the Revised Statutes, may be located by the original beneficiaries, their heirs, legal representatives, or assigns; and upon such location patent shall issue in the name of the locator.

SEC. 2. That an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to encourage the growth of timber on the Western prairies,'" approved June 14, 1878, and all laws supplementary thereto or amendatory thereof, be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, That this repeal shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accruing under said laws, but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated before the 1st day of July, 1886, may be perfected, upon due compliance with law, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitation, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed: And provided further, That the following words of the last clau e of section 2 of said act, namely, "That not less than twenty-seven hundred trees were planted on each acre," are hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. That an act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, approved March 3, 1877, is hereby amended by adding thereto the following sections:

"SEC. 4. That at the time of filing the declaration hereinbefore required, the party shall also file a map of said land, which shall exhibit a plan showing the mode of contemplated irrigation, and which plan shall be sufficient to thoroughly irrigate and reclaim said land, and prepare it to raise ordinary agricultural crops, and shall also show the source of the water to be used for irrigation and reclamation. Persons entering or proposing to enter separate sections, or fractional parts of sections, of desert lands, may associate together in the construction of canals and ditches for irrigating and reclaiming all of said tracts, and may file a joint map or maps showing their plan of internal improvements.

"SEC. 5. That no land shall be patented to any person under this act unless he or his assigns shall have expended in the necessary irrigation, reclamation, and cultivation thereof, by means of main canals and branch ditches, and in permanent improvements upon the land, at least $3 per acre of the whole tract reclaimed and patented, in the manner following: Within one year after making entry for such tract of desert land as aforesaid, the party so entering shall expend not less than $1 per acre in the necessary irrigation, reclamation, and cultivation of said tract, in the construction of main or branch ditches to or upon the same; and he shall in like manner expend the sum of $1 per acre during the second and also during the third year thereafter, until the full sum of $3 per acre is expended in the construction of canals and ditches to irrigate, reclaim, and cultivate said tract of desert land. Said party shall file during each year, with the register, proof, by the affidavits of two or more credible witnesses, that the full sum of $1 per acre has been expended in such necessary improvements during such year, and the manner in which expended, and at the expiration of the third year a map or plan showing the character and extent of such improvements. If any party who has made such application shall fail during any year to file the testimony aforesaid, the lands shall revert to the United States, and the 25 cents advanced payment shall be forfeited to the United States, and the entry shall be canceled. Nothing herein contained shall prevent a claimant from making his final entry and receiving his patent at an earlier date than hereinbefore prescribed, provided that he then makes the required proof of reclamation to the aggregate extent of $3 per acre: Provided, That proof be further required of the cultivation of one-eighth of the land.

"SEC. 6. That this act shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued under said act of March 3, 1877, but all bona fide claims heretofore lawfully initiated may be perfected, upon due compliance with the provisions of said act, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitation, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed; or said claims, at the option of the claimant, may be perfected and patented under the provisions of said act, as amended by this act, so far as applicable.

"SEC. 7. That at any time after filing the declaration, and within the period of three years thereafter, upon making satisfactory proof to the register and receiver of the reclamation and cultivation of said land to the extent and cost and in the manner aforesaid, and substantially in accordance with the plans herein provided for, and that he or she is a citizen of the United States, and upon payment to the receiver of the additional sum of $1 per acre for said land a patent shall issue therefor to the applicant or his assigns: Provided, however, That additional proofs may be required at any time within the period prescribed by law, and that the claims or entries made under this or any preceding act shall be subject to contest, as provided by the law relating to homestead cases, for illegal inception, abandonment or failure to comply with the requirements of law, and upon satisfactory proof thereof shall be canceled, and the lands and moneys paid therefor shall be forfeited to the United States.

"SEC. 8. That the provisions of the act to which this is an amendment, and the amendments thereto, shall apply to the State of Colorado."

SEC. 4. That section 2275 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"Where settlement with a view to pre-emption or homestead has heretofore been made, and where settlement with a view to homestead shall hereafter be made, before the survey of the lands in the field, which are found to have been made on sections 16 or 36, those sections shall be subject to the claim of such settler under the pre-emption or homestead law; and if they, or either of them, have been or shall be reserved or pledged for the use of schools or colleges in the State or Territory in which the lands lie, other lands of like quantity are appropriated in lieu of such as may be patented to pre-emptors or homestead settlers; and other lands are also appropriated to compensate deficiencies for school purposes where sections 16 or 36 are fractional in quantity, or where one or both are wanting by reason of the township being fractional, or from any natural cause whatever."

SEC. 5. That section 2289 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2289. Every person who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of twenty-one years if a male, or at the age of eighteen years if a female, and is a citizen of the United States, or who has filed his declaration of intention to become such, as required by the naturalization laws, shall be entitled to enter one quarter-section, or a less quantity, of unappropriated public lands, to be located in a body in conformity to the legal subdivisions of the public lands; and every person owning and residing on land may, under the provisions of this section, enter other land lying contiguous to his land, which shall not, with the land so already owned and occupied, exceed in the aggregate 160 acres."

SEC. 6. That section 2288 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2288. Any bona fide settler under the pre-emption, homestead, or other settlement law shall have the right to transfer, by warranty against his own acts, any portion of his claim for church, cemetery, or school purposes, or for the right of way of railroads, canals, or ditches for irrigation or drainage across it; and the transfer for such public purposes shall in no way vitiate the right to complete and perfect the title to his claim."

SEC. 7. That any person entitled to enter a homestead under section 2289 of chapter 5 of the Revised Statutes shall, by complying with all the provisions of said chapter relating to the entry of homesteads, be entitled to make one entry as a homestead of one half-section or less of unappropriated mountainous land, as defined by this section, and in a compact form. Any 40-acre tract of the surveyed public lands, exclusive of mineral lands, three-fourths of which is so mountainous and rough that it can not be plowed and cultivated, shall be deemed mountainous land within the meaning of this section, which fact shall be ascertained by proof of two or more credible witnesses under oath, whose affidavits shall be filed in the proper land office. The determination of what is mountainous land shall be subject to the decision and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior, who may provide for cross-examination of witnesses and for the production of proof on behalf of the United States before the register and the receiver as to the character of the lands at the date of the application or of final entry: Provided, That all the provisions of the homestead law relating to final proof, fees, contests, citizenship, relinquishments, residence, death, and transfers of the homestead claim shall apply to entries under this section: And provided further, That this section shall only apply to and take effect in the States of California, Oregon, Colorado, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, Montana, Utah, Wyoming, Arizona, and New Mexico.

SEC. 8. That in all cases under the pre-emption and homestead laws, and under this act, all contests or protests on the part of the Government, or any individual, concerning the land entered, shall be instituted within ninety days after final entry and issue of the duplicate receiver's receipt, and not afterward: Provided, That whenever it shall appear upon the face of the papers returned to the Commissioner's office that a clerical error has been committed, such entry may be suspended, upon proper notification to the claimant, through the local land office, until such error has been corrected: Provided further, That after final proof of the claimant and the issuing of the duplicate receiver's receipt, if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that fraud has entered into the title so acquired by the claimant, unless it shall appear that the land has been sold or conveyed to a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, the Commissioner shall suspend the issuing of the patent for the same, and file with the United States Attorney-General notice of such suspension of the patent, with his reasons therefor; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence proceedings at once in the proper court to set aside such title, if in his judgment such proceedings can be maintained. This section shall apply to all cases of suspended entries heretofore made under the United States pre-emption and homestead acts: Provided, That after the lapse of two years from date of the issuance of the receiver's receipt upon the final entry of any tract of land under the homestead or pre-emption laws or under this act, and when there shall be no pending contest or protest against the validity of such entry, the entryman shall be entitled to a patent conveying the land by him entered, and the same shall be issued to him; but this proviso shall not be construed to require the delay of two years from the date of said entry before the issuing of a patent therefor.

SEC. 9. That suits by the United States to vacate and annul any patent heretofore issued shall only be brought within five years from the passage of this act, and suits to vacate and annul patents hereafter issued shall only be brought within five years after the date of the issuance of such patents.

SEC. 10. That hereafter no public lands of the United States not heretofore offered at public sale, except abandoned military or other reservations, isolated and disconnected fractional tracts authorized to be sold by section 2455 of the Revised Statutes, and mineral and other lands the sale of which at public auction has been authorized by acts of Congress of a special nature having local application, shall be sold at public sale or be subject to private entry.

SEC. 11. That an act entitled "An act to provide additional regulations for homestead and pre-emption entries on public lands," approved March 3, 1879, and section 2 of an act entitled "An act relating to the public lands of the United States," approved June 15, 1880, are hereby repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands as a substitute for the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss the bill at length. The Committee on Public Lands in the Forty-eighth Congress reported a bill containing many of the provisions of the present bill and it passed the Senate. By that bill it was proposed to repeal the pre-emption law, the timber-culture law, the desert-land act, and to amend the homestead law in some particulars. The bill had previously passed the House of Representatives, but owing to the lateness of the session and the pressure of business in the House the bill was never afterward taken up in that body and no action was had upon the Senate amendments. So the bill failed.

At the present session the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate spent several days examining the question of amendments to the general land system, and after careful consideration reported a bill. The bill with some other bills which had been introduced on subjects embraced in the bill reported by the committee was referred to the Secretary of the Interior, and a report was received from him in regard to several of the provisions of the bill reported by the committee. The committee then re-examined the whole matter, made some modifications to the bill first reported, and adopted many suggestions made by the Secretary of the Interior, and reported a second bill covering the same ground and intended to take the place of the first.

Then a bill came from the other House which had passed that body repealing the pre-emption law, the timber-culture act, and the desert-land law. That bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and the matter was again to some extent examined by the committee, and they reported back the House bill with an amendment substituting the Senate bill which had been perfected by the committee and reported.

By the amendment of the committee to the House bill the repeal of the pre-emption law is proposed, saving the right of all persons who have initiated claims under the law, allowing them to be perfected and title to be secured as if the law had not been repealed, and also providing that where a person has never had the benefit of the pre-emption law, and but for the repeal of that law might have taken a pre-emption claim, who has made heretofore a homestead entry, and for any reason has failed to secure his homestead, may make another homestead entry, thus attempting to provide that no person entitled to make a settlement under the homestead law shall be deprived of acquiring a homestead from the public lands.

The bill as reported by the Senate committee as an amendment to the pending bill also proposes the repeal of the timber-culture act, but in the like manner saving the rights of all persons who have initiated claims under the act, or who shall have done so before the time specified in the act, which is July 1, I think, may proceed to perfect their title as if the pending measure had not been passed.

In the bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands at the Forty-eighth Congress and which passed the Senate the repeal of the desert-land act was proposed. Upon further consideration the committee have concluded that its repeal would be unwise; there is a large area of the public lands, containing 500,000,000 of acres, which are desert and worthless without irrigation, which never can be occupied and title acquired to them under the homestead or pre-emption law. The committee have proposed certain amendments to the law.

Under the law as it stands and under the amendments proposed a person who takes a desert-land claim must pay the Government a dollar and a quarter an acre. He must also when he makes application to enter a claim show by a map to be filed in the local land office his plan for irrigation, which must be sufficent to irrigate the land he proposes to enter. He must then annually expend a dollar an acre upon his claim for three successive years. Each year he must make proof before the local land office that he has expended $1 per acre in the construction of his irrigating ditches; and if he fails for any one year to make the proof his claim is to be canceled and he loses the first payment, which is 25 cents per acre; and at the end of the three years, if he is then a citizen of the United States, and has shown that he has made the necessary expenditure of $3 per acre, $1 every year for three years in succession, and pays to the Government the further sum of $1 an acre, he is to receive title to the land.

The committee believe that these amendments, which I may say are approved by the Interior Department, will place the law beyond the field of speculation, will secure the reclamation of desert lands before any title can be acquired from the Government, and will prevent their being held for any considerable time by persons who enter them without the intention of making reclamation of them. The conditions are very hard, considering that the Government is giving away all valuable agricultural land; but the expenditure of $3 an acre in reclamation and a payment of a dollar and a quarter an acre to the Government, although onerous under the law, will be better than to have no law by which title can be acquired in these desert-land tracts.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will not deem it an interruption or troublesome, I should like to ask him a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. DOLPH. I do; but I will state to the Senator from New Hampshire that I am not intending to make a speech. I simply wish to make a statement in regard to what is contained in the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I was going to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. DOLPH. I do.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to ask the Senator in regard to the onerous charge in the terms under which title to desert lands could be obtained, if in his judgment it would not be much better for the individual who is in search of a homestead even upon desert lands to reduce the amount that the amendment proposes shall be paid? Would it not be sufficient security to the interests of the public and certainly more just to the individual who as a rule must be a poor man, to let him have title to the land upon an aggregated payment of $1.25 an acre, which is now required under the pre-emption law, and all that is required for obtaining the most valuable agricultural lands? Would not that be likely to secure the necessary expenditure for irrigation, without which of course the whole investment is useless; and if that should be so, is it not really a more just provision for the settler himself?

Mr. DOLPH. I will state to the Senator from New Hampshire that these lands can not be reclaimed without the expenditure of considerable sums of money; they are absolutely worthless in their present condition. I do not believe that the requirement that there shall be expended upon he land the $3 per acre is an unwise provision, but I do think that the Government might well afford to sell the lands say at 25 cents an acre, because, as I said, they are of no value whatever to the Government until they are reclaimed by a large expenditure of money. But I think in the disposition of them the man who enters desert lands should be required to reclaim them, or at least to extend a given sum, and that a considerable sum, upon them, before the title passes from the United States, so that they shall not pass into private hands until they are actually reclaimed and made productive.

Mr. BLAIR. We give the agricultural lands to homesteaders for nothing. Why would it not be a just thing in this bill to provide for the expenditure of $3 per acre in the way of improvements, for irrigation purposes, and then the land having been thus made available and valuable, let the title to the land in tracts of 160 acres go gratis, as it does now under the homestead law, remitting the $1.25 and making the bill provide for the expenditure of $3 per acre for the purposes of irrigation?

Mr. DOLPH. I will state to the Senator that it is utterly impracticable to secure the reclamation of these lands in quantities of 160 acres. In many places the water has to be brought 30 or 40 miles, at a large expense for ditching, and whoever enters and reclaims these desert lands must have some capital in order to enable him to do it. I think the quantity mentioned in the pending bill and in the original act of one section is the minimum amount that can be retained in the bill, and make it practicable to secure the reclamation of these lands.

I see what the Senator from New Hampshire is driving at. He thinks, I judge, that the provisions of the bill are a hardship upon the people who are to enter these lands. I myself think they are unusual. I think that they are unjust when we compare them with the disposition the Government is making of its arable land, its agricultural land. I would much rather see the dollar and a quarter an acre required to be expended upon the land for its reclamation before the title passed from the Government than to see it paid to the Government, because the Government is benefited and the country is benefited by the reclamation of these lands, which, as I said, are utterly valueless without the expenditure. But all the members of the Committee on Public Lands did not share in my views. Many of the Senators and Members of Congress are uninformed in regard to the arid region. No man can conceive of the character of that country until he has been over it and has seen it for himself. It is very difficult to explain to the satisfaction of people who have never seen it what is necessary for the reclamation of the desert land and the development of that country. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I was glad to take so much as we could get, to retain the desert-land act, with additional onerous provisions which would permit the acquisition of titles by private persons to the desert land and secure its reclamation.

Passing from the question of the amendment of the desert-land act, two important provisions for the amendment of the homestead law are made by our substitute for this bill. One is to amend the first section of the homestead law so that a woman eighteen years of age and a male twenty-one years of age may take a homestead. As the law now stands both have to be twenty-one years of age; but that is the less important of the two.

The other is a provision for the repeal of the commutation clause of the homestead law, which is that a homestead settler after having resided upon and cultivated his homestead claim for a period of six months in the manner provided by the pre-emption law may virtually convert his homestead claim into a pre-emption claim and pay for it as such. The bill that came from the House proposed to extend the time of residence and cultivation required to thirty months and allow the commutation feature of the homestead law to remain. With that change I myself believe that the House bill in that respect is right; but a majority of the committee thought that the commutation clause should be entirely repealed, so that the Government would no longer receive, except for desert lands, any compensation whatever for the public lands, that the five years' residence and cultivation should be required in every case of a homestead entry; and that is the bill as reported by the Senate committee.

There are some other general provisions relating to the conduct of the business concerning the public lands in the Interior Department, some of them conferring additional power upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, some of them intended to relieve them from responsibility and to point out the course of action which they should pursue, and all intended to simplify and unify and make harmonious the practice in the General Land Office. Those provisions can be better explained as they come up one by one if any objection should be made to them. I shall not take any further time of the Senate in making any explanation of the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I wish to attract the attention of my colleague to this question. On page 6, line 42, I find the following:

That all certificates heretofore issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to soldiers, or their widows, or their minor children, under section 2306 of the Revised Statutes, may be located by the original beneficiaries, their heirs, legal representatives, or assigns; and upon such location patent shall issue in the name of the locator.

By referring to the section of the Revised Statutes named in that clause I find that it is as follows:

SEC. 2306. Every person entitled, under the provisions of section 2304, to enter a homestead who may have heretofore entered, under the homestead laws, a quantity of land less than 160 acres, shall be permitted to enter so much land as, when added to the quantity previously entered, shall not exceed 160 acres.

The clause in the bill refers to certificates heretofore issued by the Commissioner under this section, while the section says nothing about certificates——

Mr. DOLPH. Does that section refer to soldiers at all?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It says: "Every person entitled under the provisions of section 2304."

Mr. DOLPH. Please read section 2304, and then I will explain.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It is:

SEC. 2304. Every private soldier and officer who has served in the Army of the United States during the recent rebellion, for ninety days, and who was honorably discharged, and has remained loyal to the Government, including the troops mustered into the service of the United States by virtue of the third section of an act approved February 13, 1862, and every seaman, marine, and officer who has served in the Navy of the United States, or in the Marine Corps, during the rebellion, for ninety days, and who was honorably discharged, and has remained loyal to the Government, shall, on compliance with the provisions of this chapter, as hereinafter modified, be entitled to enter upon and receive patents for a quantity of public lands not exceeding 160 acres, or one quarter-section, to be taken in compact form, according to legal subdivisions, including the alternate reserved sections of public lands along the line of any railroad or other public work, not otherwise reserved or appropriated, and other lands subject to entry under the homestead laws of the United States; but such homestead settler shall be allowed six months after locating his homestead, and filing his declaratory statement, within which to make his entry and commence his settlement and improvement.

Mr. DOLPH. I will explain now to my colleague what that means. The section last read provides that certain soldiers and men who have served in the Navy may take up a homestead by simply entering upon the land. They are not required to reside upon it or cultivate it in order to obtain title. To identify those who were entitled to enter lands under this provision the Secretary of the Interior, as I understand, issued to these persons certificates, which showed that they were persons who were mentioned in section 2304. The Secretary of the Interior issued under the law certificates to soldiers and sailors who were entitled to enter under these provisions, which enabled them to go to the local land offices and locate their certificates on any public lands subject to entry.

It was also ruled for a time, as I understand, that these certificates were assignable; that when a certificate was once issued the sailor or soldier to whom it was issued might assign it, and the assignee could locate the land. It has since been ruled that they are not assignable. Large numbers of these certificates have passed into the hands of third persons, who by the later ruling of the Department are prevented from using them. It was in order to cover these contradictory rulings and to dispose of these outstanding certificates and do justice to the people who now own them that this provision was inserted by the committee.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The object of the provision then is to make good those that are in the hands of innocent holders for a valuable consideration. But what I wish to call the attention of my colleague to is this, is not the wrong number named in the bill, is not the wrong section of the Revised Statutes named? Should it not be section 2304 instead of 2306?

Mr. DOLPH. I will examine that before the bill passes.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The bill speaks of all certificates heretofore issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office under section 2306 of the Revised Statutes, whereas there is no provision at all in section 2306 for the issue of any certificates, but section 2304 does provide for the location of the warrants of soldiers and seamen who served in the war of the rebellion on 160-acre tracts. That can be examined, of course.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to call the Senator's attention to the last part of section 2306, under which these certificates have been issued. That was designed to cover a condition of things in which parties who had served in the Army of the United States during the war of the rebellion had entered only 80 acres of land within railroad limits, and they were to be entitled to enter as much more as would make up 160 acres; and under the last clause of section 2306 the Department ruled that certificates could be issued to a soldier covering the amount of land necessary to bring his entry up to 160 acres; and by the ruling of the Department also it was held, as the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] has stated, that these certificates might be transferred. They have been so transferred according to that ruling, and the purpose of this part of the section is simply to preserve the existing status in reference to those certificates so issued and transferred.

So the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] will find that the latter part of section 2306 is the one which provided for this privilege. The other simply gives the right to enter the land, and section 2306 gives the authority for the issue of the certificates for the quantity necessary to make up the total of 160 acres.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I understand the object of the provision, but I wish to call the attention of my colleague and of the chairman of the committee to one further fact. This bill repeals nearly every section of chapter 4 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. PLUMB. But it does not repeal section 2304.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I say it repeals nearly every section of that chapter, and among others it repeals section 2277, as I understand.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Which reads as follows:

All warrants for military bounty lands, which are issued under any law of the United States, shall be received in payment of pre-emption rights at the rate of $1.25 per acre, for the quantity of land therein specified; but where the land is rated at $1.25 per acre, and does not exceed the area specified in the warrant, it must be taken in full satisfaction thereof.

That is repealed. The provision in section 2 retains the ability of soldiers and seamen who served in the war of 1812 and the rights of their assignees to locate the land-warrants issued to them on the public lands of the United States; but you have repealed or propose to repeal by this bill, as I understand it, section 2277, which would cut off all land-warrants issued to Mexican war soldiers or to any other soldiers except those who served in the war of the rebellion.

Now, there are to my knowledge quite a number of warrants still in the hands of the Mexican war soldiers. Some of them, I presume, are in the hands of speculators who have purchased them; but there are quite a number, perhaps a hundred all told, in the hands of the original parties or in the hands of their transferees; and as I understand this bill you leave them remediless if you repeal section 2277, which will be repealed if this bill becomes a law, and you make no provision whatever by which your Mexican war soldier having a land-warrant can locate it upon any of the public lands of the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator is mistaken about that. Section 2277 was an enlargement of the privilege which the owner of the land-warrant originally had; that is to say, it reached a class of purchasers who would become or might become interested in the ownership of a land-warrant. Until the act of the 22d of March, 1852, was passed, land-warrants could not be used in satisfaction of pre-emptions. Under that act of March 22, 1852, which has become section 2277 of the Revised Statutes, a land-warrant could be used in lieu of money wherever it was used under the pre-emption law.

Now we repeal the pre-emption law, and probably if that section was not repealed the effect would be the same, because it would not be likely that a warrant could be used under it; but the area of land on which land-warrants can be located is not diminished by this bill at all—I mean of land on which they can be located without settlement. But as we give the land away absolutely, do not sell it at all, therefore there would be no propriety in exacting from a person who held a land-warrant payment for the land which he can get without any money.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It is the intention of the committee, then, as I understand, to cut off the right of the Mexican war soldier, or any other soldier who did not serve in the war of the rebellion, to locate a land-warrant which he may happen to have by virtue of any law.

Mr. PLUMB. Not at all. I think the Senator will find that every right of that individual is reserved absolutely under this bill. This is necessary to the harmony of the bill, because we are tearing up the pre-emption system by the roots, and the only way in which the land-warrant and the pre-emption system came to be connected was by reason of this section of the Revised Statutes, which provides that a person may use a land-warrant in place of money in payment of a pre-emption claim.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Now I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the tenth section of the bill as bearing on the point under consideration. That section provides as follows:

That hereafter no public lands of the United States not heretofore offered at public sale, except abandoned military or other reservations, isolated and disconnected fractional tracts authorized to be sold by section 2455 of the Revised Statutes, and mineral and other lands the sale of which at public auction has been authorized by acts of Congress of a special nature having local application, shall be sold at public sale or be subject to private entry.

Mr. PLUMB. That was designed to cover just this case. Under the law as it now stands the President of the United States may order to be offered at public sale any portion of the surveyed lands of the United States. If they are not sold at public sale they then become subject to private entry. The section is to prevent the President of the United States from taking out from under the operation of the homestead law public lands by having them offered at public sale, and thus after the sale opening them to private entry.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. But this provision, if I understand it, absolutely takes away every right, with certain exceptions which are specified in the section, of every person to either make a purchase at public sale or make a private entry on the public lands. The only question, then, is whether those who hold land-warrants and who did not serve in the war of 1812 come within the exceptions specified in section 10.

Mr. PLUMB. The only purpose of section 10 is to prevent the President from offering at public sale any more of the public lands of the United States, except the military reservations, which it is now provided may be sold in that way. Every single acre of public land upon which a holder of land-warrants can now locate a military land-warrant he can locate a land-warrant upon when this bill passes. The only way we interfere with his right at all is that he is not authorized to sell it to a pre-emptor; that is to say, there is no pre-emptor any more.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Then the Senator from Kansas and the committee understand that the location of any land-warrant on a certain piece of the public land would not be a private entry.

Mr. PLUMB. No, it is not a private entry.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. What is it?

Mr. PLUMB. It is the location of a land-warrant. A private entry is the purchase of land at a stipulated price in cash. But even if that were true, still the Senator's objection would fail for this reason: This does not interfere with any land that is now subject to private entry. The great mass of public land heretofore offered at public sale can be located upon with land-warrants or can be sold for a dollar and a quarter to a private-entry man; this only provides that the President shall not bring any more lands into that class. The President may, as the law stands to-day, order all the lands in Colorado or Oregon or anywhere to be sold at public sale, and if they are not sold at public sale they then become, by reason of the fact of their having been offered at public sale and not sold, subject to private entry; that is to say, any man may go in and buy all he pleases at a dollar and a quarter an acre without settlement. We simply say that no more of the public land of the United States shall be subject to those conditions; but every acre of land which can now be entered by a land-warrant or is now subject to private entry—that is to say, which can be purchased at a dollar and a quarter an acre—is still subject to it, even if this bill shall pass.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I think there is very great doubt about whether the position taken by the chairman of the committee is correct. Here is an absolute repeal of all rights, an absolute taking away by this section it seems to me of every right except as to certain specified cases that are named in the section, of any person to purchase public land at public sale or to make private entry. I think it is a very serious question whether that does not include the right of a person holding a Mexican war land-warrant to locate his land-warrant on the lands of the United States. I desire to preserve the right. That is the only object of my suggestion at this time. I desire, so as to leave no question about it, to preserve in express words the right of the Mexican war soldier, who happens to have a land-warrant, to locate that land-warrant upon the public lands of the United States after this bill shall have become a law just the same as he has now.

Mr. PLUMB. That is exactly what the bill does.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Then in order to remove all doubt about that, and I think there is material doubt, would there be any objection to inserting at the end of section 10 these words, or some equivalent words:

Provided, however, That this shall not apply to military bounty-land warrants issued to soldiers of the Mexican or other wars, which warrants may be located on any public lands not mineral, reserved, or otherwise appropriated.

Mr. PLUMB. That would be very objectionable, because that enlarges the law. Let me call the Senator's attention, as he has the Revised Statutes before him, to section 2414.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not wish to enlarge the law at all, and will accept any modification securing the object. I simply wish to preserve the rights of these parties as they are to-day.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me read the section under which land-warrants are now located. When I say "located," I mean as contradistinguished from their use as cash on lands subject to pre-emption:

SEC. 2415. The warrants which have been or may hereafter be issued in pursuance of law may be located according to the legal subdivisions of the public lands in one body upon any lands of the United States subject to private entry at the time of such location at the minimum price. When such warrant is located on lands which are subject to entry at a greater minimum than $1.25 per acre, the locator shall pay to the United States in cash the difference between the value of such warrants at $1.25 per acre and the tract of land located on. But where such tract is rated at $1.25 per acre and does not exceed the area specified in the warrant, it must be taken in full satisfaction thereof.

You will notice there the limitation is on lands "subject to private entry." As I said before—and I repeat it with perfect confidence in the soundness of my conclusion in regard to the effect of this bill—by this bill we do not change that rule. We only provide that no more of the lands of the United States than the lands which are now subject to private entry shall ever become subject to private entry. That is all.

The President may never make them subject to private entry anyhow. There is no legal right, therefore, and no just claim of the people holding land-warrants that they shall enter upon any particular lands. All the lands that are now subject to private entry can be located on by land-warrants. We do not touch the lands now subject to private entry, as the Senator will see by reading section 10. We expressly exclude them from the operation of that section; we leave them subject to private entry indeed, as they are now, and those lands can be taken up by land-warrants if the holders of the land-warrants so choose. And we do not touch sections 2414 and 2415 and the following, which provide the methods whereby land-warrants may be located and the classes of lands on which they may be located.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to state what I conceive to be the objection to my colleague's proposed amendment.

As the bill for the repeal of the pre-emption law and timber-culture law came from the House at the last Congress, section 6 provided for a sweeping repeal of every law substantially but the homestead law. This was its language:

SEC. 6. That after the passage of this act no public lands of the United States adapted to agriculture shall be sold except mineral lands and town sites; and all of the public lands of the United States adapted to agriculture shall be reserved for actual and bona fide settlers only under the provisions of the homestead laws, subject, however, to bounty-land warrants and college scrip issued by authority of Congress.

This is what the committee said in regard to that in the report which accompanied the Senate bill:

The apparent object of section 6 of the bill as it came from the House is to prevent cash sales. As worded, it leaves much in doubt and confiscates valuable vested rights. If this section should become a law, it would seem as if no lands could be selected for railroads, canals, or wagon-roads. The only scrip mentioned are military bounty-warrants, agricultural college, soldiers and sailors' rights (additional).

There are several other kinds of scrip extant, issued under other acts of Congress, which have been bought and sold on the strength of such enactments.

The apparent object of section 6 can be accomplished, and objections thereto removed, by substituting for the section the section proposed by the committee as an amendment.

Which was, that thereafter there should be no land sold at public sale or subject to private entry. When the bill came into the Senate it was objected by the Senator from Missouri and others that it would be unjust to some of the Southern States, where all the public lands had been offered at public sale and were now subject to private entry and comparatively worthless, to withdraw them from private entry; and the language of the section was, I find, as it appears in the bill now reported by the committee.

The trouble would be in adopting an amendment specifying any kind of warrants or scrip, because there are still others outstanding, there being quite a large variety of scrip which is yet to be entered on the public lands which is presented to the local land offices and laid on lands that are public lands and open to entry.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Is there any objection to putting in an amendment simply reserving to all such soldiers the same rights they have now, so as to remove any doubt?

Mr. DOLPH. This is a very important matter. Whenever we commence to make even a small amendment in a provision with regard to the land system, which is complicated, we should be very careful. These various laws having been enacted at different times and received construction by different Departments and different courts, we are very liable to do something that we do not intend.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. If we are to take the thing just as the committee has reported it, it is not worth while to offer any amendments.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not think I ought to be understood as making any such suggestion as that; but I feel bound, having charge of the bill, to state why I think difficulties might grow out of such a provision.

Sections 2277 and 2278 which have been referred to are provisions that it is proposed to repeal. It might be well enough to leave those sections remain in force so far as to allow all military bounty warrants and agricultural-college scrip to be used in payment for pre-emption claims which have now been initiated. I would see no objection to leaving those sections in force for that purpose; but we can not leave those sections in force to run indefinitely unless we extend the pre-emption law indefinitely. We must cut off that right when we repeal the pre-emption law. As was said by the Senator from Kansas, we cut off the right of the holders of these warrants to use them in payment for pre emption claims, but that does not prevent their being laid on lands which are subject to be entered by homestead.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That is just the point to be demonstrated. If it is so perfectly clear that the rights of these parties will be the same after this becomes a law, then there can be no harm from the insertion of a proviso reserving their rights.

Mr. DOLPH. If my colleague will give me his attention I think I can make this matter apparent.

From an early day it was the practice of the Government when public lands were sold to sell them at public sale. Those sales were regulated by law. They continued two days. The lands were sold to the highest bidder. The lands which had been offered at public sale and not sold were after that time subject to be purchashed for cash; in other words, were subject to private entry. So the term "private entry" has from long usage come to have a technical meaning. Lands subject to private entry are lands which have been put up at public auction, have been offered for sale, and have not been purchased, and now may be purchased in any quantity by any person at a dollar and a quarter an acre.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Offered lands.

Mr. DOLPH. Offered lands. One person may purchase every acre of public land subject to private entry in the United States to-day for $1.25 per acre. One purchaser may take them all. That is what is referred to when we speak of lands offered at public sale and subject to private entry. But it was not the intention of the committee, and I think they have not done it, to provide that military bounty land-warrants, agricultural college scrip, what is known as the Dodge scrip, and soldiers' additional homestead scrip, large varieties of scrip, can not be laid upon the public lands. That was the very thing to be avoided. The committee thought that the House bill as it came to us at the last Congress did cut off those rights, and so reported this section as a substitute.

I feel very confident myself that the effect is not what is supposed by my colleague, that all that is referred to or covered by the ninth section is land which has been offered at public sale and may now be entered for cash in any quantity.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Why then refer to them at all?

Mr. DOLPH. I will state, if I am allowed a moment further, that

I would not undertake myself, and I do not believe there is a member of the committee who would undertake, to enumerate all kinds of scrip that are outstanding; and I fear that if we begin to mention some, to make it certain according to the idea of my colleague, we should leave out some by not being familiar enough to enumerate the various kinds of outstanding scrip.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The trouble is that the committee did commence to enumerate; the committee did attempt to enumerate and did enumerate and preserve by express enactment the rights of those soldiers who served in the war of the rebellion. They are expressly mentioned in the bill, and their rights are preserved by the clause to which I have called attention, whereas there is nothing said in the bill in reference to land-warrants held by Mexican war soldiers and by any other soldiers except those who served in the war of the rebellion.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not think we did mention them for that purpose. We simply made a rule to govern the Interior Department, that whereas the scrip had been issued to these soldiers and sailors, and whereas by the ruling of the Department it had been held to be assignable, and by another ruling it had been held that it was not assignable, and the scrip is now held by persons who can not use it under those rulings, the committee undertook to cure that trouble and to provide that the land might be entered by the original beneficiaries or by the assignees. I do not understand that we undertook to make any provision that the warrants might be entered, because they certainly can be still entered either by the original beneficiaries or by the assignees.

The soldiers' bounty warrants are but a small part of the outstanding scrip. I suppose the agricultural-college scrip is the largest class of scrip outstanding. That, I think, is a very large amount. There are various kinds of scrip, and if we undertook to mention any we should have to mention all. In the opinion of the committee it was not necessary to mention any, because all the scrip may still be entered notwithstanding the provisions of the bill reported.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That may possibly be the effect of the bill, but I do not think so from my present examination of it. I want to leave the right of any Mexican war soldier who holds a land-warrant to locate his scrip upon any of the public lands of the United States. It seems to me a general clause might be put in in a few words, simply reserving the existing right of all holders of scrip, not enlarging them.

I do not think any pride of opinion on the part of the chairman of the committee or of the Senator having the bill in charge ought to prevent their inserting a word or two to that effect. I shall not offer the amendment myself.

Mr. DOLPH. What section does my colleague refer to?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Section 10. A proviso can be added there.

Mr. DOLPH. That section provides that no lands shall be offered at public sale hereafter.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It says:

Shall be sold at public sale or be subject to private entry.

Mr. DOLPH. That is, entered for cash.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to add at the end of the third section of the committee's amendment these words as a continuation and part of the proviso:

And upon proof of the expenditure of the full sum of $3 per acre as herein provided, and of the improvements required in this proviso, no further payment shall be required, but patents shall issue accordingly. But none of said lands shall ever be sold or held in larger bodies than 640 acres in a single ownership, which condition shall be expressed in the original patent thereof.

Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator send the amendment to the desk so that it may be read?

Mr. BLAIR. I will read it again. Let it be taken down by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can not be taken down.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well; I send it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the second subdivision of section 3 it is proposed to add:

And upon proof of the expenditure of the full sum of $3 per acre as herein provided, and of the improvements required in this proviso, no further payment shall be required, but patents shall issue accordingly. But none of said lands shall ever be sold or held in larger bodies than 640 acres in a single ownership, which condition shall be expressed in the original patent thereof.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, the original desert-land act was approved March 3, 1877, and, in brief, it authorized, upon the payment of 25 cents per acre, an individual who desired to procure title to a tract not exceeding 640 acres, a section, to file a declaration stating his desire, and upon the expenditure of a dollar per acre in the way of reclamation, and the reclamation of the land, it being desert land, he became entitled to his patent. There were various other conditions in the act. As everybody understands, the act itself has resulted in very great abuses, and almost the chief frauds connected with the administration of our land laws have been in connection with this particular act. And so it seemed to the committee originally desirable to repeal it in toto, but finally as it appeared to be necessary that there should be some peculiar provisions of law in order to secure the reclamation of the 500,000,000 acres of our public domain which are really desert land and which will never be valuable——

Mr. INGALLS. About how many acres?

Mr. BLAIR. About 500,000,000 acres. So the Senator from Oregon said a few moments ago.

Mr. INGALLS. That is a very wild estimate.

Mr. BLAIR. It is not 500,000,000 square miles, you know. That was the Senator's statement, and I do not know but that it is substantially correct. I think it is.

Mr. INGALLS. There is less than 500,000,000 acres of unsurveyed land left in the public domain at this time.

Mr. BLAIR. It may be of unsurveyed land. I can not say in regard to that; but in a general way we see it stated that there are about 200,000,000 acres of agricultural lands remaining open to improvement under the homestead law, and the desert lands are an immense body. I do not know what proportion of them may be capable of improvement by irrigation and so be capable of settlement and production, but the desert lands form a very large proportion of the public domain; but whatever they may be, it is alleged that by the construction of the necessary works of irrigation they may be made as valuable as any of our agricultural lands, and in many cases more valuable than our present agricultural lands. But it requires the expenditure of large amounts of money for irrigation, so that in order to irrigate small tracts provision must be made for the irrigation of very large tracts. A great amount of capital is requisite to the improvement of these lands in such a way that they may be occupied at all.

It is the object of the amendment of the desert-land act proposed in this bill to make these lands available for settlement and use by the homesteaders of the country, and at the same time to provide a system of machinery by which the means can be obtained to create these great and expensive works of irrigation. And so the second paragraph of section 4, commencing in the eleventh line of page 7, provides:

Persons entering or proposing to enter separate sections, or fractional parts of sections, of desert lands, may associate together in the construction of canals and ditches for irrigating and reclaiming all of said tracts, and may file a joint map or maps showing their plan of internal improvements.

That opens the way for the necessary combination of individuals to obtain the means of constructing the works of irrigation. That is all well, but going further, to the modification of the fifth section of the original act, or what is the fifth section as it appears here near the bottom of page 7, it is provided:

That no land shall be patented to any person under this act unless he or his assignors shall have expended in the necessary irrigation, reclamation, and cultivation thereof, by means of main canals and branch ditches, and in permanent improvements upon the land, at least $3 per acre of the whole tract reclaimed and patented, in the manner following.

That is, $3, $1 each year for three years in succession. I do not know that that is so seriously to be objected to as the other consideration to which I am now coming, and which has led to the offering of this amendment. You say it is contemplated that these persons authorized to associate together and take up tracts of a square mile each, or any smaller proportion they see fit, may, after initiating these proceedings, assign their lands. It is proved from the very fact that these desert lands never have been taken up and never have been improved by poor people that they are not likely to be improved in the future by people of small means.

This association allows them to take up large tracts, and it may be that in some instances they will make the improvements themselves, but they have the unlimited right of assignment vested in them by this bill; and it is evident that their assignee may in any instance or in all instances be the same individual, may be a corporation, or may be a syndicate. Somebody is to be the assignee of these lands who is able to furnish the necessary money to make these expensive improvements in the way of irrigation. The result of the adoption of the proposed amendment to the desert-land act will be simply this: that the money for these expenditures of a dollar an acre every year for three years will be obtained of capitalists who have the money, under contract of agreement on the part of those who take up the lands in their own names originally—the money I say will be furnished by them under a contract for the assignment of the lands when the irrigation improvement has been made. Thus the way is directly open for the purchase of the whole land, it might be of immense tracts of the public domain, and the making of these improvements by capitalists and syndicates; and thus the evils which we have been discussing in the Senate for a few days past of landlordism, excessive holdings in single control or ownership, are permanently brought upon the country by the provisions of this proposed amendment to the desert-land act.

In order to obviate that and to remove what in the natural and proper operation of this bill I take to be a hardship, I offer this amendment, which contains two propositions. One is that upon the making of these improvements, upon the expenditure of this $3 per acre so that this now waste land shall become valuable for the purposes of human habitation and production, the Government shall part with its title; and if the improvements are made by homesteaders, by people in moderate circumstances, by those who desire the lands for homes, for the raising of population and the establishment of great States, then these people are entitled and ought to be entitled to receive these lands as cheaply as we give away homesteads to others who constitute a like population. That proposition then would seem to be equitable and strictly right and in consonance with our present policy and the policy which we propose to continue with reference to our public lands hereafter if this bill becomes a law.

But in order to guard against the abuse of enormous holdings by those who may furnish the means to individuals who initiate these proceedings, the second proposition is introduced into the amendment, which is:

But none of said lands shall ever be sold or held in larger bodies than 640 acres in a single ownership, which condition shall be expressed in the original patent thereof.

We concede by requiring that in the first instance these lands shall go to individuals in no larger holding than a single section, the propriety of the general principle that these lands now and forever hereafter shall be secured in small quantities to the families of the people who are able to purchase them and to occupy them as homesteads. It is of no consequence, it is of no use to enunciate a principle of this kind and have it applicable only to the original transfer of title from the General Government to the first holder under the General Government. If the principle is worth anything, it is of importance only in its subsequent working in society and throughout the great future to guard against the evils which have been so often adverted to. Therefore it is that I offer this amendment to facilitate the real purpose of the bill and to prevent the abuses to which it seems to me it will otherwise pave the way directly.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, suppose that his condition is violated, what would be the effect upon the estate?

Mr. BLAIR. I suppose that the effect upon the estate of the violation of that condition would be to authorize the General Government, if it saw fit, to enforce a forfeiture, the General Government not being obliged to enforce a forfeiture as I leave this amendment, but always being actuated by equitable principles, it could relieve from the effects of the breach of condition wherever equity seemed to require it.

Mr. DAWES. It struck me that the Senator's phraseology as I heard it was just the difference between a covenant and a condition, and that therefore the title would be upheld, but the covenant might be broken. I suggest to the Senator, if he desires to make it so as to work a forfeiture of the estate, whether he has got the proper language for that purpose.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask the Secretary to read the paragraphs on top of page 1104, which I send up, from a work published by authority of Congress, entitled "The Public Domain," and published by a commission appointed under authority of Congress.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

LANDS TO WHICH THE DESERT-LAND ACT APPLIES.

December 1, 1883.

Agriculture depends upon irrigation in Nevada, New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho, Southern California, Montana, Eastern Oregon, a portion of the western part of Dakota, and Eastern Washington Territory; also in other portions of the public domain. The desert-land act, however, applies to the localities above named, and the lands therein are so called by law, and are so disposed of unless the contrary be shown. This vast arid region, estimated to contain more than 700,000,000 acres, contains a water-supply sufficient to irrigate 30,000,000 acres. What artesian wells may do is a question for the future.

A great portion of the timber lands of the nation lie within this region, generally on the mountains (see timber map). Within this area lie the grazing or pasturage lands of the public domain (covering copper, coal, iron, and the precious metals), estimated at more than 350,000,000 acres. June 30, 1883, the United States owned (estimated), within subdivisions above enumerated, more than 500,000,000 acres of land within the area shown by the map and known as the arid region. Along streams, near springs, or by the side of water-holes, or in valleys can be found thousands of farms and homes using the existing water supply. These have been taken under the homestead, pre-emption, or other settlement laws; but it may be safely said that such lands with water-supply immediately adjacent have long since been entered.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire will not be adopted. I think it has hardly been considered enough to be attached to this bill, which has received such great consideration by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, it appears from the extract read by the Secretary from the work on the public domain that while the arid or sterile or desert lands are estimated to aggregate 700,000,000 acres, the only part of them that can be irrigated and that, therefore, would be subject to the provisions of the act, is about 30,000,000 acres if all the water accessible upon the surface of the ground were used. The commission indulge in a speculation as to the possibility of boring artesian shafts by which other portions of this land might be subjected to cultivation by what may be called subterranean supply. The only reason I have for voting for the repeal of the pre-emption and timber-culture and desert-lands acts is found in the approaching exhaustion of the arable public domain.

Up to this time the surveyed portion of the public lands of the United States amounts to something over a thousand million acres; that is, in that portion of the country exclusive of the original thirteen Colonies. There remain unsurveyed in round numbers a little less than 500,000,000 acres, of which a large proportion consists of mountain ranges, of inaccessible regions largely of the sterile character that has been described in the extract read by the Secretary; and those most competent to judge are of opinion that within ten years from this time there will not be an acre left in the public domain upon which corn and wheat can be raised without irrigation; that we shall have reached the absolute limit of arable land subject to homestead entry in the public domain. That presents a very dangerous emergency, an emergency that has long been contemplated with grave apprehension by those who have studied our institutions, and the only reason which exists in my mind for agreeing to the repeal of these acts is found in this fact alone.

Whereas now a singler settler can obtain a quarter-section of ground as a pre-emptor, an additional quarter-section as a timber-culture claimant, and an additional quarter-section as a homesteader, making 480 acres in all, if these two acts are repealed he will then be limited simply to the 160 acres to be obtained as a homestead settler; and that will in some manner perhaps retard or procrastinate or delay or defer the emergency which I have spoken of, when there will be no longer any arable domain over which this surplus population of ours can diffuse itself peaceably; so that we shall be brought then face to face with the consideration whether we shall restrict immigration, or with that other more dangerous and hazardous emergency whether we shall enter upon a new career of conquest for the purpose of acquiring in the north or in the south additional territory over which our surplus population can be diffused and extended peacefully without danger to our institutions.

I regret exceedingly that the committee saw fit to exclude from the operations of this proposed act what is known as the desert-land law. I know of no reason that exists why, if the timber-culture act should be repealed, the desert-land act should not also be repealed.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] states that the area is very large and that unless peculiar inducements are offered, in consequence of the necessity of capital aggregated in order to construct the canals, these lands must forever lie dormant. These lands are not intended for the interest of aggregated capital. We are not legislating for corporations. We have been endeavoring here for days to wrest from corporations something that they have, as we contend, illegally and improperly acquired under previous acts of Congress; and the Senator from Oregon insists that we shall continue in effect and operation the desert-land act, under which I profess to be able to show that more enormous wrongs have been perpetrated than under all other acts of Congress affecting the public domain.

There has been much said about the frauds of pre-emption claimants, about the oaths which have been as light as dicers' oaths which they have filed with regard to their residence, about the structures which they have erected for a compliance with the demands of the Government that houses should be placed upon the land. The papers have been full of the wrongs perpetrated under the timber-culture act, and we have been regaled time after time, year after year, with reports of commissioners and special agents sent out for that purpose, who have depicted the plantings that have been made on the public lands under the timber-culture act, by which 160 acres have been acquired by planting seeds and cuttings of trees no larger than whip-stocks, by which the necessary oaths have been made through a flexible conscience so that title has been obtained.

But all these aggregated, compounded together, do not approach the confessed and admitted wrongs which have been accomplished under the desert-land act. They are not denied; they are confessed. It is admitted by everybody that great corporations, men engaged in the cattle business, have gone out and secured a water course, a fertile valley, a copious spring, and by filing upon that under the desert-land act have secured the control of vast areas of country adapted for grazing purposes, and that never so much as a quart or a pint or a drop of water has been diverted from the water course over those lands to accomplish the purposes of the desert-land act.

Yet the Senator from Oregon and the Committee on Public Lands, with all these facts staring them in the face, saw fit to consent that the pre-emption act, which relates only to individuals, and the timber-culture act, which applies only to individuals, should be abrogated, and that the desert-land act, which proposes to put enormous quantities of land aggregated together in the hands of corporations, because none but corporations can handle it, shall be continued in operation.

Mr. President, I think it is a mistake. If any of these acts is wrong, they are all wrong; if any of them is wrong, then pre-eminently the desert-land act is wrong.

In legislating for the benefit of individual settlers upon the public domain there are a hundred reasons why the desert-land act should be repealed to one why either of the others should be repealed, because, as the Senator from Oregon himself admits, the desert lands can not be occupied by individual settlers. There must be corporations formed, there must be aggregations of capital made, canals must be constructed at enormous expense before the lands can in any way whatever be made available; and you are perpetuating the worst form of land aggregation, of land monopoly, of the system which we have been denouncing here in the case of railroads, in the case of aliens from Scotland, England, and Germany who have come over here and acquired in one way or another titles to vast acres of our public domain.

I believe that the timber-culture act properly applied is of immensely more value to the people of this country than the desert-land act. If the desert-land act shall be retained, why should not the timber-culture act be retained under proper restrictions? Everybody admits that the great need of the Western country is forest; that one cause of the climatic vicissitudes is the want of foliage, of the shade that comes from groves, and from vast areas that could be covered under the operation of that act with forests of cottonwood and black walnut and other rapidly-growing trees.

If the desert-land act is to be retained for the benefit of the people of the Pacific coast, why, I ask, under proper restrictions as to cultivation, as to occupation, as to the means by which the title can be secured, should not the timber-culture act also be retained, an act confessedly of the greatest beneficence, of the highest wisdom, which was entered upon as a policy deliberately by this country for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the early and the latter rain could not be secured upon those sterile valleys by the beneficent agency and operation of the laws of nature?

I hope the committee will review their decision; that if one of these laws is to go they will all go; and that if one of them is to be retained for the benefit of the people upon the Pacific slope, the system and under proper restrictions, limitations, guardianship, whatever may be necessary to secure its faithful and efficient application, will also be applied to the timber-culture act, which I believe, properly administered, would be of immense value to all that great outlying region between the piedmont of the Rocky Mountains and the shores of the Mississippi River.

Mr. PLUMB addressed the Senate. [See Appendix.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. CALL. I do not propose to make a speech on this subject, but it seems to me that section 3 of the committee's amendment is somewhat uncertain. The section provides an amendment to the act approved March 3, 1877, in the following words:

SEC. 4. That at the time of filing the declaration hereinbefore required, the party shall also file a map of said land, which shall exhibit a plan showing the mode of contemplated irrigation, and which plan shall be sufficient to thoroughly irrigate and reclaim said land and prepare it to raise ordinary agricultural crops, and shall also show the source of the water to be used for irrigation and reclamation.

That would imply that the Commissioner or somebody else should have the right to judge as to the sufficiency of the map; but suppose he does accept the map, what then? He has no power whatever to enforce the execution of the plan according to the map, but, on the contrary, the amendment proposes that if the party entering expends a dollar an acre every year upon this land, after $3 shall have been expended he has title to it whether there is any reclamation or not, provided he also has cultivated—how long, whether a day or a month or a year, is not stated—one-eighth, I believe it is, of the land.

The condition of title under this amendment, which professedly is for the reclamation of this land and its irrigation, is that he shall spend somehow a dollar an acre each year for three years, making $3 an acre upon the land. Whether ineffectually spent, whether accomplishing anything or not, it does not matter; and also that he shall cultivate for some indefinite period of time one-eighth of the land.

It seems to me that it would not be very difficult to devise a plan by which, if the object is to reclaim these desert lands for the purpose of occupation and settlement, the condition of title might be made the reclamation of the land. The fact that something has been done should be required, not merely something attempted to be done, for manifestly under the provisions of this section there is nothing required except the filing of the map showing the source from which the water is to be obtained and the plan, which plan shall be sufficient in the judgment of somebody, who it is not stated, to effect the purposes of reclamation. The condition of title is the expenditure in some way or somehow of a dollar an acre per year, whether in labor at $3 a day or in material at some indefinite price, or in subsistence, it does not say; but as to the fact sought to be obtained, that is left by the section entirely immaterial—the fact of reclamation.

Mr. President, I only intended to make that criticism upon this section of the committee's amendment and to say that while it is a great object of public policy that these lands should be reclaimed and that they should be reserved for homes for the people and at the least cost possible to them, certainly some intelligent and wise and efficient plan and method of attaining that object should be provided by the law.

Now, in regard to the pre-emption law, that is a very important matter. I have seen the operation of it also. A pre-emption is simply a privilege given to a man upon the supposition that he has no money to enter upon the public land upon a declaration that he proposes to do it for his own occupation and cultivation for a home.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator will permit me to interpose a word there. The original law did not fix the time at all, but by regulation of the Department which remained in force until within the last ten years the time was thirty days. The law then changed the time permanently and made it six months.

Mr. CALL. I remember in the early experience that I had that the time was six months, whether by regulation of the Department or by statute I am not prepared to say.

However, when the man paid his money for the land, of course he had a title and it was immaterial what he did with it. If he went upon the land and he went there with the intention of making it his home, it was a compliance with the law, a bona fide compliance, whether he changed his purpose or not. He was not held amenable for anything but a fraud, and there were and could be but few frauds in that period of time committed under the pre-emption law.

All lands were subject to sale at land sales advertised, general land sales. But when the land began to be settled and occupied, when the policy of the country and the rightful policy of the country came to be to give the public land to the people who would go and live upon it at the smallest possible cost, then there arose antagonism between the law giving a pre-emption and the law giving a right of homestead. Some men could not take homesteads; all men could take a pre-emption by actual residence and occupation. The pre-emption law gave title in six months on payment of Government price, the homestead law required five years; hence the contest between applicants under the two laws.

Both these laws have been made the instruments of fraud in the interest of speculation. In the State of Florida there have been public agencies advertised to obtain homesteads for people in any part of the country, and it is known that homesteads have been obtained and patents issued for people who were never known to be upon the land.

Frauds will be committed under any law when land begins to be valuable; and doubtless the pre-emption law has been the means of great frauds. Where land was fertile, in watered regions which commanded large districts of grass-grazing, men would acquire pre-emptions fraudulently for the purpose of preventing homestead occupation, for the purpose of getting a title to large bodies of land to individuals who might by these locations control these large valuable tracts. Such, I understand, to have been the character of grievances which have created a great public opinion, an opinion in the interest of and favorable to the preservation of the public domain for actual settlement and cultivation, which certainly is a wise and proper object.

Mr. President, the man who attempts to enforce the land laws against people who are seeking to acquire interests upon the land, whether fraudulently or otherwise, will be an object of great unpopularity. It has been so everywhere when the pre-emption law and the homestead laws have been enforced in the interest of the people. If your purpose is to confine the disposition of the land to actual settlement and cultivation it needs to be very rigidly and at the same time to be very carefully and justly administered. I have no question that whether he be a Republican or whether he be a Democrat, whatever he may be, who shall undertake to enforce faithfully the law for the preservation of the public domain for the people of the country, he is going to encounter a vast amount of hostile criticism.

People do not commonly regard it as an offense to appropriate the public lands of the United States. We have grown up under the idea that the public domain was intended for the use of everybody, and to some extent it is true. There are generations of people who have grown up on the public domain of the United States without ever having had a title or an interest under the law to it, and I do not know that it could have been put to a better use.

But now, when you have got a settled policy, a policy antagonizing speculation and capital and preserving this land for settlers who will cultivate it, who will actually settle upon it and make homes upon it for their families, you are going to encounter the antagonism of all other classes who have speculative interest in the land for the purposes of speculation and sale, who are very numerous, and they will create a great deal of trouble and be very abusive and very vigorous in evading any laws, or the administration of any laws, you may pass.

I say this much in defense of the Commissioner of Public Lands. His offense seems to have been an endeavor to preserve the lands for actual settlement and cultivation, and with proper provisions for the sale and disposition of the timber lands so that the supply of lumber for the mills can be had. This is a wise policy.

Mr. PLUMB. I call the attention of the Senator from Florida to the original act. It was not amended at all. His criticism of this portion of the bill is without foundation. Chapter 107 of the laws of 1877, passed the 3d day of March, 1877, after naming the declaration and so on to be made, says:

Said declaration shall describe particularly said section of land if surveyed, and, if unsurveyed, shall describe the same as nearly as possible without a survey. At any time within the period of three years after filing said declaration, upon making satisfactory proof to the register and receiver of the reclamation of said tract of land in the manner aforesaid, and upon the payment to the receiver of the additional sum of $1 per acre for a tract of land not exceeding 640 acres to any one person, a patent for the same shall be issued to him.

He will observe that we do not interfere with that at all. The proof of the actual reclamation is still to be made, but we require intermediate proof, and there can be no full proof of reclamation except it is also accompanied by this intermediate proof of the expenditure of a dollar an acre each year, and so on. But if the Senator can suggest a form of language better calculated to accomplish the purpose, I do not think any member of the committee will object to it; but proof of reclamation is required by the original statute. The trouble was that as no particular form of reclamation was required, no particular expenditure of money required to be made, no particular kind of ditch required to be constructed, and so on, it was often taken advantage of for a fraudulent purpose.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I did not enter at all upon the reasons for the repeal of the pre-emption law or the timber-culture act. They are stated at length in the report made from the committee by myself. I am not going now to state the reasons except to say that the controlling reason with me is that I think the time has come when one person should be permitted to obtain title to only 160 acres of the agricultural public lands belonging to the Government. I think also that the timber-culture act has proved a failure. Experience has not justified the expectations of the friends of the act when it was passed.

In regard to the desert-land law the case is different. We heard the other day the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who made the trip last year to California, describe all that country between the Rocky Mountains and the Sierra Nevada as being in the main a desert where nothing grew but sage-brush, valueless except by irrigation, but rich if water could be got upon it—productive as the Delta of the Nile, he said, if water could be got upon it. I have shown that the amount of this land is very large and the amount which can ever be reclaimed is very small. Now, I will say to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] that if under the pre-emption laws title could be obtained to that land, all the delegation from California and Oregon and Washington Territory and Montana and Wyoming and New Mexico would not be here clamoring for the retention of that act.

If people were permitted to buy that land at a dollar and a quarter an acre they would want no better law than that. If they could take it as homesteads and live upon it without reclamation and large expenditures upon it, they would be satisfied; they would want no other law. But the trouble is that those laws are not applicable to that arid region. There must be some exception made in the general system of disposing of the public land. That exception has been attempted to be made by the desert-land act.

If this act is now repealed absolutely those lands must lie there unoccupied and unimproved until some substitute is adopted, unproductive, the country undeveloped; but if there is some law, even an onerous law, as this desert-land law will be when it is amended as proposed by the committee, by which titles can be acquired, considerable portions of the land will be taken up and will be reclaimed and will become a source of income and revenue to the country.

What is the situation now? As was stated by the commission in the volume which I had the Secretary read from at the desk, settlers have gone in under the homestead and pre-emption laws, and even the desert-land act, along the streams and where there is water-supply, and have taken up the land and have settled; but of course the population is sparse, and until there can be more settlers in that country those people must be without the benefit of schools and without all the advantages which thickly settled communities enjoy in all this Republic. Pass over that country, and you will see all along through it what are called gulches, or the beds of dry streams. These gulches are made in the spring of the year as the melted snow comes down from the mountains. The water is melted rapidly, and it gullies out the surface; but as soon as the snows are gone—there are no rains during the dry season—the country is dried up and parched; scarcely a living stream in all that region.

But what is the effect of reclamation of these desert lands? Judge Carey, of Wyoming, came before the committee. He gave us an instance. He said that out at Cheyenne, I believe it was, the people wanted to bring water into the city that they might grow shade trees and have water for use, and they made a long ditch running back to the mountains 50 miles, struck a water-supply, and supposed they were going to have a water-supply for that purpose. After they had dug their ditch they found that during the dry season they had no water, and when the snow melted in the spring the water ran off and ran to waste, ran out into the great rivers; but after a while they began to irrigate, and they took water in the mountains and brought it down and put it on the land and began to raise crops. It ran through one man's field, percolated into another, and they made an additional farm. And so they kept on reclaiming area after area, and they not only reclaimed a large body of land with this water which before ran to waste, but from the water they had a perennial stream at the town of Cheyenne, because the water, instead of running off from the surface, was retained, and was the means of causing crops to grow on that arid region, and then percolated out through the soil and made a living stream where there was no water before. That is the advantage of the irrigation of this land, inconceivable to one who has never been there and seen that region; and that is why I am earnest—not for the purpose of having corporations get hold of some of that land. Corporations go where there is better land than that when they want it. I am in earnest that the settlers who go there to live, for the purpose of mining and other enterprises, and others who go there to make homes, shall have an opportunity to get title under some law however onerous the condition, and I say the conditions we are proposing in this bill are certainly hard enough.

That is the situation in regard to this arid region. I hope the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire will be voted down.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire at this time to submit a couple of amendments to this bill. They are as follows:

Insert the words "or homestead" after the word "pre-emption," in line 18, page 5, section 1.

Also insert at the close of section 10 the following:

Provided, Nothing herein shall be construed as depriving the holders of military bounty-land warrants or land scrip at any time heretofore issued under any law of the United States of their right to locate such warrants or scrip on the public lands of the United States as by existing law they may now do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be received and printed.

Mr. BOWEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 17, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 16, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

WEIL AND LA ABRA MINING COMPANY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State concerning the claim of Benjamin Weil and the La Abra Mining Company, of Mexico, agreeably to the resolution of the House of Representatives dated May 13, 1886.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, June 15, 1886.

JUDGMENTS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of unpaid judgments against the United States by the Court of Claims, and recommending an appropriation for their payment; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ELDREDGE, for ten days, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 453) to forfeit the lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 4232) to reimburse the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for losses incurred through the failure of the Exchange National Bank of Norfolk, Va.

DENISON AND WASHITA VALLEY RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Mr. Speaker, Senate bill 1486 was read a few mornings ago, and, at the request of the gentleman from New Jersey, who objected to its then present consideration, was printed in the RECORD and laid over to be taken up at some future time. I understand the objection is withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1486) to authorize the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANDALL. Does this come up by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to take it up for present consideration. It was read two or three days ago in full and objection was made, which the Chair understands is now withdrawn.

Mr. RANDALL. If it involves no debate I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Unless the reading of the bill be again demanded the question will be on ordering it to be read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and having been read the third time, was passed.

Mr. THROCKMORTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HARRISON DEWEY.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of House bill 3110, for the relief of Harrison Dewey, and put the same upon its passage; and as showing fully the unusual merits of the bill I ask that the reading of the report be had.

Mr. RANDALL. Is it lengthy?

Mr. GROUT. The report is quite brief, but it states the whole story.

The SPEAKER. The bill and report will be read subject to objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be directed to amend the record of the War Department in the case of Harrison Dewey, late second lieutenant of Company E, Second Regiment Vermont Volunteers, so as to grant him an honorable discharge from said service as of the date of his dismissal as now shown by said record.

The report (by Mr. BRAGG) is as follows:

The committee find from an investigation of the military history of Harrison Dewey as follows: He was mustered into service as first sergeant Company E, Second Regiment Vermont Volunteers, June 20, 1861; was promoted to second lieutenant same company and regiment, and mustered in as such to date January 11, 1862.

On the 4th day of October, 1862, Maj. Gen. William F. Smith, commanding Second Division, Sixth Corps, reported Lieutenant Dewey, with many officers, absent without leave, and requested that such officers be requested to rejoin their command at once or be dismissed. Upon this recommendation, approved by General McClellan, general commanding, Lieutenant Dewey was dismissed the service, by special order from the War Department, to date October 4, 1862.

Lieutenant Dewey, on an application for a vacation of this order, filed in the office of the Adjutant-General in 1880, states under oath that after the close of the Peninsular campaign in 1862, while his regiment was on the march from Harrison's Landing to Fortress Monroe, he was taken sick and sent to Odd Fellows' Hall Hospital, Washington, where he remained several weeks, when he returned to his regiment and first heard or knew of his dismissal.

This statement is confirmed by the records in the Surgeon-General's Office, which show that Lieutenant Dewey was "admitted to Odd Fellows' Hall Hospital, Washington, August 30, 1862, with remittent fever, and returned to duty November 27, 1862."

The application for relief has been denied at the War Department upon the sole ground "that the order had been executed, and it was not in the legitimate province of the Department to reconsider or reverse it."

The case is one of unquestionable merit, and the relief should be granted by legislative action, the only means left to remedy the wrong unintentionally done a good officer.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TRIGG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill H. R. 2139 on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is this a private bill?

Mr. TRIGG. It is a bill to exchange property purchased at Abingdon, Va., for the erection of a public building. It requires no appropriation.

The SPEAKER. It will be read subject to objection.

Mr. BEACH. I call for the regular order.

Mr. TRIGG. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that demand. I wish to state that the bill is introduced by request of the Secretary of the Treasury. The money was appropriated for this building, but has been unexpended and is waiting the exchange of that property, which is necessary to be made.

Mr. BEACH. There are a number of bills of the same general character, and I shall object to the consideration of any of them out of their regular order.

PRINTING OF CONSULAR REPORTS ON CATTLE-BREEDING, ETC.

Mr. BARKSDALE, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution, having considered the same, direct me to report it back and recommend its passage. The estimated cost of the printing is $1,572:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 14, 1886.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 3,000 copies of the reports of the consuls of the United States on cattle-breeding and dairy-farming; 2,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have an amendment I desire to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "Senate," in the last line, "and 1,000 copies for the use of the State Department." Also substitute the word "four" for the word "three;" so as it will read, 4,000 copies instead of 3,000 copies.

The question being taken on the amendment, the Speaker decided that it was rejected.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call for a division.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Before that is put, permit me to have read under the rules a letter from the Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent, as the House is now dividing.

Mr. STORM. I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am satisfied if the gentleman understood it he would not make the objection.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 32, noes 9.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is the call of standing and select committees for reports.

WOOL DUTIES.

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with adverse recommendations the resolution introduced by Mr. GROSVENOR, for the restoration of the wool duties of 1867, and the resolution of Mr. WILKINS, in regard to retaining the present rates of duty on wool; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask permission for the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] on behalf of the minority to present their views

There being no objection, leave was given to present the views of the minority; and they were ordered to be printed with the report of the majority.

REPORTS OF CONSULS.

Mr. BELMONT. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to ask that they be discharged from the further consideration of sundry reports of consuls on the trade and commerce of foreign countries, referred to that committee. It would appear that the printing of those reports is amply provided for by section 3798 of the Revised Statutes. The committee ask that it be authorized to return to the Clerk of the House of Representatives the said reports with a view to their being transmitted by him to the Public Printer, and that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the matter. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FORT SCOTT, KANS.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 1386) for the completion of a public building at Fort Scott, Kans.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ATCHISON, KANS.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 1350) to provide for the erection of a public building for the use of the post-office and Government offices at the city of Atchison, Kans.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PATENT OFFICE FEES.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Patents, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 7195, a bill (H. R. 9474) to authorize and direct the Commissioner of Patents to notify certain persons that fees in certain cases are subject to their order; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9010) for the relief of Sylvanus Sandford; and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

AMANDA HOUSELL.

Mr. PIDCOCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the bill (H. R. 3546) granting a pension to Amanda Housell with Senate amendments; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the Senate amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BENJAMIN OBEKIAH.

Mr. PIDCOCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2173) granting a pension to Benjamin Obekiah; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH M. POTTER.

Mr. PIDCOCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6162) granting a pension to Joseph M. Potter; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MICHAEL TODD.

Mr. PIDCOCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7335) granting a pension to Michael Todd; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GILES WRIGHT.

Mr. PIDCOCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 8828) granting a pension to Giles Wright; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PETER P. HOFFMAN.

Mr. PIDCOCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6823) granting a pension to Peter P. Hoffman; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, from the Committee on Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. 1357) authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and determine certain claims, with amendments by the Senate.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Would it be in order for me to ask unanimous consent at this time to act on the Senate amendments?

The SPEAKER. That would not be in order at this time.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the Senate amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF JOHN C. THOMPSON.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4079) for the relief of the estate of John C. Thompson, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MELINDA GRIMES.

Mr. SMALLS, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5184) for the relief of Melinda Grimes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BARKER, WILLIAMS AND OTHERS.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Claims, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 6854, a bill (H. R. 9475) for the relief of Barker, Williams and others; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill (H. R. 6854) was laid on the table.

SILAS D. BALDWIN.

Mr. NEGLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the joint resolution (H. Res. 19) for the relief of Silas D. Baldwin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL W. DANNER.

Mr. NEGLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4684) to relieve Samuel W. Danner of the charge of desertion; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. NEGLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, also reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 2651) for the relief of Jesse Edens;

A bill (H. R. 2530) for the relief of C. A. Worthington;

A bill (H. R. 4895) to remove the charge of desertion against Willis Layton;

A bill (H. R. 5407) to relieve John Lyon from the charge of desertion;

A bill (H. R. 5417) for the removal of the charge of desertion from the record of Clement H. Cole;

A bill (H. R. 3044) for the relief of Clarkson Tryon;

A bill (H. R. 6618) for the relief of John J. Silbernagel;

A bill (H. R. 4725) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William Miller;

A bill (H. R. 1915) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Michael Clancy;

A bill (H. R. 3938) for the relief of James Coughlin;

A bill (H. R. 6141) for the relief of Lee L. Betterton;

A bill (H. R. 6729) for the relief of Albert G. Romine;

A bill (H. R. 5258) for the relief of James W. Dotson; and

A bill (H. R. 3316) for the relief of Lewis J. Trasper.

JAMES ROACH.

Mr. WOLFORD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 228) for the relief of James Roach; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

T. J. PAYNE.

Mr. WOLFORD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, also reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 1710) for the relief of T. J. Payne; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES S. CLARK & CO.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2474) for the relief of James S. Clark & Co.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of general appropriation bills.

Mr. WELLBORN. Mr. Speaker, this day was set apart by order of the House for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs. I ask unanimous consent that that order be continued until the 29th day of June.

Mr. RANDALL. With the same privileges as before and subject to the same limitations.

Mr. WELLBORN. Yes; the same order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. WELLBORN] asks unanimous consent that the order heretofore made setting apart this day for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs be continued until the 29th of the present month. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL was then agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose yesterday the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was under consideration. The Clerk will report the pending paragraph.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill at line 2013.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose last evening I had addressed the Chair with a view to offering an amendment to the paragraph last read by the Clerk. Before I offer that amendment I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what information he has with reference to the duties of the surgeons described in lines 1990 and 1992 of the bill. I wish to state that it is my information that all these surgeons do the same kind of work, that they work promiscuously. I make this inquiry, or suggestion, with the view of moving to amend by striking out, in lines 1990 and 1991, the words "two qualified surgeons, who shall be experts in their profession, at $2,000 each;" and also by striking out, in line 1992, the word "eighteen" and inserting "twenty."

Mr. RANDALL. So far as I know, the officials are surgeons, whose duty it is to pass upon surgical questions involved in applications to the Pension Office for pensions. I know of no other duty which they perform.

Mr. TAULBEE. Do not all these twenty surgeons do the same duty?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will state to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] that I am well satisfied from what I know of the Pension Office that these two surgeons have entirely different duties to perform from the others. They are experts, as stated in the bill; and if we should strike out this special provision for them in the absence of any good reason being shown, it may greatly cripple the work of the Pension Office. I believe the appropriation last year was the same as proposed in this bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. The only reason I have to furnish is that, according to my information (and I think the information is correct), the surgeons who receive only $1,800 per year do precisely the same work as these two who get $2,000. Now, I want fair play and justice; and I maintain that as all these surgeons, according to my information from members on the floor as well as others who I believe know all the facts, do the same work they should be upon an equality as to salary. If the services of these two are worth $2,000 each, we ought to give the same amount to the whole twenty. If the services rendered by all these surgeons are worth only $1,800 a year each, I see no good reason for selecting two of these officers to receive a salary of $2,000 and giving only $1,800 each to the other eighteen.

Mr. LONG. Do not these two surgeons have a sort of final responsibility upon appeal? I do not know that it is so; I merely suggest it.

Mr. TAULBEE. According to my understanding that is not the fact, but, on the contrary, the whole twenty do the same work, these surgeons who receive $1,800 frequently doing the work of the two who receive $2,000. In other words, the work is done by these various officers promiscuously. That is my understanding; and I think I am correct.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that his information is correct. The duties of these men are substantially the same. By reading the bill it will be seen that they are required to possess the same qualifications. The duties they are called upon to perform are, as suggested by the gentleman, entirely the same. It seems to me, therefore, they ought to receive the same compensation. I think with the gentleman from Kentucky that a salary of $2,000 is not too much for each of these men, if they possess the requisite qualifications.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] whether in the statement he has just made he speaks from his own personal knowledge or merely from hearsay.

Mr. PERKINS. I speak from the knowledge which I have obtained at the Pension Office by coming in contact with the men who are engaged in doing this work. The two surgeons who receive $2,000 each constitute no part of the medical board of referees, but perform duties independently of the board—the same duties performed by the eighteen who are provided for in the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no distinct and separate statute authorizing these two officers to receive $2,000 each; but there is precedent. From 1882 they have been recognized as distinct from the others, and have been paid $2,000 each.

Mr. TAULBEE. I believe that is true.

Mr. RANDALL. I will add that they were estimated for this year at that salary; but the Commissioner himself submitted a proposition that these two officials should each receive $2,250. The committee, however, declined to accede to that proposed increase, and continued the salaries as they have been since 1882.

Mr. MORRILL. Was not the increase of which the gentleman speaks recommended for the whole twenty of these surgeons?

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; only for these two.

Mr. MORRILL. Did not the Commissioner make a recommendation as to the eighteen?

Mr. RANDALL. He wanted those eighteen put up to $2,000, a proposition which the committee did not adopt.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will not strike out the provision of the bill on this subject, which has been the appropriation since 1882, when it was inserted, I have no doubt, for some good reason then assigned by the Commissioner of Pensions or the Secretary of the Interior. By making a change in this particular with no better information than is suggested here on the floor we may throw that entire office into confusion. I hope that the practice of the House sanctioning the distinction recognized by this bill will not be overthrown without any kind of official data and without the assignment of any reason except vague rumors or statements which gentlemen claim to have heard in the Pension Office.

Mr. HEARD. We are advised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that it is recommended by the Commissioner of Pensions to increase the salaries of all the eighteen medical examiners from $1,800 to $2,000 each, and of the two officers now in question to $2,250 each. I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, or the gentleman from Illinois, both being on the committee, whether it appears from any statement made by the Commissioner of Pensions that there is any difference in the character of the work performed by these two men from that done by the eighteen?

Mr. RANDALL. The very language of the estimate goes to show that these two men perform a different class of work. In 1883 there were four of them, and it was expressly declared that they should be surgeons, while the others are described as medical examiners for pensions.

Mr. HEARD. I would like to ask this further question as to these two parties; does the gentleman know——

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know them.

Mr. HEARD. I did not mean to ask if the gentleman knew them individually, but whether or not the gentleman knows them to be actual surgeons in the office. I understand there is some question about the fact.

Mr. RANDALL. The law requires them to be.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the two qualified surgeons provided are specialists in their profession, and the language of the act I understand to be substantially that. One I know is assigned to special work in connection with diseases of the mind, having had large experience in hospitals for the insane. The other, I am of the impression, is an oculist, and has to do with diseases of and injuries to the eyes. These are both important matters, more important than the general work of the office, requiring special skill and knowledge, which is entitled, I should say, to at least an additional compensation of $200 a year above that of the ordinary physicians in the office.

Upon that subject I want to say, while the matter has been raised, that although there is no amendment pending——

Mr. RANDALL. There is an amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MATSON. That is in relation to the pay of the two medical examiners. I say that while there is no amendment pending to that effect, I think they all should be paid $2,000 a year.

All of the reviewers of cases, the legal reviewers, are paid $2,000, and the medical reviewers get but $1,800. I see no reason why there should be such a distinction, and think they ought to be paid just as much. What ought to have been done by this bill was to raise the pay of the medical reviewers $200 each, and not take up two and provide $200 additional for them and pay the rest but $1,800.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the fact that these two officers are required to be surgeons, if he will look at line 1992 of the bill he will find that the eighteen medical examiners are required to be surgeons.

Mr. PERKINS. And of skill and experience in their profession.

Mr. TAULBEE. Now, I do not think that any gentleman has denied but that the examiners do the work promiscuously of the office. That is my understanding, and I have no doubt of the truth of it.

My amendment proposes to reduce the salary of the two qualified surgeons to $1,800, putting them down upon the same basis as the other medical examiners who do the same work. I think there ought to be uniformity in the pay. My judgment is that $1,800 is sufficient, and for the sake of uniformity, if the House is of opinion that $1,800 is enough for the two surgeons in question, then I insist the House ought to vote $2,000 a year to each of the other eighteen medical examiners.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. We can not do that under the law.

Mr. TAULBEE. It is suggested by the gentleman from Illinois that we can not do that under the law. I maintain if we can vote $2,000 to these two, that we can vote with the same propriety $2,000 to the other eighteen. I understand the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to say that there is no law fixing the compensation of the two at $2,000 except the current appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I so understand it.

Mr. TAULBEE. Now, it has been repeatedly held by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole that the current appropriation bill for purposes of the point of order is not regarded as existing law. Under the ruling I see no propriety in giving these men a larger rate of compensation than is fixed by the general law.

Mr. RANDALL. I urge a vote; but before demanding it desire to say that the two qualified surgeons shall be experts in their profession, while the eighteen medical examiners are required to be surgeons of education, skill, and experience. It is rather, I confess, a distinction without much of a difference, but there is a distinction at all events.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. TAULBEE, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 63.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire whether the provision in lines 1997 and 1998, providing for twenty-four assistant chiefs of division at $1,800 each, is not new legislation and liable to the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I think not, although the gentleman can test the point of order.

Mr. BURROWS. Where is the law?

Mr. RANDALL. The law of the last session of Congress. It is not law as against a permanent statute, but it is the law until repealed at all events.

Mr. BURROWS. I understand——

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will find in the existing law, twenty-four assistant chiefs of division at the same salary fixed here.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can answer the gentleman that this is not new legislation.

Mr. BURROWS. What is not new legislation?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The eighteen chiefs you speak of.

Mr. BURROWS. Where is it provided for in the permanent law?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not know whether it is contained in the Revised Statutes or not; but if all appropriations are ruled out on the ground that they are not contained in the statutes, you could strike out everything in the bill and abolish the entire Pension Office.

Mr. BURROWS. I am not speaking on that theory; but I ask what authority there is for the appropriation?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And I am speaking of the practice in making up appropriation bills. This appropriation stands upon the same footing as all of the other officers of the Pension Office.

Mr. BURROWS. I mention it because I am advised a practice is growing up of designating in the various Departments chiefs of bureaus or chiefs of divisions, evading civil-service examination. For instance, take offices where there are twelve clerks, six $1,800 clerks——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If a practice has grown up it has grown up under your own administration, because it has come over from the last administration to this.

Mr. BURROWS. Take offices where there are eight $1,200——

Mr. RANDALL. Is there anything before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. There is not.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I raise the point of order against this discussion.

Mr. BURROWS. Then I will move an amendment. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized and will proceed.

Mr. BURROWS. And I do it for the purpose of making a suggestion. I understand the practice obtains in the various Departments of the Government of designating chiefs of division without authority of law. Rule XIX of the civil-service rules excludes from examination all chiefs of division. The practice is growing up of designating a chief of division and then creating a vacancy and filling the place without examination.

To illustrate: Take an office where there are twelve clerks; now a practice is obtaining of designating six of the clerks as chiefs of division and the others as subordinates under them, each one having one subordinate; so that when a vacancy occurs by removal or in any other way an appointment is made evading the civil-service examination.

Mr. HAMMOND. Does the gentleman know of any such practice?

Mr. BURROWS. I have stated that I am so informed from a source which I consider reliable.

Mr. HAMMOND. I saw a statement in the Post this morning that some rascal could do that if he wanted to.

Mr. BURROWS. I did not read the Post, and therefore did not know it contained the statement referred to.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then the gentleman did not get his information from the Post?

Mr. BURROWS. No; not from any authority so unreliable as that.

Mr. HAMMOND. That is the only source where the information has been published, so far as I know.

Mr. LONG. Does the gentleman from Georgia mean to intimate that any man who does that is a rascal?

Mr. HAMMOND. I have merely said that the Post of this morning stated that a rascal could do such a thing if he wanted to.

Mr. BURROWS. I am advised, as I have already stated, that it is being done continually in the various Departments of the Government. Now, I do not know but this proviso in reference to assistant chiefs of division is for the same purpose of appointing these assistant chiefs of division without civil-service examination. I have said all that I wish to, and now withdraw the pro forma amendment. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I renew the pro forma amendment for the purpose of saying that if the gentleman from Michigan has found a mare's nest, it is a mare's nest belonging to the Republican party. These assistant chiefs of division come over to us from the Republican administration of Mr. Arthur. They were put into the bill of 1883. Therefore, if there has been any attempt to evade the civil-service law, it does not lie in the mouth of that side of the House to make complaint of it. It comes over to us from his own party.

I will remind the gentleman further that I am willing to make defense of his own administration in that regard. It is not put in the bill for the purpose of evading civil-service examination. That law requires these assistant chiefs of division so appointed to be appointed through the civil-service examination. It is not, therefore, an evasion of the law. It could not be an evasion of the law. If, however, there is any fault about it, the gentleman must make complaint against his own administration.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to say in reply that when I alluded to the fact this practice was growing up I intended to be understood it was growing up under this administration, and not that it had grown up under the preceding administration. Furthermore, that if that practice has grown up under this or former administrations, for one, in my judgment, it should be put an end to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Can you give us any evidence where it has grown up under this administration?

Mr. BURROWS. I only repeat what I have already stated, that I have been so informed from a source I deem to be reliable.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is an extremely vague answer, and I hope the gentleman will state some particular Department where any such practice has grown up.

Mr. BURROWS. I shall not answer the gentleman from Illinois when he asks me for the source of my information as he answered, the other day, the gentleman from Maine—"It is none of your business."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman is not ready to state his authority he should not have made the charge of any such practice having grown up under this administration.

Mr. BURROWS. Of course it is understood I do not wish the removal of any one who gave me the information.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I am glad the gentleman from Michigan does not attempt to reply in the same way, as he would not find himself at home in that kind of dialect. [Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands by unanimous consent all formal amendments are withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional force of one hundred and fifty special examiners, for one year, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions, at a salary of $1,400 each, $210,000; and no person so appointed shall be employed in the State from which he is appointed; and any of those now employed in the Pension Office or as special examiners may be reappointed if they are found to be qualified.

Mr. MCCOMAS rose.

Mr. LONG. I rise to a question of order on that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONG. I make the point of order against the words in lines 2022, 2023, and 2024: "to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions."

If the Chair will look at the provision in the last year's bill it will be found to be in every respect identical, except these words I have read have been inserted.

I make the point of order on those words, first, because they are a new law—an entirely new provision of law. The Civil Service Commission would have, I think, the right to make rules as to these officers, with regard to their appointment. But if this clause is inserted that discretion is taken away from them, and these officers are appointed entirely on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions.

For those two reasons I raise the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Representing the Committee on Appropriations, I want to direct the attention of the Chair to the facts in connection with this matter. The language of the current law is:

For an additional force of one hundred and fifty special examiners for one year, at a salary of $1,400, $210,000.

Now it is alleged that that law ceases and determines at the end of the fiscal year, ending 30th June next. What is provided in the bill we are now considering is for another and a different year entirely. There is where the whole matter hinges.

Mr. LONG. But in that case the point of order would lie against the whole section. In that case the whole section becomes law. I did not raise the point of order to that extent. I recognize this as a work which is in progress; and so far as it is in progress under the provisions of last year's law it is in order to continue it, but not to continue it with a new provision of law, which is new legislation, and which would also take from the Civil Service Commission a discretion which under the existing law would be lodged in them with regard to the appointment of these special examiners.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not discussing the point of order suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts as to the entire paragraph. I am only stating in opposition to the point of order as made by the gentleman that the law of the current year provides that these officers should be for one year. The law as proposed in this bill provides that there shall be next year another corps of one hundred and fifty examiners. It all hinges on that, as I said before.

Mr. LONG. I am inclined to think that the gentleman from Pennsylvania would agree with me that if any officers should be selected under the civil-service rules these officers should be.

Mr. RANDALL. That has no relation to the point of order. When that question is up I will discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How far does the point of order extend?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the words against which the point of order was made.

The Clerk read as follows:

To be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. RANDALL. If the Chair rests his ruling upon the old act, then I must ask that the language embraced in the old act shall be inserted here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair bases it on the general principle that this changes the law as to the mode of appointment. So far as regards these employés being appointed for a year, that is true of all the employés in all the Departments generally; it is true there are exceptions. They would all be dropped out but for the appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to strike out the last three words. I offer this amendment for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that on the 9th day of this month, when this appropriation bill was under discussion, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] made a vehement attack on the last administration of the Pension Office with reference to the appointment of these special examiners, saying they were all Republicans. During that discussion the following colloquy occurred:

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Look at this statement. Of one hundred and forty-eight regular special examiners General Black found in office not a single one of them was a Democrat.

Mr. GALLINGER. How did the gentleman find that out?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. From the Pension Office, of my own seeking; from the very best authority which can be given.

Mr. GALLINGER. How did the gentleman from Illinois find it out? Have these men testified they were all Republicans? Or has it merely been assumed that they were Republicans?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have it from the best authority.

Mr. GALLINGER. What authority?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have it from the best authority; and I defy the gentleman to deny its correctness.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know the name of one man in the special service.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I dare the gentleman to deny it, or any one else.

Mr. GALLINGER. But you do not know that fact.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do know it. I have it from authority in which I have the greatest confidence.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have it from official authority.

Mr. GALLINGER. We want to know.

Mr. REED, of Maine. We want to know the gentleman's authority.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have it from the Pension Office.

Mr. REED, of Maine. From whom?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is none of your business. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have your authority.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I state again I have it from the Pension Office, and every word of it is true. And I believe the gentleman knows it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know it; and I would not take your word for it [laughter], or that of anybody else. These men have not testified they were Republicans. Who knows whether they were or not?

During that discussion I believed I had authority for the statement that these men were not all Republicans. That authority I have been convinced since was correct. But in addition to what information I had myself I hold in my hand a letter, received a few days ago, dated Terre Haute, Ind., June 10, 1886, which I will read:

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER, Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: I have read the statement made by Mr. TOWNSHEND "that there was not a Democrat on the list of special examiners when Mr. Black took charge of the office." I want to say to you that I served during the time from April, 1884, until July, 1885, as a special examiner, and was assigned to duty in this State, and during all this time there were three avowed Democrats serving in the same capacity, and they are in the service yet, one of them being especially retained for Democratic testimony before the committee of investigation at Cincinnati, Ohio, after the Presidential election. The strongest evidence that these men were Democrats, outside of the assertions they made, is the fact that two of them glorified over the election of Cleveland and remained on a protracted drunk for days. I was detailed to hunt one of them up, and found him in a Democratic saloon hollowing for the President and more rum.

[Laughter.]

Out of regard for the tender sensibilities of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], who tells gentlemen on this floor when they ask him a civil question that it is none of their business, and in contrast to the gentleman's conduct when he refuses to give his authority, I refrain from reading two additional lines in this letter which might seem personal to the gentleman from Illinois, and will say that the letter is signed, "Very respectfully, W. H. Soale."

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Soale is a practicing attorney in the city of Terre Haute, and my design has been simply to add this letter to the current history of this discussion, and I will leave the gentleman from Illinois to settle with this committee the question of fact that he has raised by his wholesale and unwarranted charges against Mr. Dudley, late Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, there are two kinds of Democrats in office, as I have discovered since the election of Mr. Cleveland—those who were Democrats before his election and those who have been converted since he was elected.

Mr. STEELE. I hope the gentleman does not refer to the Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have nothing to say on that subject. I am simply saying a word or two now in reply to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. When I was asked the other day where I got my authority for the statement I had made I gave the only answer that any gentleman could demand of me, the only answer that it could be expected I would give; I said that I had got it from the Pension Office. I would like to know what further information the gentleman had a right to demand. When he kept pressing me for my authority I said that my statement was based upon official information, and gave him to understand that that information was obtained from the Pension Office. I repeat that now. I meant no discourtesy by my reply; but when gentlemen ask me a question over and over and over again to which I have already given a plain, direct answer, I feel that a point has been reached where forbearance ceases to be a virtue. All I have to say about the matter is that I got my information from the Pension Office. Is anything more necessary to make the gentleman understand where I got my information? And, Mr. Chairman, I now repeat that I believe that information was correct, notwithstanding the letter which the gentleman has read. I apprehend that the writer of that letter is a Democrat of the class who were converted after Mr. Cleveland's election.

Mr. STEELE. Oh, no; this man was bounced because he was not a Democrat.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Well, all I know about this subject is that I had my information from the Pension Office, that of the one hundred and fifty special examiners appointed there was not a Democrat among them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the gentleman be kind enough to tell me how any man in the Pension Office could have known the politics of those special examiners?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is a question I am not able to answer. The authority from which I got my information could perhaps explain it, but I can not. But, Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from New Hampshire has perhaps been misled as to what I did state here. I stated that among the one hundred and fifty special examiners appointed as such there was not a single Democrat.

There were nearly four hundred persons engaged in that work, but all of them except one hundred and fifty were clerks detailed from the office. Now I understand that among those clerks so detailed there were four or perhaps five Democrats. That is the statement I made the other day, that of the clerks detailed for this work I understood that there were four or five Democrats; but that the special examiners appointed as such were all Republicans.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the gentleman know anything about a special examiner by the name of Eisenstein, an Ohio man, a Democrat?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not know anything about him.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I object to this wide latitude of debate upon a motion to strike out the last word. I want to bring it back to the consideration of what is legitimately in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, as the remark of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] which has been commented upon was made to me in reply to what I supposed was a civil question, I wish to say that I have not harbored any resentment. I have had no feeling that the gentleman from Illinois intended to be uncivil. I think he acted up to the full measure of his knowledge of what was civil. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional force of one hundred and fifty special examiners, for one year, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions, at a salary of $1,400 each, $210,000; and no person so appointed shall be employed in the State from which he is appointed; and any of those now employed in the Pension Office or as special examiners may be reappointed if they are found to be qualified.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to strike out from the words "and no per-," on line 2025, to the end of the paragraph, including lines 2026, 2027, 2028, and 2029. Mr. Chairman, on the 9th day of June the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] in debate upon this bill used the following language (RECORD, page 5483):

I am warranted in making the statement, sir, that if you will ascertain the number of Republican soldiers who have been removed from office under this administration it can be shown that an equal number of Democratic soldiers have been appointed.

And on the 10th of June the same gentleman used the following language, to be found on page 5540 of the RECORD:

Yet the aggregate of the soldiers appointed under Cleveland's administration is equal to if not greater than the aggregate number of soldiers removed.

I call the attention of the committee to the fact that in speaking of the removals the distinguished gentleman used the words "Republican soldiers," and in speaking of the appointments he used the words "Democratic soldiers." That is exactly a fair proposition on its face; but the difficulty in working it out is that "Republican soldiers" as a rule were soldiers upon the side of the Union, while the term "Democratic soldiers" covers two varieties of soldiers. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I claim that these removals and appointments have been made without regard and in direct violation of sections 1546 and 1754 of the Revised Statutes, which I include as a portion of my remarks:

SEC. 1546. No officer or employé of the Government shall require or request any workingman in any navy-yard to contribute or pay any money for political purposes, nor shall any workingman be removed or discharged for political opinion; and any officer or employé of the Government who shall offend against the provisions of this section shall be dismissed from the service of the United States.

SEC. 1754. Persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty shall be preferred for appointments to civil offices, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such offices.

I hold in my hand the annual address of the department commander of the Grand Army of the Republic of the State of Virginia; and in that I find a correspondence which I will embody in my remarks touching this identical question. From this correspondence I learn that in the department of Virginia there have been twenty-one ex-Union soldiers removed from office and fourteen ex-confederate soldiers appointed in their places, besides seven Democrats who never went to war at all.

Now, if the gentleman from Illinois meant to say that something like an equal number of "Democratic soldiers" had been appointed, without drawing any line of distinction between those who fought upon the Union side and those who fought on the other, then he is approximately right.

Mr. Chairman, I will not say anything in the way of complaint in regard to the appointment of ex-confederate soldiers. I think that, considering the representation of ex-confederates upon this floor and in the Senate and in the diplomatic places and all other positions of the Government, it is no more than fair that when a Republican is removed a Democratic ex-confederate should be appointed. Speaking for myself, I would vastly prefer that the places of honor and trust in the Southern States should be conferred upon ex-confederates rather than upon that other class of gentlemen, especially in the Northern portion of the Union. I think that in the nature of things this is what ought to be done.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to my colleague [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. I complain in the first place because these Union soldiers have been removed; that is my first proposition. My second complaint is that if they were to be removed their places were not all filled with ex-confederate soldiers instead of those gentlemen who did not go to the war.

Some of these cases, Mr. Chairman, are of the most flagrant character. I have a note here in reference to A. J. Hopkins, engine-tender, Bureau of Construction and Repairs, appointed in 1869 upon the recommendation of Naval Constructor Webb. He was in 1861 arrested at Portsmouth, Va., and confined in Libby prison for his loyalty to the Government; served in the Union Army during the rebellion; had sixteen years' experience in the yard; was an honored and respected citizen; was removed May 4 last, and Virginius Freeman, of the confederate navy, appointed. This Mr. Freeman was in the Union Navy before the war, which he left to join the confederate cause.

I have also a reference to the case of one Fuller, a Union soldier, who lost an arm in the service of his country, in a Pennsylvania regiment. I find that he has been removed apparently without cause so far as is disclosed in the record, and an ex-confederate has been put in his place.

The record of this State alone shows that nearly all the removals that have been made have been removals of Union soldiers. The names embraced in this record are only such as belong to the Grand Army of the Republic, and come, therefore, within the proper jurisdiction of the encampment officers. But from the same authority I learn that outside of this record there have been a large number of Union soldiers removed from office; and in no case in Virginia, so far as these men are concerned, has there been any Union soldier appointed.

Now, I agree that "Democratic soldiers" have been appointed, but the language of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois was calculated, I thought, to be misleading when he only gave the general description of "Democratic soldiers." I desire to append to these few remarks the record to which I referred and which I have before me.

I quote from the report of Col. H. De B. Clay, commander of the Department of Virginia, Grand Army of the Republic:

And now, comrades, we come to that portion of my report which I believe you will agree with me as being of great and important interest—it is the violation in spirit and letter by the present national administration of the law which gives to the honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors of the late war the preference over civilians in the matter of employment.

With the desire to prevent the discharge from Government employ of the members of this department, I took action soon after the inauguration of President Cleveland, by addressing the Secretary of the Navy the following letter:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF VIRGINIA,
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
Newport News, Va., April 6, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith lists of names, and place of employment, of thirty-nine ex-Union sailors and soldiers, members of the Grand Army of the Republic, who served during the late civil war, and who are, or until within a day or two have been, employed at the Gosport navy-yard, Portsmouth, Va.

I take the liberty of submitting to your consideration the services of these men, in the hope that you will be pleased to direct their continuance as employés o your Department.

I believe them all to be worthy and deserving, and to be of that class whose employment is contemplated in section 1754 Revised Statutes, and section 3 of the act of Congress approved August 15, 1876. Please see paragraph 12, page 159, Navy Regulations.

Day before yesterday Nelson Proctor, one of the men named on the roll, was dropped from the position of foreman of laborers, and the reason assigned was the "want of funds." I ask that he be restored to his place when the Department is in funds and requires the services of such an employé.

Very respectfully,

H. DE B. CLAY,
Commander Dept. of Va. G. A. R.

Hon. WILLIAM C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

Accompanying that letter was a list of thirty-nine ex-Union soldiers and sailors, members of the Grand Army, who were then employed in the navy-yard at Portsmouth. The list contained the name, rank, regiment, corps, service, character of wound, date of discharge, and length of time in their then position.

That letter and list I carried to Washington immediately after it was written. Accompanied by Hon. H. LIBBEY, Representative from the second Congressional district of Virginia, I called at the Navy Department, who left letter and list with the Secretary, with the expectation that they would receive some acknowledgment or reply, but to this day there has been no attention paid to it or my request.

Within a few days after my letter was written to the Secretary of the Navy Commodore Mayo was relieved from command of the navy-yard at Portsmouth, and Commodore Truxton, to whom I addressed a letter, was placed in command. The following is a copy of my letter:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF VIRGINIA,
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
Newport News, Va., April 17, 1885.

COMMODORE: I inclose herewith a list of the names of members in good standing in the Grand Army of the Republic, who are, or until very recently have been, employed in the several departments of your command.

They are old soldiers and sailors who served in the Union Army during the late civil war, and who are employed, and whose claims for continued employment are and were based on the provisions of sections 1754 and 1755 Revised Statutes, and section 3 of the act of Congress approved August 15, 1876.

Many of these men have been in the navy-yard for years, and have become efficient and skillful in their several positions; therefore, on the theory of retaining old and faithful servants, and because of the law giving them the preference, I hope it may be your pleasure to give them work, and prevent their removal, as is rumored is in contemplation.

Very respectfully,

H. DE B. CLAY,
Commander Department of Virginia, Grand Army of the Republic.

Commodore WM. T. TRUXTUN,
Commanding Navy-Yard, Portsmouth, Va.

Accompanying that letter was a statement of names, &c., similar to that sent the honorable Secretary of the Navy, and, as in that case, no reply or acknowledgment was made thereto.

I waited patiently until June before I again made a move. In the mean time many of our comrades were discharged from the navy-yard and their places filled by civilians and ex-confederates. In June I went to Washington for the purpose of seeing if I could induce the administration to stop their discharge. I called on the Secretary, but he was absent. I called on the President, but he referred me to the Secretary; so I returned without obtaining any result, unless it was my removal as collector of customs at Newport News, Va., and the appointment of an ex-confederate as my successor.

My summary removal from office, without charges, caused me some surprise, as I had written a letter, of which the following is a copy, and which explains itself:

CUSTOM-HOUSE, COLLECTOR'S OFFICE,
Newport News, Va., May 18, 1885.

SIR: The newspapers of to-day bring to my notice the changes that are occurring among the Federal office-holders in this State.

I take it for granted that removals or suspensions are only made on charges preferred against the official sought to be affected thereby. I, therefore, with a consciousness of having performed my duty with honesty and efficiency, deem it a duty to myself and the faithful men under me to ask that in the event of any complaint being made against me by responsible parties that I be heard in my own defense before action being taken thereon by the Government.

With a desire to place the Department in possession of information not heretofore furnished by me, I have the honor to report that I am of that class whose employment is contemplated by section 1754 Revised Statutes, and section 3 act of Congress approved August 15, 1876.

Very respectfully,

H. DE B. CLAY, Collector.

Hon. DANIEL MANNING,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

On seeing the report of my removal in the papers, I called on the President, explained that I was a Union wounded soldier who had been appointed for a term of four years as collector of customs, and had been confirmed by the Senate. There had never been a complaint made against the administration of my office that I knew of. I had rendered my accounts regularly, and was in no way indebted to the Government. I asked for reasons for my removal. I was referred to Hon. D. Manning, the Secretary of the Treasury, who gave me a hearing, with the assurance that I would not be removed, as he would see the President. Notwithstanding this promise, my friends in New York, Ohio, and Virginia, business men and Grand Army men, Democrats and Republicans, deluged the President and Secretary with testimonials as to my integrity and experience, and urged my retention on business principles, and because I was an honorably discharged wounded Union soldier they asked that I be permitted to serve the two years of my unexpired term of office. There never was a man whose friends rallied more loyally than did those who came to my support. For three months I held on, with almost the entire Democratic press of the State fighting and maligning me, and, as far as they dare, attacking the Grand Army for its support of me. Finally, on September 1, 1885, I was ordered to turn over my office to Maj. Baker P. Lee, without a charge of any kind having been made known to me by the Department. Since then my accounts have been adjusted and closed, with a small balance found due me, showing that I had at least been an honest and accurate official.

In August I wrote Comrade Jos. W. Kay, of Brooklyn, one of the most energetic workers of the Veterans' Rights Union, asking his assistance in securing the retention of Comrade Spencer of Phil. Kearny Post. Comrade Kay responded promptly, and at once set about the work of keeping him in, as shown by his letter to me, as follows, namely:

VETERANS' RIGHTS UNION, Brooklyn, N. Y., August 5, 1885.

COMMANDER AND COMRADE: Your favor 1st instant is at hand this morning. I got a letter from Allan a day or two ago, and it inclosed another; the one you send was probably the one intended for me. I will do what I can to present the matter of Comrade Spencer to the Secretary in such a way as to insure recognition, and united now in the defense of a comrade as twenty years agone in defense of a united country, we will try to succeed.

Yours, in F., C., and L.,

JOSEPH W. KAY,
107 Prince Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

H. DE B. CLAY,
Dept. Com. G. A. R., Virginia.

October 25, 1885, I again visited the Navy Department, encouraged by a letter published by the Secretary of the Navy to the Veterans' Rights Association, professing a disinclination to remove the Grand Army men from the Brooklyn navy-yard. The Secretary was absent in New York, but I saw Commodore David Harmony, acting Secretary, and to him appealed to have certain of our comrades, whose cases I presented, restored to the yard. I was told by the commodore that the Department held the commandant of each navy-yard responsible for appointment and discharge of all civil employés, and would not interfere; that the Secretary had appointed a few foremen, but that was all. Later I forwarded through Congressman LIBBEY the applications for restoration to the yard of Comrades Eaton, Bond, Ryder and Kennedy, but nothing had been done up to a week ago.

My efforts to prevent removals at the Portsmouth navy-yard have not been entirely lost, as of the thirty-nine comrades at work there on April 1, 1885, there are still five employed, and with the exception of those five, and two in Richmond, I don't know of another Grand Army man in the employ of the Government in the entire department, which consists of the States of Virginia, North and South Carolina. Efforts should be continued to procure the restoration of our comrades to positions they once held, or to other places in the Government employ, whereby they can earn a support.

The following is a description of those of our comrades who have been removed from civil positions they held under the Government in this department, and whose claims were presented to the administration, asking their retention, and no attention paid thereto:

Past Department Commander William N. Eaton, of Farragut Post, No. 3, who was removed from the position of store clerk, department of steam-engineering, navy-yard, Norfolk, Va., May 29; no charges; no cause is assigned. An untrained civilian, William Easby, was appointed in his place. Comrade Eaton had filled the place for nearly eighteen years; he has the finest testimonials from officers of the Navy under whom he had served, who testified to his ability and character. This case has been twice presented to the Secretary of the Navy and once to Commodore Truxtun, without any cause assigned by either as to why discharged.

Past Department Commander Richard Bond, Farragut Post, No. 3, formerly brass-molder and galvanizer in construction department, Norfolk navy-yard, has applied under this administration to foreman at the navy yard for work, has been refused, and no cause assigned, excepting he must get recommendation from the local Democratic committee of Portsmouth. This, notwithstanding his many testimonials and recommendations from the several naval constructors under whom he served, testifying to his skill as a workman and his excellent character. He failed in securing work, and saw men employed who had never been in United States service in any capacity before. Comrade Bond enlisted in the Marine Corps in June, 1861, and was discharged therefrom September 23, 1864, on surgeon's certificate of disability, the result of disease contracted in the service. He was shot through both arms during the war.

Past Department Commander William Ryder, entered the naval service in 1859, serving as gunner's mate until the breaking out of the war, when he enlisted in the Army, was transferred to the Navy, accompanying Admiral Farragut up the Mississippi, was honorably discharged in 1865, was employed as quarterman of riggers at Norfolk navy-yard, was removed, and J. W. Thompson, who had been an officer in Gaines's confederate battery, appointed in his place.

Comrade James Kennedy, of Farragut Post, No. 3, who enlisted in Marine Corps in 1850, and was honorably discharged in 1864, and who had been employed as laborer in steam-engineering department for previous two years, made application to the proper officers of yard for work, was refused, notwithstanding many men who had never served the United States were employed at the time.

Junior Vice Department Commander Rufus S. Jones enlisted July, 1863, Eighth Regiment United States Colored Troops, served as sergeant-major, was appointed inspector of customs at Old Point, Va., March 15, 1882, and was removed June 24, 1885, and an ex-confederate put in his place.

Charles Spencer, private Company G, Fifth Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, served from August, 1862, to June, 1863, was removed without cause August 31, 1885, from position of clerk and inspector United States customs, Richmond, Va., in which position he had served eight years, under three different collectors, to their entire satisfaction, according to their letters in his possession. Among the efforts made for his retention and reinstatement was a resolution of Phil. Kearny Post to collector of customs at Richmond June 17, 1885, about time first changes in employés were mentioned. No notice taken of it.

Letter by commander of post to Secretary of the Treasury, July 23, 1885, inclosing testimonials. Nothing heard from it.

Letter to the President by Comrade Spencer, July 25, 1885, inclosing testimonials. Referred to the Secretary of the Treasury. Nothing more heard from it.

The "Veterans' Rights Union," of Brooklyn, N. Y., took the case in hand in August, 1885. Copies of all testimonials were sent to them. Comrades Hedges and Kay, of that organization, had a personal interview with the President and Secretary of the Treasury in October, 1885. The latter made a special memorandum of the case, promising to give it his personal attention. Nothing has come of it. It is proper to say that the "Veterans' Rights Union" used their best endeavors to have Comrade Spencer reinstated, but without avail; they worked hard and faithfully.

Patrick Keenan, first lieutenant Company K, Tenth New York Heavy Artillery, served from September, 1862, to September, 1865; was removed without cause October 31, 1885, from position of United States internal-revenue gauger, second district of Virginia.

The removal was made through the Secretary of the Treasury, at the instance of a Congressional and district committee from Norfolk, Va., comprising United States Solicitor-General Goode and others.

Comrade Keenan was stationed at Norfolk, Va. No efforts were made for retention or reinstatement.

James Sweeney, private, Company A, Forty-third New York Volunteers, served from 25th August, 1861, to September 20, 1865; was removed without cause December 31, 1885, from position of boatman, United States customs service, Richmond, Va., which position he had held for eleven years. In his efforts to be retained and reinstated he had a personal interview with the Secretary of the Treasury a few days before the end of December. The Secretary informed him that had he known the circumstances before he appointed Comrade Sweeney's successor he would not have done so, but as he had approved the appointment it was too late to reverse his action.

Past Department Commander William H. Appenzeller, of the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, a house-joiner in the department of yards and docks, Norfolk navy-yard, was discharged in July without assigning cause.

J. J. Booth, who was in the Army gunboat service and an inmate of Libby prison, was discharged from his position as engineer of steam fire-engine, Norfolk navy-yard, and his place filled by an ex-confederate soldier.

John Brown was forty-four years in the Army and Navy; was laborer in the steam-engineering department; discharged in June.

James Cook served in the Navy, was disabled at Fort Jackson; was oakum-spinner in steam-engineering department,

Frank Craig, wounded, was in First Maryland; was writer in steam-engineering department; discharged in July and his place filled immediately.

James B. Dempsey, Third New York Cavalry, harness-maker, yards and docks, discharged in July from Norfolk navy-yard.

A. C. Fuller, Fifty-eighth Pennsylvania, badly wounded and discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability; was painter in yards and docks; discharged in July and an ex-confederate put in his place.

John Fleming, Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, was shipkeeper; discharged in July and an ex-confederate put in his place.

Henry Johnson, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, wheelwright, yards and docks; discharged in July and an ex-confederate now doing his work.

Thomas P. Jones, United States Navy, steam-engineering, was in United States Navy during war; discharged in August, a Democratic ward worker put in his place.

Past Department Commander S. B. Kenney, served in Army and Navy; was store clerk in yards and docks; replaced by an ex-confederate soldier.

John T. Lawrence, United States Marine Corps, was disabled in service; was rigger, steam-engineering department; was on board United States ship Cumberland when sunk by Merrimac; discharged and an ex-confederate put in his place.

Thomas Geary, enlisted June, 1863, on board United States steamship Buchanan as landsman; discharged November, 1866, as steward; employed since 1866 in Government navy-yard, Norfolk, Va., with intermissions, as engine tender in department yards and docks; discharged last summer.

James Copeland, enlisted in Thirty-seventh United States colored troops June 18, 1864, as private; discharged 11th February, 1867, as corporal of Company H; employed by the Government in the United States navy-yard, Norfolk, Va., with intermissions, since March 1, 1871; discharged last summer.

Hamilton Hodges, enlisted on board United States steamship Roanoke, February 3, 1862, as landsman; discharged from United States steamship Chicopee January 30, 1865, as landsman; employed in United States navy-yard, Norfolk, Va., with intermissions, since 1872 as hostler; removed, and replaced by an ex-confederate.

Nelson Proctor, enlisted in Second United States Colored Troops July 13, 1863, as private; discharged from same July 16, 1866, as private; employed, with intermission, in United States navy-yard, Norfolk, since 1882, as foreman of laborers, yards and docks; was discharged in April.

George W. Smith, landsman, United States Navy, enlisted on United States ship Brandywine July 13, 1863, and was discharged therefrom on the 23d day of July, 1864; occupation, ship-keeper, Norfolk navy-yard, from which he was discharged last summer.

James T. Hodges, landsman, United States Navy, enlisted on the United States ship on the 16th February, 1863, for one year, and was discharged therefrom on the 16th day of February, 1864; occupation, ship-keeper, Norfolk navy-yard, from which he was discharged last summer.

Laster Brown, landsman, United States Navy, enlisted October 26, 1862, on United States ship Steppingstone, and was discharged therefrom March, 1864; occupation, laborer in construction department, Norfolk navy-yard.

William Teemer, enlisted First United States Colored Troops November 27, 1863, and discharged therefrom February 4, 1866; discharged from navy-yard last summer.

James E. Fuller, sergeant First United States Colored Troops, enlisted December 13, 1863, and discharged therefrom February 4, 1866; discharged from navy-yard last summer.

William Silloway, plumber, yards and docks; First and Second Rhode Island; served four years; discharged and replaced by civilian.

Lewis B. Place, coppersmith in steam-engineering department; in Navy three years.

John Miller, who served on board the U. S. S. Cumberland when sunk by the Merrimac, was discharged from the position of revenue boatman, custom-house at Norfolk, on the appointment of the Democratic collector in May.

A. A. Portlock, an old veteran, also lost his position as janitor at the custom-house at the same time and from the same cause.

There are many ex-Union soldiers and sailors in Virginia who are not Grand Army men, and of whom I make no mention, who were discharged from Government employ as a result of the incoming of the Democratic administration.

In my judgment a full and complete recognition of the services of those who saved the Union, not only as a preservation of the rights given by the Revised Statutes, now frequently violated, but also to the perpetuation of the Union of the States; for if this Republic proves herself ungrateful to those who preserved her integrity and fails to make treason odious where is the reward and punishment in contemplation for those who may be actors in the scene?

It is true that homes have been established and pensions provided for disabled veterans. That is all very well as far as it goes; but there are thousands of our comrades who are able and desirous of working, and to those men should preference be given by the Government whenever they are found faithful and efficient. There are men to-day inmates of the various soldiers' homes who have been compelled to seek shelter there for want of employment, and who, if the Government would open her stores, shops, and offices, would gladly accept work which they could perform as acceptably as the civilians and others who now hold those places.

HENRY DE B. CLAY,
Commander Department of Virginia.

J. E. Stokes, ex-Union soldier, an old man, a laborer—honest and capable—removed April 29, 1885, and James Elam appointed.

J. N. C. Cole, clerk, soldier in New Jersey regiment, removed in May, 1885, and R. H. Hamilton put in his place.

W. H. King, special laborer, was a loyal Virginian, son of ex-Chief Engineer King; supports his widowed mother; removed June 6, 1886, and one Albert Perry appointed.

J. J. Buchanan, old, reliable Union man; served thirty years in Navy; removed May 29, 1885, and C. B. Page, ex-confederate, appointed in his place.

William R. Carpenter, William Silloway, J. W. McDonough, and

John V. Schorlen, all soldiers, removed without cause to make room for non-soldiers.

Peter Oakes, foreman of laborers, Bureau of Construction and Repair, appointed 1873 upon recommendation of Rear-Admiral Cooper, was an ex-Union officer; wounded three times; entering the service as a private and coming out a captain—competent, worthy, and reliable—was removed April 27, 1885, and John Castin, a man with no experience, put in his place.

I insist, Mr. Chairman, that this record shows conclusively that the practice of the current administration of the Government is to remove men from office in violation of these statutes. I have illustrated my position by reference to a single State. But I insist that from one end of the Union to the other the same thing is going on.

I complain of it; I oppose it; I denounce it. There are all over the country loyal Union ex-soldiers whom, I regret to say, are Democrats. I am sorry it is so. I think they are in the wrong political party. I think many of them now begin to see that the change they voted for is bringing into possession of the places of profit the men who either fought to destroy the Union or else refused to fight on either side. The trouble has been that our soldier friends in the North have looked at the politics of the country from the atmosphere of the North. They have sought for a change for a great many reasons not pertinent of this issue nor suggestive of this result.

To the amazement of these men, they find that the advent of a Democratic administration heralds the dawn of a day when the greatest and most potent qualification to preferment is a record of hard fighting in the rebel army. Look at our diplomatic representatives. So far as I know, but one minister or envoy who served in the Union Army has been sent abroad. That is my information. I do not complain; but I state facts.

In the North the disparity is about as bad. The reasons are obvious. In the South the dominating party is made up, brain and leadership, of ex-confederates, and so the popular will controls. In the North there is a scarcity of Union soldiers to appoint from, and so necessity controls. And so, between the upper and nether millstones, our Democratic Union soldier friends are being ground very fine. The distinguished soldier who, solitary and alone, represents the fighting men of the old Union Army in the President's Cabinet, bears about the proper and legitimate relation to the whole Cabinet that the appointments of this administration of ex-Union soldiers bear to the whole number of its bestowals of favor—one in seven.

But I do not complain of the administration. A stream can not rise above its source. It owes its political life to the one hundred and fifty-three electoral votes it had ready to be cast from the States in which no contest was made. They came to it as a matter of course. They were not contested. I need not stop now to say how futile such a contest would have been. I only point out that in what it has done the administration has recognized its friends, and gratitude in politics is a great and most commendable thing.

I refer to these things that such Democratic Union soldiers as have vainly sought for recognition may feel that no injustice has been done to them, and that the party in power has dealt justly with all its adherents from the standpoint of the party value of the various constituent elements of which this Democratic party is composed.

The day is dawning, Mr. Chairman, when the party which saved the Union and brought the country from the dark days of 1861 through the darker days of 1864 and out of the dreary wilderness of reconstruction and across the Red Sea of irredeemable paper-money and practical repudiation out upon the solid ground of Union, honest money, and good times, will be again assigned to the control of the nation it made great, and then the Democratic ex-soldiers of to-day will be Republican Union soldiers of the coming better day.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, my colleague [Mr. GROSVENOR] has made the remark, if I rightly understood him, that when "Democratic soldiers" were spoken of reference was made to two classes of soldiers. Now, my friend knows perfectly well that the beneficiaries of this bill and the beneficiaries of the $80,000,000 appropriated for pensions, are all soldiers of one class, all Union soldiers; and the attempt to lug into a discussion of this bill partisan debate of this character seems to me entirely out of place. I supposed the war was over and we were here as one people of a common country. I have this further remark to make respecting the occupation of offices by soldiers. The difference between this administration and former administrations is this: Under former administrations, it is true, soldiers were liberally appointed to office, but they were almost without exception Republican soldiers. No matter how gallantly a man may have fought in the war, no matter how much he may have suffered, no matter how severely he may have been wounded, no matter though he may have lost a limb or been otherwise disabled, yet if since the war he has voted the Democratic ticket he was told "There is no office for you."

I say that was the rule, that was the practice, and there were almost no Democratic soldiers in office when Mr. Cleveland was elected; that is, in appointive offices. The policy in that respect has been changed. Democratic soldiers are now given an even chance. For places filled by soldiers the question is not now, What ticket have you voted? but Were you a soldier; have you an honorable record? That is as it should be. That is fair dealing with those who fought during the war side by side and shoulder to shoulder without difference as to politics.

Why, sir, we heard no politics then. Men stood together fighting for the maintenance of the Union, for the preservation of this Republic, and for nothing else. No question was then asked as to one's politics. When men were wanted to fight battles, no such questions were asked. I hardly ever heard politics alluded to or spoken of during the war. I have heard more of it in a single day on the floor of this House than I heard for five years during the war. Soldiers were Union men then, and they are entitled to be considered as Union soldiers now, when places are to be distributed, and not as Republican soldiers or Democratic soldiers.

But heretofore they have been held as entitled to office only if Republicans. Heretofore those appointed to office, I say, were almost without exception Republicans. Under Republican administrations of the Government only Republican soldiers could get into office; no Democratic Union soldier had a chance to be appointed. Now Democratic Union soldiers have an equal chance with Republicans.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman from Ohio point me to a Republican appointed under this administration of the Democratic party?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let me say to the gentleman from Indiana that to my knowledge there have been numerous appointments of Union soldiers who belong to the Republican party; but Democratic soldiers ought to have preference till they have a fair share of the offices.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman be good enough to give us the names of some of them?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I know myself of gentlemen on this side of the House who fought on the other side in the war recommending the appointment of Union soldiers belonging to the Republican party.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, Mr. Chairman, when I made the statement alluded to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] the other day, I had in my mind only that variety of soldiers belonging to the Democratic party who served in the Union Army. I made the statement then, and I now reiterate it, and it has never been successfully contradicted, and I maintain it can not be successfully contradicted, that of those who enlisted in the late war on the side of the Union the majority of them were Democrats. [Laughter on the Republican side of the House.]

But, sir, I wish to say another thing. I have recognized the fact there are two varieties of soldiers in the Democratic party, some who served on the side of the Union and some who served on the other side.

Mr. BURROWS. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Michigan will pardon me for not allowing him to interrupt me at this point. I wish to call the attention of my friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] also to the fact he seems to be ignorant of, and that is there are two sorts of soldiers in the Republican party. One variety consists of those who fought for the Union and the other variety of those who fought to destroy the Union. If my friend is really ignorant of that fact, or if he doubts it, I can perhaps convince him by mentioning some of the names which may be well known to him, if not personally, at least historically. Under one Republican administration a confederate officer was placed in the Cabinet of a Republican President—by General Grant during his first term. Mr. Akerman, of Georgia, was that confederate, who was given charge of the office of Attorney-General of the United States. He was a confederate soldier.

Then, too, Mr. Hayes elevated a confederate who fought during the war to destroy the old flag, and as Postmaster-General in his Cabinet gave him the chief control over all the post-offices and all the postmasters throughout the Union. Yes, and I am reminded by a gentleman who sits near me that he afterward gave General Key, who had been Postmaster-General in his Cabinet, a United States judgeship; that is, he gave him a life office, by placing him where he can not be removed either by a Republican or a Democratic President. Another President sent a confederate soldier as minister to Russia—Mr. Orr, of South Carolina. Another distinguished confederate general, one of the ablest among them, one responsible perhaps for the loss of as many Union lives during the war as any other, General Longstreet, was appointed under Republican administration as our minister to Constantinople for the Turkish Empire.

I am only speaking of appointments of confederate officers made by Republican Presidents. I wish to call attention to another confederate appointed by a Republican President, that distinguished confederate soldier John S. Mosby, of Virginia, to Hong-Kong, China, and received a salary of $4,000 or $4,500 a year. He was the man who is said to have carried the black flag in Virginia during the late war and as saying that he would show no quarter to Union soldiers, and it is reported that Union soldiers said that when they fell into his hands they received no quarter.

I have a number of other names that I might refresh the memory of my friend on the other side with. There is a Senator to-day holding his position in the other end of the Capitol, General MAHONE, of Virginia, a distinguished confederate leader. He is honored with the position he now holds by the Republican party. I have not time to go all over the list. There are many of them.

It may be well to remember, too, that Mr. MAHONE had been intrusted with the entire control of the patronage of the Republican administration in the whole State of Virginia; and I must not forget the gentleman who once occupied a seat on this floor, and whom the gentleman from Michigan assailed one day in discussion here with so much bitterness and vituperation—Mr. Chalmers, of Mississippi, who was said to have murdered colored soldiers at Fort Pillow.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I am almost inclined to suggest to the House an evening session for debate only on this Pension Office matter—— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] But in the mean time I desire to come to some understanding upon the length of debate upon this paragraph. I ask unanimous consent that the debate shall now close—— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I think each side has had a fair and safe opportunity of fighting their battles over.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to ask——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. BURROWS. I do not object; I would merely like to ask one question of the gentleman from Illinois. He seems to be posted on the details of the Army, and has stated that more Democrats enlisted in the Union Army than Republicans. I wish to inquire if he has about his clothes the statistics so as to enable him to show us the proportion of Republicans and Democrats who enlisted in the confederate army?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not think I understand the question.

Mr. BLAND. I object to the discussion and call for a vote.

Mr. BURROWS. I asked the gentleman for the figures showing the proportion of Republicans and Democrats in the confederate army.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Both sides down South contributed very largely to that army.

Mr. RANDALL. If five minutes on each side will satisfy gentlemen I am willing that the debate shall run for that length of time.

Mr. HAMMOND. I object.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Say twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia objects.

Mr. HAMMOND. I object, because we have already had enough of this discussion. Let us go on with the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I propose to control my own plan of business in reference to the bill.

Mr. HAMMOND. I merely suggest that we have had enough of this discussion for one day, and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not move that the committee rise I will make that motion for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope that we can come to some understanding, and that the committee will not rise.

Mr. HAMMOND. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Let us have twenty minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I will agree to that, believing it will save time.

The CHAIRMAN. It is understood then that the debate shall close in twenty minutes, which will be divided equally between the two sides.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that when the Democracy came into power they found a very large proportion of the offices filled by Republicans, nor have I any doubt that when they go out of office at the end of this administration and the Republicans come into power we will find that the offices are largely filled by Democrats. But when any gentleman comes upon this floor and attempts to state that of the appointments of this administration there have been as many Union Democratic soldiers as there have been Republicans removed who were Union soldiers, he certainly is talking against light and knowledge. It would not be reasonable that such a state of things could exist. All of us know, as a matter of personal experience and observation, that the great body of men who wore the blue to-day vote the Republican ticket, and, therefore, there is not so large a number of Democratic Union soldiers from which to select as there are of Republican Union soldiers.

I take it, sir, that local experience, unless there are certain special influences, is good experience all over the country upon which to base our judgment.

In the city in which I live there were seven free-delivery clerks when this administration came into power, five of whom were Union soldiers and one of the other two was the son of a Union soldier. Within two months of the incoming of the present administration a Democratic postmaster was appointed in that city, and every one of the free-delivery clerks was removed, including the five Union soldiers, one of whom had served ten years and eleven months from the time of the commencement of the free-delivery service in that city and never lost a trip. He had never been tardy at the office, although he was sixty years old and made 22½ miles a day, not including going up and down steps, and this every day in the week, in sunshine and storm. They all went off, and not a single Union soldier was appointed in their places. One of the men appointed had often boasted upon the streets of Bloomington that he had served in the confederate army. After his appointment he denied it. The clerks in the post-office, nine in number, I believe, were removed, and not one Union soldier was appointed in the place of the four Union soldiers removed.

The outgoing Republican postmaster was a Union soldier, conspicuous for his gallantry. His successor was not a soldier. That he is a good citizen and makes a good officer I fully concede.

Good men were appointed free-delivery clerks from the Democratic party; good men were appointed in the post-office. I have no objection to the kind of men appointed, or to the kind of service they give us, except that under Democratic rule it takes two more free-delivery clerks to do the work than it did under the Republican rule. But when they come here and tell me that when they removed the Republican soldiers they appointed Democratic soldiers in their place, I know in my own locality that is not true. In two instances, I admit, it is true; because I want to do justice. A Republican soldier who had been an examining surgeon of the Pension Department was removed and a Democratic soldier was appointed in his place. A gallant Republican soldier, a transfer clerk, who had been thirteen months a prisoner in a rebel prison, was removed, and a Democratic soldier, a good man, was appointed in his place. Those are the sole appointments of Democratic soldiers in my section of the country.

In Springfield, Ill., the United States marshal, district attorney, and collector of internal revenue—all Republican Union soldiers—have been superseded by Democrats, who were not soldiers. I take it that is the experience everywhere in the North; and I take it the Democratic party is obliged to give us that experience in order to satisfy other members of the party and because of the scattering number of Union soldiers in the Democratic party generally over the North.

As regards confederate soldiers appointed by Republican administrations, I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that wherever a confederate soldier has become a conspicuous Republican he has been conspicuously boycotted by his confederate associates.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] who has just taken his seat says that "all of us know, as a matter of personal experience and observation, that the great body of men who wore the blue to-day vote the Republican ticket."

In contradiction of this I quote from his Democratic colleague [Mr. TOWNSHEND], who, in the debate upon this bill a few days ago, used the following language:

Did not Democratic soldiers fight as bravely and make as great sacrifices to preserve the Union as Republican soldiers? Were there not as many Democrats in the Union Army as there were Republicans? I tell you now, gentlemen, that if the long roll could be called of the dead and the living who fought for the Union in the late war and their political sentiments could be ascertained you would find that a majority of them were Democrats.

That statement, the report shows, was treated then as it was to-day, with "derisive laughter on the Republican side." In addition to the potent argument of "derisive laughter," a distinguished Representative from the State of Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] undertook to reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND]; and it is especially to his remarks and to the tables printed by him purporting to show the number of Republican and Democratic votes cast in the years 1862, 1863, and 1864 by the soldiers in the field that I now direct the attention of the House. He [Mr. BROWNE] says:

But there is something due to truth, something due to history, and I desire to correct a statement inadvertently made by my amiable friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] in his speech. * * * I have here compiled from authentic records the votes of the soldiers of those States who, by the laws existing at that time, were permitted to vote.

Then follow the tables which pretend to be a true statement of the vote of certain soldiers in the field, but which in fact are not so. The "authentic record" of the gentleman from Indiana was an alteration of the true record. Of course I do not impute the mutilation to the gentleman himself, but to the erroneous, second-hand authority from which he quoted.

The tables as printed by the gentleman are as follows:

In 1862 Union soldiers were permitted to vote in the field in five States only. That vote was as follows:

States.	Republican.	Democratic.	Republican majority.
Colorado	567	12	555
Iowa	14,874	4,115	10,759
Missouri	2,139	7	2,132
Pennsylvania	1,867	274	1,593
Wisconsin	8,373	2,046	6,827
Totals	27,820	6,454	21,466

Percentage: Republican, 81.13; Democratic, 18.87.

In 1863 the soldiers' vote was as follows, to wit:

States.	Republican.	Democratic.	Republican majority.
California	4,143	140	4,003
Iowa	17,041	3,004	14,037
Missouri	8,827	777	8,050
Ohio	46,315	2,391	39,224
Pennsylvania	1,392	53	1,339
Wisconsin	9,257	747	8,510
Totals	82,275	7,112	75,163

Percentage: Republican, 92; Democratic, 8.

In 1864 the soldiers' vote was as follows, to wit:

States.	Lincoln.	McClellan.	Lincoln's majority.
Maine	4,174	741	3,433
New Hampshire	2,066	690	1,376
Vermont	243	49	194
Pennsylvania	26,712	12,349	14,363
Maryland	2,800	321	2,479
Ohio	41,146	9,757	31,389
Michigan	9,402	2,959	9,442
Iowa	15,178	1,364	13,814
Wisconsin	11,372	2,458	8,914
California	2,600	237	2,303
Kansas	2,867	543	2,324
Kentucky	1,194	2,823	.....
Totals	119,754	34,291	85,463

Now, the fact is, and it can not be gainsaid, that in the original and true tables of the soldiers' vote the word "Republican" does not appear. In every instance where that word appears in the foregoing tables the word "Union" has been erased and the word "Republican" inserted in its place. Restore the wording in the light of the facts I shall proceed to unfold, and you will comprehend the complete change of sense; and the utter destruction of the theory, so cunningly devised by this alteration, that a large majority of the Union soldiers were Republicans.

You will observe that the table for the year 1864 does not use the words "Republican" or "Democrat," but states the vote for "Lincoln" and "McClellan" respectively. That is correct, and I shall show conclusively before I take my seat who the men were that voted for Lincoln in 1864, and upon what ticket he was running. It may also be well enough in passing to refer to the notorious fact that the "soldier vote" was taken very incompletely, and returned very carelessly and inaccurately.

The true tables showing the soldier vote of 1862 and 1863 are found in the Tribune Almanac for 1864, on page 69. Those tables do not show that any "Republican" soldiers voted in the year 1863. During that year (1863) there was not a "Republican" ticket in the field in any State named in the gentleman's table. In the year 1864 there was not a Republican ticket in the field in any State named in the gentleman's table, nor in any other State of the Union.

Mr. ROWELL. Did you elect a President in 1864?

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Yes, sir; we did.

A MEMBER. Was he Republican or Democrat?

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. He was running upon the "Union" ticket.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. In 1863 and 1864 was there a Democratic ticket in those States, and was it successful?

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Gentlemen, you are all jumping up at once, as if you were hurt; but I defy——

A MEMBER. What ticket was McClellan on?

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I defy you to put your finger on any Republican national platform for 1864, or any Republican national ticket for 1864. I have examined many of the Republican daily papers for that year, and no such platform or ticket appears in them, and I have also examined all other attainable authorities, with the same result.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The ticket was called "Union-Republican."

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. No, sir; it was called the "Union ticket;" or, in a few instances, the "National Union ticket."

Mr. REED, of Maine. There was a Union ticket and a disunion one.

Mr. CAMBPELL, of Ohio. What the gentleman from Maine designates as a disunion ticket was headed by a Union general who was, up to the time of his death, and who in memory is yet, the idol of the Army of the Potomac.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The gentleman from Ohio I think overlooks this fact, that the proper official designation of the Republican party is the Union Republican party of the United States.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. That may be true, but during the war the Republican party wholly disappeared. The "Union party" in 1860 supported Bell and Everett.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE was recognized and yielded his time to Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I can tell you exactly the process by which the Republican party disappeared. Thousands and hundreds of thousands of men went into that party, as you all know, with the understanding that it was to be the "Union" party; that partisan differences were to be sunk for the time, to be perhaps resurrected and settled after the rebellion had been put down.

In 1861 but few States held elections. Among them, however, were the great States of New York and Ohio, and no Republican ticket was run in either of those States. In regard to the New York election for that year, I find this in the Tribune Almanac for 1862, page 57:

The senate is composed of twenty-two Republicans and ten Democrats, though many were elected on Union tickets. The assembly, as between Republicans and Democrats, is close, with a small Republican majority, though a very large majority were chosen as Union men.

The process of evolution from the Republican party to the Union party had begun, and its progress was rapid and uninterrupted.

In 1862 Pennsylvania, Indiana, and Illinois held their first elections after the war, and not one "Republican" ticket was run in either of those States. In 1863 the "Republican" ticket had disappeared from every State in the Union except the New England States and Michigan. In 1864, and again in 1865, the Republicans were as utterly lost to the political history of this country as the Federalists or the Whigs. I have examined the New York Tribune, Hartford Courant, Philadelphia Press, Cincinnati Gazette, and Commercial, and other Republican daily papers for 1864, and there is no mention of a "Republican" ticket in any of them.

But, Mr. Chairman, I can inform the gentlemen on the other side when and how they resuscitated their party. The history of its mutations—its death and its sudden resurrection—is found faithfully depicted in that good Republican document, the Tribune Almanac for the years 1862 to 1867. In that book the members of this House prior to the Thirty-eighth Congress are uniformly classified as "Republicans" and "Democrats." In the first session of the Thirty-eighth Congress (December 7, 1863) they are classified as "Republican and Unconditional Unionists" (together), "Border State Men," and "Democrats." In the second session of the Thirty-eighth Congress (December 5, 1864) and first session of the Thirty-ninth Congress (December 4, 1865) they are classified as "Unionists" and "Democrats." [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. And that was so on both sides of Mason and Dixon's line.

Mr. COBB. Let history be unfolded. The gentlemen on the other side have never read it.

Mr. GROUT. Will the gentleman from Ohio——

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I will answer you one at a time. The gentleman from Maine is the one about whom I read in last Monday's Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette. The genial Washington correspondent (F. D. M.) gives a graphic and humorous account of the tactics which the gentleman from Maine employs against the new members on this side of the House, and depicts in glowing colors the unutterable awe with which the new members aforesaid regard that able and witty gentleman.

Now, I am one of "those young members," and ought to be dreadfully alarmed. I retort upon the gentleman from Maine by saying to him that if he is very anxious to discuss the soldier question in politics he ought to go up to his own State and hold a joint debate with General Hall, who says that out of sixty-six thousand soldiers in that State the Republican party has never chosen one to either House of Congress. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

I know that the gentleman from Maine has a trick of shrugging his shoulders and winking his eyes, and making everybody laugh on that side of the House.

Mr. STRUBLE. The laughter was excited by the gentleman from Ohio himself the last time.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Now I will listen to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT], whose question I did not hear.

Mr. GROUT. The ticket on which Lincoln was elected President in 1864, what was the full name of that ticket? Please read it from the Tribune Almanac.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Yes, sir; I will read it with great pleasure. I read from the Tribune Almanac for 1865. The platform of 1864 is here called the "Union platform." That is all. It is neither "Republican" nor "Union Republican." Every man who knows anything of the history of this country, or who is intelligent enough to sit on this floor, knows that this ticket was voted by hundreds of thousands of Democrats who believed in sustaining the administration, no matter who might be at the head of it, until the rebellion was crushed.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Then, why did not they vote for McClellan? Was he a disunionist?

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. One of the gentlemen wants to know why they didn't vote for McClellan. I am afraid that the thread of my argument will be slightly interrupted by the continuous questions showered upon me, but I will stop and explain that point if the gentleman will give me time.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Will my colleague permit me a single question?

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I will yield to my colleague from Ohio for a question, and then I will answer the gentleman from Michigan. If you come one at a time, I will take care of all of you. [Laughter.]

Mr. MCKINLEY. I am inclined to think that my colleague is true to history. I want to ask him if the fact is not, what I gather it to be from what he has already said, that at the time of which he is speaking whenever a Democrat in the North wanted to be on the side of the Union he had to vote the Republican ticket——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEELE was recognized.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Give me time to finish my question.

Mr. STEELE. I yield for the gentleman.

Mr. MCKINLEY. My question is, whether in the North, when a Democrat wanted to be on the side of the Union, he was not compelled to leave the Democratic party and vote the Union Republican ticket, which stood as the representative of the party that was engaged in putting down the rebellion and saving the Union?

Several MEMBERS on the Democratic side. No, sir! No, sir!

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. In answer to my colleague I will ask him if he does not know that upon this floor there once sat a one-legged Democrat from Ohio by the name of Rice?

Mr. MCKINLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. And does not the gentleman know that that Democrat, who left his leg on the battlefield and who was one of the most gallant officers of the Union Army, voted at the head of his regiment in 1863 for Vallandigham?

Mr. MCKINLEY. I know nothing about that; but I ask my colleague if it is not true, as a matter of fact, that the great body of Democrats in our own State who were on the side of the Union voted the Union Republican ticket; and I ask my colleague if he himself did not so vote?

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. There has been no "Union Republican" ticket in the field since I can remember. I voted the "Union" ticket in 1864.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I thought so. Because you were for the Union, and, being for the Union, you were necessarily against the Democratic party and for the Republican party. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Not exactly. I voted the Union ticket, because I believed in prosecuting the war under the existing administration, and I did not like to "swap horses in crossing the stream."

My colleague asks two questions. First, he wants to know why all the Democratic soldiers did not vote the "Union" ticket. That was a matter for each to decide in his own way. I know that enormous numbers were Democrats, no matter how they voted in 1864. In my county Lincoln received 2,867 votes in 1860, yet over forty-five hundred men went into the Union Army. From that county there went four colonels, and three of them were Democrats. In my district I can recall to mind but two brigadier-generals, and both were Democrats. One was the eloquent General Ward, lately deceased, and the other General Vanderveer, whose brigade saved the day at Chickamauga. These distinguished soldiers are well known to my colleague. Now, what was the other question?

Mr. MCKINLEY. Did General Ward vote for Vallandigham.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I do not know. Probably he was one of the numerous Democrats who voted the "Union" ticket in 1863. I know General Vanderveer was.

I will now proceed with the evolution of the Republican party out of the "Union" party and back into its original form. By consulting the Tribune Almanac again, it is found that in the second session of the Thirty-ninth Congress (December 3, 1866), the members of this House were then classed as "Republicans and Unionists" (together), and "Democrats and Conservatives" (together); while in the first session of the Fortieth Congress (March 4, 1867), we get back again to the old names of "Republican" and "Democrat," and the Republican party ceased to masquerade longer in any portion of the Democratic garb.

Thus "history and truth" (in whose behalf the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] appears here) show that the Republican party disappeared at the outbreak of the war, and only openly reappeared when its leaders could no longer control President Johnson and thereby put the Southern States into a permanent condition of vassalage.

In support of my charge that there were no parties during the war except the "Union" party (composed of Republicans and anti-administration Democrats) and the "Democratic" party, I shall call two Republican witnesses in this House.

I shall first refer to the venerable father of the House, Mr. WAIT, of Connecticut. We find from his biographical sketch in the Congressional Directory that "he was the first elector at large, as a war Democrat, in 1864, on the Lincoln and Johnson ticket." He ran on the "National Union" ticket, which was the only Lincoln ticket in Connecticut.

I shall also have to call the attention of my distinguished colleague from the fourteenth district of Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] to the fact that in the Cincinnati Gazette of November 2, 1864, I find, under the heading "political," announcements of a number of Union meetings (no "Republican" meetings are announced), and that the one at the George-street engine-house, in Cincinnati, was to be addresed by Col. C. H. Grosvenor. I also find in this paper a ticket printed in these words: "Ohio Union Presidential ticket: For President, Abraham Lincoln; for Vice-President, Andrew Johnson." I call attention to this in order that my colleague may explain how, if he did not belong to the Union party in 1864, he came to be on the stump for that party.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I did belong to the Union party in 1864.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Then we acted together.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I did belong to that party in 1864, and I have belonged to it ever since. My colleague from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] belonged to it at that time.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I did, undoubtedly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But he now belongs to the party which at that time was as strongly disunionist as he was a Union man.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I accept my colleague's apology. [Laughter.]

I also call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] to the following, which I read from the Commercial Gazette of October 20, 1864, and which shows that the "Union" party was the administration party in his own district, as it was everywhere else, during the war—

RICHMOND, IND., October 17.

The Quaker City was gaily illuminated last night in honor of the Union victories in Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Indiana—referring to the recent October elections held in those States. I am therefore compelled to call the gentleman himself [Mr. BROWNE] as another witness that there was no Republican party in 1864.

In support of the statement to which I referred at the outset, wherein the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] claims there were as many Democrats as Republicans in the Union armies, I wish to add some figures.

The total vote in all the States for Mr. Lincoln in 1860 was 1,866,352, yet there were 2,859,132 enlistments in the Union Army, which, reduced to a three years' basis (and that probably covers all duplicate enlistments), gives the total number of men 2,320,272. My State gave Mr. Lincoln 221,809 votes and sent 319,659 men to the Union Army. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] has stated here that one county in his district gave Mr. Lincoln 11 votes and another 27 votes, but that each of those counties sent 1,000 men to the Union Army. The border States of Missouri, Kentucky, Maryland, West Virginia, and Tennessee gave Mr. Lincoln 22,094 votes, yet sent 301,612 men to the Union Army, not counting the thousands from those States who enlisted in and were credited to Northern States. I append a table showing the vote and enlistments in those States:

States.	Votes for Lincoln in 1860.	Union troops enlisted.
Missouri	17,028	109,111
Kentucky	1,364	79,025
Maryland	2,294	50,316
West Virginia*	1,408	32,068
Tennessee	None	31,092
Total	22,094	301,612

*This includes all counties in Virginia (1860) afterward severed and erected into West Virginia.

It is true, Mr. Chairman, that the Northern Democracy, before the war broke on us in its fury, tried to prevent it by every means in their power; that they yearned for peace with their kindred of the South; but, when the storm came, they bared their bosoms to it with unflinching hearts and unflagging zeal. They laid down their lives by the tens of thousands—not that they loved the South less but the Union more. It matters little what gentlemen may say here, or elsewhere, they can not rob the Democratic soldiers of their eternal glory in that they saved the Union.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. STEELE. I yield that time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN].

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Will not the gentleman yield to me to finish my answer?

Mr. STEELE. I can not yield for another speech. You have made three.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that the war should be so often fought over in this House. At the same time I rejoice that all the battles here are bloodless ones and make no graves. [Laughter.]

As to the question which has been raised concerning the politics of the men who went into the war, I can only speak from my own experience. In the volunteer service of Pennsylvania there was no distinction of party in regard to entering the service of the country; and when the conscription occurred there was no distinction of party observed in filling the decimated ranks of the Union forces. I will say further that in Pennsylvania no matter what were a man's antecedents in respect to religion or politics, he received his commission or promotion according to the manner in which he discharged his duties in the field. In God's name let us quit fighting that war over.

A MEMBER. Amen.

Mr. CURTIN. We have had enough of it surely. The dead, if they could be summoned from their graves, would not desire the strife continued; and the living soldiers of the Republic, entitled as they are to the gratitude and homage of the country, do not desire it. Why should we fight that war over?

Complaint is made that appointments under this Government have been made from men who fought on the other side. Of that I have never complained.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I move that gentlemen be allowed to print their remarks on this subject.

Mr. CURTIN. No, I will not print; I wish to speak what I have to say. [Laughter.] I only want a minute or two more. Why, sir, I gave my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] a commission in the Army, and he was a Democrat.

Mr. RANDALL. I would be very sorry to think that the people of the North who voted the Democratic ticket were inimical to the restoration of the Union. There is no truth in any such assumption.

Mr. CURTIN. I will say that in a moment if you will give me further time. You will be delighted to hear what I am going to say. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I move to strike out the last word, and yield my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia has no time to yield. The Chair desires to state that further debate is out of order, as the time limited for this debate had expired.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] be allowed five minutes.

Mr. CURTIN. I do not often trouble the House.

Mr. RANDALL. If my colleague [Mr. CURTIN] will wait a moment until this paragraph is disposed of he will have an opportunity to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. I withdraw the formal amendment which I offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem in lieu of subsistence for one hundred and fifty additional special examiners above provided for, while traveling on duty, at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding $3 per day, and for actual and necessary expenses for transportation and assistance, $190,000.

Mr. SPRINGER obtained the floor and said: If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] desires to be recognized, I move to strike out the last word and yield to him.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Chairman, I hear complaints on this floor that men who in the war were on the side of the States in insurrection hold seats here. Some of those men are maimed and crippled. Sir, I have no apology to make for the men who conceived that great insurrection; but I welcome on this floor the men who in error fought it out. They are the true representatives of their part of the United States. I never complained of the administration of General Grant for appointing to office soldiers from the South, because brave men like those who had fought in the war in defense of their homes when assailed were the true representative men of their section. I do not object, of course, to the appointment of Union soldiers. On the contrary, I have never recommended a man to the smallest office in Washington or in Pennsylvania who was not a Union soldier. And such men should be preferred, as they saved the Government and perpetuated liberty, where they have proper capacity to discharge the duties. But I do object most seriously to a charge that all the Union soldiers of this country were men of one party.

I speak from my experience when I say that in Pennsylvania both parties contributed to the volunteer service in proportion to their numbers, and all sensible men know full well that if the war had been for a political party alone it would have been a signal failure instead of a brilliant success. While but two States of the South were united in the prosecution of the war on the side of the Confederate States, the North, unfortunately for them, was united. In the great State of Pennsylvania the malcontents, those who objected to the war, who held back, who favored the rebellion, or the establishment of the Confederate States, could have been hauled in an omnibus, with room to spare. I mean the few who gave comfort or help to the South. The North was united in that war. Politics were forgotten. If from a Democratic county, the regiments were made up of Democrats more largely than Republicans; on the other hand, I tell my friend from Illinois, from Republican counties the majority of soldiers who went into the field from the North were Republicans. It was a union of the people of the North to maintain the Government. That war for the re-establishment of the Government was successful; and now, when the States which were then in rebellion are represented on this floor and in the august assembly at the other end of the Capitol, why should we seek continually to revive the animosities and hatreds of that war over and over again? And for what? I fear that some of my friends here fight the war over from time to time in order to be re-elected to this House. [Laughter and applause.]

Let us forget the war and turn to the legislation proper for this great country. Many of you who now fight the war so gallantly did not fight very much when the actual shedding of blood was going on. [Laughter.] I have no doubt many of you on this floor would have been very glad to have participated in the conflict when men were killing each other; but you were not there. I was not there. I did not go to the war; my duty was fulfilled by persuading other men to go to the war. And in that I was very successful. [Laughter.] The State which I as its chief executive represented at that time had nothing to do with politics in the prosecution of the war.

I wish to correct my friend from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] in a statement made by him which I saw in his speech as it was published in the RECORD, that in the year 1863 the soldiers in the field voted largely for the Republican ticket. Unfortunately for me at that time the supreme court of the State of Pennsylvania decided the soldiers could not vote in the field.

Mr. BROWNE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CURTIN. With pleasure.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Did not the soldiers vote, but those votes were not counted because of the decision of the supreme court?

Mr. CURTIN. There was no arrangement made by the State to take the votes. I wish to say to my friend from Indiana that I happened at that time to be a candidate for governor in the State of Pennsylvania; and that, the supreme court having decided the soldiers could not vote in the field, some 30,000 votes were taken from me.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. How could the supreme court decide they could not vote unless there was a vote calling for such decision?

Mr. CURTIN. The decision of the supreme court was made before the election.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. But how did the question come to arise?

Mr. CURTIN. Under the law of 1862–'63.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Permit me to say that in my schedule here there appears only about 2,000 Pennsylvania votes.

Mr. CURTIN. That was an irregular vote. They voted under the law upon the lines in Canada, they voted under the same law in Mexico in 1846, they voted in 1861 and 1862, but they did not vote in 1863.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CURTIN. Now, suppose we resolve ourselves into the House of Representatives and go on with the public business and quit fighting the war over again. [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. I certainly hope that will be done. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. I do not agree in thinking we ought to forget the war. We have on both sides left upon the fields as gallant soldiers as ever did battle. Heroic deeds were performed on both sides both by the dead and the living that we as American citizens feel proud of and love to talk about, and while the soldiers of both sides agree that the result was as it ought to have been, on our side we are especially thankful that the result was favorable to us. Assertions such as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] has just made will not only prevent our forgetting the bitterness of the war, but has a tendency to revive it.

But, sir, I did not rise to discuss this matter, but to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] who has charge of the bill if he will not allow us to recur to that provision in the bill making an appropriation for the War Department, as I noticed yesterday that he had, upon what he thought to be a unanimous report from the Committee on Indian Affairs, asked to create out of the chief clerk in that Department an assistant commissioner with increased pay; but it failed, among other reasons, because the report had not been unanimous. Now, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Military Affairs has made a unanimous report favoring a bill to create an Assistant Secretary of War. The Secretary represents that he needs one, and every one familiar with the duties of that office knows that he does; and while the other Cabinet officers have one to three assistants, the Secretaries of War and Navy have none, and have to appoint a deputy every time they go away for either business or pleasure. I see the gentleman will object, so will take this occasion to publicly express the hope that my colleague [Mr. MATSON] will soon report back the bill I have twice introduced, repealing the arrears act. There is no reason in the world why one set of soldiers should receive pensions from the date of their discharge while another set, those who did not apply until after the 1st of July, 1880, should not have the same privilege. The Committee on War Claims will, I hope, report back the bill to equalize bounties. There is no reason why those soldiers who went into the service through patriotism from 1861 until 1863 should not have as much bounty as those who were encouraged to go afterward by the reception of large bounties. None received too much.

Mr. CURTIN. In that you will find me heartily with you.

Mr. STEELE. I know you are, and there are a few others on your side who are, and there are others who are when on the stump, but I do not think are so much, at least when it comes to voting; but of this we will have occasion to speak advisedly soon—I hope before we go home. I would pension all disabled soldiers.

The civil-service law distresses my Democratic friends. I am a civil-service man from bed-rock now, and I delight in it. True, I voted against the bill, and I am glad I did. I thought I knew how the law would be treated should "we go out" and "you come in," but was to some extent mistaken, for I find that instead of boldly trampling it under foot or trying to repeal it you are clumsily evading it.

If we take statements, not only from our side but from yours, it is said to be true that in some departments of the Pension Office seventy out of seventy-four appointees under this law are Democrats; in the Baltimore post-office seventy out of seventy-two are Democrats; in the Philadelphia post-office about the same proportion, and so on. If you are not satisfied with the law why do you not come up like men and repeal it? Are you afraid to sever your alliance with the Mugwumps—that you can not carry New York without them? I think I am safe in saying that there are not a dozen men on your side who are really favorable to the law, yet you have not the courage to meet it as it ought to be met.

I will not help you to repeal it now if I did vote against it. Your trouble comes from your own seeking, and I will let you bear it. If we were just coming into a Republican administration I would vote to repeal it, and I say to you in candor that the very first men who would go out of office would be those who attended Republican clubs and professed Republicanism, but after our defeat suddenly found they were and had been good but mild Democrats. I would not trust them, be they high or low, an Assistant Postmaster-General or a low-grade clerk. The second would be those who are now Democrats, but who had after the election become Republicans.

I do not think it necessary, nor would I turn efficient men out of office because of their politics, but if when we come into power again all of the offices and clerkships should be filled by Democrats, I would make vacancies until I at least surrounded myself with men who were in sympathy with the views of my party and who I had confidence to believe would assist in such reforms as will doubtless be necessary. I have been agreeably disappointed (and most of you grievously so) with the firm stand of President Cleveland. He has withstood your threats and appeals as well as any man could. I really think he has remembered a plank in your platform on the subject of civil-service reform, while you have forgotten not only that, but every other plank, excepting that unrecorded one, "Turn the rascals out."

I do not find fault with Mr. Cleveland because of his appointment of a Postmaster-General who issued a secret order suggesting how the law could be evaded and who keeps in office an Assistant Postmaster-General who claims to be a Democrat. I do not find fault with him on any such ground.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I had an understanding with the committee that this character of debate should end in twenty minutes. I think the House is violating good faith, for I supposed we were going right on with the consideration of the bill and not have these amendments proposed to the succeeding section after the time fixed for debate had expired. I do not think it is fair.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think it is but just to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that the gentleman from Indiana, having time on this side, yielded it to the other side, and that even after that gentlemen on the other side continued that kind of debate.

Mr. RANDALL. I was not aware of that.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is the fact.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, I ask unanimous consent that after the gentleman from Indiana closes we may have a vote upon the pending question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I felt that when the gentleman from Ohio had so fully answered himself all through his speech that there was no need to go further.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to have two or three minutes longer.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask then that when the gentleman from Indiana has occupied three minutes more the debate be closed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I do not find fault with the President who appointed an Attorney-General who succeeded in getting him into trouble on the Pan-Electric plan. I do not find fault with the Secretary of War, who comes from a Mugwump State if there is one, who made great and earnest pretenses of virtue in reference to the details of Army officers, and about his first act was to order an officer to his regiment who was serving on the staff of the General of the Army, alleging that he was going to order officers to their regiments who had been absent over three years; and yet there are now officers in this city from their regiments who have been away from them for several years and no special reason for it. His order to the officer serving on the staff of the general made him a conspicuous reformer. I do not object to him because the Secretary of the Navy took the course he did in reference to the Dolphin. I do not object to him because the Secretary of the Interior flew the flag at half-mast on account of the death of Jacob Thompson. These are acts for which the President is not personally responsible; and if I could have my way I would say let the President appoint his Cabinet upon probation. He would not then have a Secretary of State who would make treaties in violation of law relative to our fishery privileges.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I now call for a vote.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a few remarks upon this paragraph before the debate is closed.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to close it now if possible, and hope the gentleman will take some other time.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing pending, and if no amendment is offered the Chair will direct the Clerk to read the next paragraph.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania prefers a vote I will not interfere at this time.

The Clerk read as follows.

United States Patent Office: For compensation of the Commissioner of the Patent Office, $5,000; for assistant commissioner, $3,250; for chief clerk, $2,250; one law clerk, at $2,000; three examiners-in-chief, at $3,000 each; examiner in charge of interferences, $2,500; twenty-eight principal examiners, at $2,400 each; thirty-two first assistant examiners, at $1,800 each; thirty-six second assistant examiners, at $1,600 each; forty-one third assistant examiners, at $1,400 each; fifty fourth assistant examiners, at $1,200 each; one financial clerk, $2,000, who shall give bonds in such amount as the Secretary of the Interior may determine; one librarian, $2,000; three chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; three assistant chiefs of division, at $1,800 each; three clerks of class 4, one of whom shall act as application clerk; one machinist, $1,600; five clerks of class 3, one of whom shall be translator of languages; eighteen clerks of class 2; fifty clerks of class 1; one skilled laborer, $1,200; four skilled draughtsmen, at $1,200 each; three draughtsmen, at $1,000 each; one messenger and property clerk, $1,000; thirty-two permanent clerks, at $1,000 each; five model attendants, at $1,000 each; ten model attendants, at $800 each; seventy-five copyists, six of whom may be copyists of drawings; four copyists, at $720 each; sixty-two skilled laborers, at $720 each; forty-five laborers, at $600 each; forty laborers, at $480 each; fifteen messenger boys, at $360 each; in all, $661,020.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on lines 2036 and 2037, providing for the salary of the Commissioner of the Patent Office, $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. What point does the gentleman make?

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I understand there is no law for the compensation.

Mr. RANDALL. Section 447 fixes the salary at $4,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask to amend. But before that is done I ask to insert $4,500 at this point.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I rise to a parliamentiary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Do I understand the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to say that the compensation of the Commissioner of Patents is fixed by law at $4,500?

Mr. RANDALL. I do say so, and will show the gentleman the statute.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My impression is otherwise.

Mr. RANDALL. I have the statute before me.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I think in the Forty-eighth Congress the salary was fixed at $5,000. That is my impression.

Mr. RANDALL. It was done in an appropriation bill.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am aware of that, but was it not fixed in the bill as permanent law?

Mr. RANDALL. Was the word "hereafter" inserted?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not remember; but that is my information about it.

Mr. RANDALL. I will read it:

For compensation of the Commissioner of the Patent Office, $5,000.

But there is a separate statute which fixes it at $4,500, a permanent statute, and it is upon that the decision of the Chair is based under the rules of this House. I do not advocate the lowering of the salary; but I have to state in connection with the point of order the result of my examination.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] moves to insert $4,500.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I trust that will not be urged. I hold, aside from the question whether the Commissioner of Patents earns that salary or not, it would savor somewhat of injustice to call Hon. M. V. Montgomery from a lucrative practice and appoint him to office and then diminish the salary.

Mr. RANDALL. The point of order has been decided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was submitting an amendment.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. What is the amendment?

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

After the word "office" insert "$4,500;" so that it will read:
"For compensation of the Commissioner of the Patent Office, $4,500."

Mr. RANDALL. That is according to the existing law, which the Chair states must operate.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If the gentleman puts it upon that ground, of course we are powerless.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Would an amendment to the amendment be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It would.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I move to amend so as to make the sum $4,000; which would put this officer on an equality with other heads of bureaus.

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The amendment proposed by Mr. RANDALL was agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS. I make the point of order against the provision in lines 2038 and 2039, where the salary of the assistant commissioner is increased to $3,250—an increase of $250.

Mr. RANDALL. That is correct; it is an increase of $250.

Mr. BURROWS. I make the point of order on it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will not insist upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend by inserting $3,000 as the amount.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer the amendments which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2055 strike out "three" and insert "two;" so that it will read, "two clerks of class 4."

In line 2059 strike out "eighteen" and insert "fourteen;" so that it will read, "fourteen clerks of class 2."

In the same line strike out "fifty" and insert "forty-three;" so that it will read, "forty-three clerks of class 1."

In line 2060 strike out "four" and insert "three;" so that it will read "three skilled draughtsmen."

In line 2064 strike out "thirty-two" and insert "twenty-seven;" so that it will read "twenty-seven permanent clerks."

In lines 2066 and 2067 strike out "seventy-five" and insert "sixty-three;" and strike out "six" and insert "five;" so that it will read "sixty-three copyists, five of whom may be copyists of drawings."

In line 2069 strike out "sixty-two" and insert "ninety-two;" so that it will read "ninety-two skilled laborers."

In lieu of the sum proposed in line 2073 insert $649,820.

Mr. RANDALL. This amendment comes from the subcommittee that had charge of this bill I believe with unanimity. It was never considered by the general committee, but I offer it in obedience to what I believe to be the united voice of the subcommittee who framed this bill.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to correct one statement just made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which is no doubt an unintentional error. I understood him to say that the amendment which he offers comes with the unanimous recommendation of the subcommittee that prepared this bill. Am I correct?

Mr. RANDALL. I was so informed.

Mr. CANNON. I want to disabuse the gentleman's mind of that impression.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman say he dissented?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; and I understand that probably a majority of the subcommittee dissented.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] say he dissented?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that on the recommendation of the Commissioner the examining force was increased, and this decrease was authorized he said by the condition of the office. When this was called up I do not remember if my colleague [Mr. CANNON] was present, but those present agreed, I think, that these changes should be made.

Mr. RANDALL. That was the way it came to me. I am not a member of the subcommittee, and, of course, can not tell anything about it of my own personal knowledge.

Mr. CANNON. If there was a hearing and action upon this matter by the subcommittee I was not notified.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will remember distinctly the general committee had not acted upon this amendment, because the bill was reported before the subcommittee acted in this particular.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can give the history of this matter. I offered the amendment myself in the subcommittee, and authority was given by the general committee to report it to the House.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It was from a desire to increase that portion of the force which it was most desirable should be increased for the public interest and to make such reduction as the condition of the service would warrant that we acted on the suggestion of the Commissioner.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will say further the change will save some $11,000.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Making the amount for this service, I think, about $21,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can give the exact figures: The total under the present organization is $32,800. If this change is made there will be a saving of $11,200; the total cost being $21,600. There is no increase in the number of officers.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is the money that you say is saved by this to be expended for an increase of force in another and more effective direction?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No, sir; there is no use whatever made of the money saved by this change. This is simply the employment of lower salaried officers instead of higher ones.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask the question because I happen to know that the examiner force of that office should be increased.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That has been done.

The amendment of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of books, and expenses of transporting publications of patents issued by the Patent Office to foreign governments, $4,000.

For photolithographing or otherwise producing plates for the Official Gazette, $44,000.

For photolithographing or otherwise producing copies of drawings of the weekly issues of patents, for producing copies of designs, trade-marks, and pending applications, and for the reproduction of exhausted copies; said photolithographing or otherwise producing plates and copies, referred to in this and the preceding paragraph, to be done under the supervision of the Commissioner of Patents, and in the city of Washington, if it can there be done at reasonable rates; and the Commissioner of Patents, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be authorized to make contracts therefor, $90,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I do not intend to speak at great length on this soldier question, but am obliged to refer to a member of the House by name, and shall therefore occupy a few minutes longer in order that I may not be accused of saying behind a man's back that which I would not say to his face.

In the debate on this bill, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] made this remark, when addressing himself some days ago to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], but which he [Mr. TOWNSHEND], in the confusion, did not hear:

Does not the gentleman know that the soldiers who were Democrats in the Army were those who got in after the conscription act was passed, that they were conscripts?

Mr. BUCHANAN. May I call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] is not in his seat?

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Well, the gentleman from Pennsylvania ought to be in his seat. I thought he was here and that I saw him here to-day. I have waited five days for him to be in his seat, in order to attack the foregoing remark.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman from Ohio gave as a reason for making his remarks now, that he wished to speak in the presence of the gentleman to whom he referred, and that is why I made the suggestion.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Well, I will have to make the statement to the House while I have the floor, and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania has any friends here who can defend such language as he used, let them do so. I merely want to say that I denounce the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM], that the Democratic soldiers of the Union Army were conscripts, as a vile, malicious slander. It is a slander on every Democratic soldier. It is a slander on every Republican comrade of a Democratic soldier; and it is a slander on the gentleman's own Republican colleague, whom I see before me [Mr. BINGHAM], who served long and gallantly on the staff of that "superb soldier" who led the Democratic ticket in 1880.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I thought the war was over. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] told us so.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. That kind of war is not not over with me, and it will not be over so long as gentlemen on this floor, or anywhere else, designate the Democratic soldiers of the Union Army as conscripts. That remark can not pass unchallenged or unrebuked when I am present. I come from a county where a majority of the men who went to the Union Army were Democrats. I represent a district in which there are living Democratic soldiers by the thousands, and where every graveyard has its quota of Democratic soldier dead. I live in a State which sent one hundred and fifty thousand of her Democratic sons across the Ohio River to face destruction on a hundred battlefields, and I belong to a nation whose integrity and glory is due to her Democratic soldiers. I, for one, shall not stand idly by and hear those heroes, living and dead, vilified by the name of "conscript."

Did the Democracy of the North wait for the draft? Does not every man on this floor recall the outbreak of the war? The smoke had not died away on Sumter when there marched out of my town a Democratic company called the Jackson Guards. Its name denoted the political complexion of nearly every member; and there is not, to my knowledge, a living man who marched out that day who is not a Democrat. The captain is, and always was, a Democrat. That company formed part of the First Ohio Regiment, which is eulogized by Whitelaw Reid in his Ohio in the War; and was one of the few regiments present at the first battle of Bull Run, which has never been charged with joining in the rout. I am informed by my colleague [Mr. GEDDES] that the company of that regiment which was raised at his home was commanded by a life-long Democrat, then over sixty years of age; and my colleague [Mr. FORAN] tells me that every man of the company from his home was an Irish Democrat. Such incidents are within the recollection of everybody.

Let me quote a passage from the memoirs of General Grant as showing who it was that first stepped to the front when there was fighting to be done. On page 230 of volume 1 he describes the scene at Galena when the news came that war was on us. They apparently held a first-class Democratic meeting. General Grant himself was chairman. Bear in mind he had voted for Buchanan and was a Douglas Democrat. This is what he says:

As soon as the news of the call for volunteers reached Galena posters were stuck up calling for a meeting of the citizens at the court-house in the evening. Business ceased entirely; all was excitement; for a time there were no party distinctions; all were Union men, determined to avenge the insult to the national flag. In the evening the court-house was packed. * * * The two principal speeches were made by B. B. Howard, the postmaster, and a Breckinridge Democrat at the November election the fall before, and John A. Rawlins, an elector on the Douglas ticket.

We have no way of putting on record on this point the testimony of Abraham Lincoln, but his private secretary and personal friend, John G. Nicolay, on page 75 of his work, entitled The Outbreak of Rebellion, says:

Parties vanished from politics. Universal opinion recognized but two rallying points—the camps of the South which gathered to assail the Union, and the armies of the North that rose to defend it.

In contradiction of the innuendo made often on this floor that the Democrats of the North did not come up promptly and effectively to the cause of the Union let me quote no less a Republican authority than James G. Blaine. I read from his Twenty Years of Congress, volume 1, page 298:

It is due to the Democracy of the North to say that however strongly they had opposed the election of Mr. Lincoln, and however hostile they had been to the principles which he represented, the mass of the party responded with noble enthusiasm and with patriotic fidelity to the Union. Their great leader, Senator Douglas, set a worthy example by promptly waiting on the President and expressing his deepest sympathy and his most earnest co-operation in the struggle for the life of the nation. * * * He had a larger following than any other party leader of his day. Nearly a million and a half of men believed in his principles, were devoted to him personally, trusted him implicitly. The value of his active loyalty to the Union may be measured by the disaster which would have been caused by hesitation on his part. When he returned to his State after the firing on Sumter the Republican Legislature of Illinois received him with a display of feeling as profound as that with which they would have welcomed Mr. Lincoln. His address on that memorable occasion was worthy of the loftiest patriot, and was of inestimable value to the cause of the Union. Perhaps no word spoken carried confidence to more hearts or gave greater strength to the national cause.

And let me here add the testimony of a statesman who was a Democrat "after the most straight sect" during the entire war. I refer to that honored ex-member of this House, Samuel S. Cox.

On page 622 of his Three Decades of Federal Legislation I read:

If the Democracy had not poured their legions into the Union armies where would the President and his Cabinet and the Congress which met in 1861 have been? If the Northern Democrats were so desirous of a peace with disunion all they had to do was to remain at home. Would they have accepted such a peace? No! From the beginning to the close of the civil war over two million one hundred thousand officers and soldiers volunteered upon the Union side. Two-thirds of them were Democrats. Such a splendid illustration of patriotism history never before recorded. It was the Northern Democrats who saved the Union.

And on page 623 he says:

There is not one of the two hundred thousand crippled and disabled soldiers and sailors, there is not a widow or an orphan upon our pension-rolls, whose voice does not vindicate the part which the Northern Democrats bore in the salvation of the Republic, and time itself has vindicated the wisdom, courage, and devotion of their party.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I only ask from the Republicans on this floor, or elsewhere, the same measure of honor for the Democratic soldiers which is accorded so eagerly to those of their own political faith. I do not ask them to be magnanimous; to say that they are proud of the fortitude and valor of the ragged and hungry men in gray who barred our way South with their unnumbered dead. I do not even ask them to remember in kindness the widow and fatherless down in the land of the palmetto and the cypress; but I claim from them that they do justice to the boys in blue who may see fit to hold political opinions in conflict with theirs.

This is why I have protested against belittling the number or insulting the memory of the Democratic soldiers of the Union.

Mr. MILLS, Mr. BAYNE, and Mr. CANNON addressed the Chair——

Mr. MILLS was recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee preparing this bill I ask to be recognized to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has been recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that under the ordinary rule of parliamentary courtesy the committee reporting the bill should be first recognized.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman propose to offer an amendment on behalf of the committee?

Mr. CANNON. Not on behalf of the committee, but from the minority of the committee; an amendment of which I gave notice in general debate as being from that minority and antagonizing this provision so far as it cuts down the estimates.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. CANNON. My point is that when a bill of this kind is being read for amendment the uniform parliamentary courtesy is to recognize, first, the gentleman in charge of the bill who represents the majority; second, to recognize on the part of the minority any member of the subcommittee that assisted in preparing the bill; then to recognize gentlemen not upon the committee. The purpose of this order of procedure is to allow the bill to be perfected as far as possible by the committee which prepared it.

Mr. MILLS. I will relieve the Chair and the gentleman from Illinois from any difficulty by yielding to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I do not desire the gentleman to yield to me. I put the matter on the ground——

Mr. MILLS. I give way, and will let the Chair recognize the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not see that there is involved here any point of order under the rules, but merely a question of parliamentary courtesy. The usage which the gentleman from Illinois states is one which the Chair is disposed to observe. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2128, strike out the word "one" wherever it occurs and insert the word "two."

In line 2129, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "four."

In line 2131, after the word "copyists," insert "two copy-holders, at $720 each."

In line 2132, after the word "messenger," insert "one assistant messenger, $600; one watchman."

In line 2133 strike out the word "twelve" and insert "one charwoman, $200; eighteen.

And in lieu of the sum proposed in line 2133 insert "$52,980."

Mr. MCMILLIN. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Let the point of order be disposed of now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee will state his point of order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. My point is that there is no law authorizing these officers. They are not carried in the present appropriation bill nor provided for by statute.

Mr. CANNON. In reply to that point of order I refer the Chair to the provision of general law authorizing the appointment of the Commissioner of Labor and the organization of his bureau. That law directed the Commissioner to make specific estimates for the affairs of his bureau for the coming year, this being the first year since its organization. In pursuance of that law and of the custom prevailing with reference to all similar departments he submits his estimate. That estimate provides for a force to carry out the general provision of law; and this amendment in pursuance thereof is strictly in order.

Most of the force specified in the amendment is force provided for in the general Revised Statutes, being clerks of class 4 and lower grades.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. The amendment which I have offered places the personnel of this force precisely as recommended in the supplementary estimate of the Commissioner of Labor forwarded properly to this House through the Speaker February 5, 1886.

Mr. MILLS. That is right.

Mr. CANNON. Having made this statement, and in view of such general statements as have heretofore been made I will, unless some gentlemen desires further information touching the amendment, ask for a vote.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. As a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois I offer what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commissioner of Labor, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; two clerks of class 4, both to be statistical experts, $3,600; two clerks of class 3, $3,200; two clerks of class 2, $2,800; four clerks of class 1, one of whom may be a translator and two of whom may be stenographers, $4,800; two clerks, at $1,000 each, $2,000; two copyists, at $900 each, $1,800; two copy-holders, at $720 each, $1,440; one messenger, $720; one messenger, $600; one watchman, $720; one skilled laborer, $600; one charwoman, $300; one charwoman, $200; eighteen special agents, at $1,400 each, $25,200; total, $52,980.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. This amendment is substantially the same as that of the gentleman from Illinois except that it avoids a mistake which he has made in the arrangement of these various clerks of classes 1, 2, 3, and 4. The aggregate named in the gentleman's amendment is all right. My amendment, I believe, conforms to the recommendation of the Commissioner of Labor as embraced in the estimates.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Why do you increase the appropriation?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Because of the estimates coming from the Commissioner of Labor.

Mr. CANNON. I will say in reply to the gentleman that these changes have been found to be necessary.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. This embraces the entire force asked by the Commissioner of Labor.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. That ought to have been known when the estimates were submitted originally.

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is not in accordance with the estimates subsequently submitted.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Gentlemen are in error in regard to the effect of the amendment. The aggregate is the same and the committee reported a different salary for these different clerks. My effort is to restore these salaries.

Mr. STORM. The amount is the same?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes, the amount is the same.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the only thing. In the opinion of the committee it is better to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who desires to submit a paper in approval of that amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 2128 to 2135, inclusive, and insert:

"Two clerks of class 4, both to be statistical experts; two clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 2, one of whom may be a stenographer; four clerks of class 1, one of whom may be a translator and one a stenographer; two clerks at $1,000 each; two copyists at $900 each; two copy-holders at $720 each; one messenger at $720; one messenger at $600; one watchman at $720; one skilled laborer at $600; one charwoman at $300; one charwoman at $200; eighteen special agents at $1,400 each; in all $52,980."

Mr. MILLS. And I ask for the reading of the following communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., June 4, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiry relative to the pecuniary needs of this bureau and for my reasons for submitting the estimate for salaries and expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, as printed in Executive Document No. 69, H. R., I have the honor to submit the following:

The Bureau of Labor was not organized until the latter half of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885; therefore, no estimates were made or could have been made by the officers of the bureau and in accordance with its requirements, so that the estimates submitted for the year ending June 30, 1887, gave the first opportunity for stating to Congress the pecuniary needs of the bureau. The sum appropriated for the present fiscal year was perhaps ample for carrying on the restricted and tentative investigation the results of which have been laid before Congress, but for carrying out the provisions of the organic law of the bureau a much larger sum would be needed.

This office is directed to "collect information upon the subject of labor, its relation to capital, the hours of labor, and the earnings of laboring men and women, and the means of promoting their material, social, intellectual, and moral prosperity." To collect such information it is necessary to resort to the most expensive method for securing statistics; that is, the employment of special agents. This office has no routine duties to perform, but is obliged to lay out its work and then prosecute it, and the class of information called for demands the method mentioned. It is also essential, in performing this class of work, to secure experienced agents; but the results of the labors of such agents would be of little use unless such results are properly digested by another class of persons constantly employed in office work. During the present year we have employed twenty such agents for the length of time necessary, and a small force of temporary clerks, supplemented by the clerical labors of the special agents themselves. This has taxed the force at our command to its utmost. Long day hours and night-work have been essential to the carrying out of the plans of the year.

This can not be kept up, and in order to make any reasonably extensive investigations, and on the plans already submitted to and approved by the honorable Secretary of the Interior, we need the amount of money stated in the estimates printed in Executive Document No. 69. Light and not very valuable investigations can be carried on for a smaller amount of money, and if the estimates are reduced the results of our work must be reduced accordingly, not only in value but in extent. I do not believe this is what Congress intended when the bureau was created. With the amount of money called for in the estimates, however, this bureau can do valuable work and make its investigations of such extent as to not only command the respect and confidence of the people, but to be of great practical value to Congress itself. For instance, the line of work already laid out for the coming year consists of—

1. An investigation into the number, causes, duration, and results and other features of all strikes occurring in the United States since and including the year 1881.

2. An investigation into the hours of labor, wages paid, method of payment, tours of duty, the condition, &c., of railway employés on all railroad systems in the United States.

3. An investigation as to the kind and amount of work performed in the penal institutions of the several States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia, the methods under which convicts are or may be employed in such institutions, and as to all facts pertaining to convict labor and its influence upon the industries of the country.

4. An investigation into the distribution of products, the cost of production and distribution of products as far as the leading articles of consumption are concerned, tracing each article from its production to its consumption, and gathering all the facts as to cost and method of distribution.

5. An investigation into the employment, wages, conditions, &c., of the women workers of great cities.

You will at once perceive that had Congress been in possession of definite information upon the points just referred to it would have been in a far better condition to have discussed many of the bills before it at the present session.

I have endeavored to secure a harmonious distribution of labor, based on the experience of the past year, and as expressed in the estimates referred to. The work of this bureau can not be compared with that of other offices, because, as I have indicated, it requires original investigation, and in a line that has not been carried out by others, except in individual States. It is essential, therefore, that the equipment of the bureau should be adequate to the proper establishment of its work, if its work is to be of value. It is often necessary to secure the services of an expert. It is also essential that this bureau should build up a library of books especially adapted to its wants, and that trade and special journals should be taken for the use of the office. These matters call for considerable expense, and under the estimates are provided for, but no provision for them appears in House bill 8974.

I assure you, sir, that should Congress grant the amount called for in the estimates and that amount should prove to be more than is needed, it will not be expended. I also assure you most emphatically that under no circumstances will the work of this bureau be carried to such an extent on any appropriation, however small, as to create a deficiency.

Trusting that I have met your wishes as to the extent of your inquiry,

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CARROLL D. WRIGHT,
Commissioner.

Hon. R. Q. MILLS, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has changed his amendment so as to conform to the estimate of the Department for special agents, and I therefore withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I also withdraw mine.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. How many special agents are now to be provided for?

Mr. CANNON. Eighteen.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask for a further modification in line 2134 by striking out $1,200 and inserting $1,400.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. And make the number of special agents eighteen?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; this is all right. Now read the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2128, strike out the word "one" wherever it occurs and insert the word "two;" in line 2129, strike out the word "three" and insert "four;" in line 2131, after the word "copyist," insert "two copy-holders, at $720 each;" in line 2132, after the word "messenger," insert "one assistant messenger, at $600; one watchman;" in line 2133, strike out the word "twelve" and insert "one charwoman, $200; eighteen;" and strike out, in line 2134, "one thousand two" and insert "one thousand four;" and in lieu of the sum proposed in line 2135 insert $52,980.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 25.

So Mr. CANNON'S amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I move, after the word "agents," in line 2134, to insert "at least two of whom shall be females;" and I hope no point of order will be made against this, if it is obnoxious to any point of order. Sir, from the number of women engaged in industrial pursuits it seems to me only fair that this provision should be made for them.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Make it three instead of two.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Yes; as the number has been increased to eighteen, I will modify my amendment and make it three instead of two.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem of special agents when away from home on duty, in lieu of expenses for subsistence, the rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and not to exceed $3 per day, and for transportation and for traveling expenses of officers, $20,000.

Mr. CANNON. I move, in line 2140, to strike out $20,000 and insert $39,850. That is in accordance with the estimate of the Commissioner of Labor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Director of the Geological Survey: For Director, $6,000; executive officer, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,400; chief disbursing clerk, $2,400; librarian, $2,000; one photographer, $2,000; three assistant photographers, one at $900, one at $720, and one at $480; two clerks of class 1; one clerk, at $1,000; four clerks, at $900 each; four copyists, at $720 each; one watchman, at $840; four watchmen, at $600 each; one janitor, at $600; four messengers, at $480 each; in all, $35,540.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee in the first place respecting the salary of the Director of the Geological Survey as provided by this bill, whether that is fixed by law now at $6,000?

Mr. RANDALL. It is.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The salary of the Director of the Geological Survey $6,000! I must confess my surprise at the size of that salary, while the heads of some of the most important bureaus do not get more than half that.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman can offer an amendment to reduce it, if he thinks proper.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do offer an amendment to reduce it to $4,000.

Mr. CANNON. And I make the point of order that that amendment changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP in the chair). Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois to hold that it is not within the power of the House to appropriate less than the salary fixed by law?

Mr. CANNON. I do not think it is.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not think the House has deprived itself of the right to limit appropriations even by its rules.

Mr. CANNON. Let the amendment be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 2167, the word "six" and insert "four;" so that it will read "four thousand dollars."

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order against that.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The salaries of some of the most important heads of divisions——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will state his point of order.

Mr. CANNON. My point of order is that the permanent law fixes the salary of this officer at $6,000, and that it is not in order to change it upon an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, believing that it is within the power of Congress to reduce salaries.

Mr. LONG. Let us have a vote.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I was saying, Mr. Chairman, that the heads of some of the most important bureaus under the Government have salaries of only $3,000 or $4,000, as, for instance, in the Pension Office, with the immense amount of work imposed upon him and the responsibilities that attach to that office. The officers in charge of the Land Office and the Indian Office and other officers have salaries small in comparison with this. What is there in this office which requires such an extraordinarily large salary in comparison with the others?

What is there so extraordinary in this position as to require such a salary? I grant you that we need a scientist of experience and ability at the head of this bureau; but this is a remarkably high salary, higher I venture to assert than is paid to any man in the United States for similar services, and I venture to assert that there is not a professor of geological science in the United States who receives anything like such a salary.

But I wish before taking my seat to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not provision has been made for the large number of employés, professors, &c., who have heretofore been employed in this service at a cost, all told, including the printing I believe for the last year, of about $1,000,000, far beyond, in my judgment, the value of the work, valuable as some of the work certainly is.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the gentleman's figures are incorrect.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. About $1,000,000, I think, including printing.

Mr. RANDALL. But the matter will come up, at all events, in the sundry civil bill, which provides for this service.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Then I do not wish to discuss it further here.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 57.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I shall have to ask tellers.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Very well. I will withdraw the demand for tellers, and will submit an amendment making the salary $5,000 instead of $6,000, and on that I shall ask tellers.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The Superintendent of the Geological Survey has to be a man of great learning, and there are few men in this country who can fill the place.

Mr. MORRISON. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Yes; there are plenty of men who can fill it.

Mr. CANNON. A single word touching this amendment. The law, when there was plenty of time for consideration and action, organized this bureau, for it was fixed away back several years ago, the first director being Clarence King, and fixed the salary at $6,000. I say that was done after deliberate consideration of all of the facts surrounding it. I believe that law was right and that it is still right. I believe this official is not getting too much salary for the work done.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The head of the Labor Bureau gets only $3,000.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that; but if the gentleman does not think he gets enough, then amend the law and give him more.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, What professor of geology in the United States gets $6,000?

Mr. MORRISON. Not one.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And there are more eminent men, permit me to say, in that science than the gentleman who is in charge of this bureau here. There are others in the United States.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman name a more eminent man in this profession than the present head of that bureau?

Mr. CANNON. If there is a professor of geology in the United States who does not get enough pay I would advise my friend from Ohio to put his hand in his pocket and help to pay the difference. But do not cut this man down contrary to law.

The Commissioner of Pensions gets but $4,000. If that is not enough, and I am inclined to think it is not enough, change the law, and give him more. But where is the propriety, because somebody wants to make a little reputation for economy, or because somebody has some reason or other for not approving of the work of this bureau or of some official in it—where is the propriety or sense of withholding $1,000 from what is his salary under the law, and driving him to the Court of Claims to recover that sum?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Is there any show of saving by paying only $5,000 if $6,000 is the law?

Mr. CANNON. The show is in the bill. It will make the amount of the bill $1,000 less than what the law allows.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. And what idiot takes that for anything but a show?

Mr. CANNON. I will let the gentleman's colleague answer that.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to say a word as to the sufficiency of salaries. A salary of $6,000 is extraordinary for this service and this position. It is more than a Senator of the United States gets. It is within $3,000 of the sum paid to a Cabinet officer. Besides, $6,000 now is as much as $12,000 twenty years ago. Let me remind this House that all salaries have been increased rapidly, have been doubled since the war, when they were established, by the increase in the value of money. The purchasing power of a salary now is worth twice as much to the man who receives it as it was in 1865. It is more than it was in 1847. All salaries, therefore, have been increased. And while we are not increasing the number of dollars, let it be remembered we are increasing all the time the total value of the salary.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Does this amendment change the salary? Does it decrease the salary?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I trust that would be the result when the bill finally becomes a law, and I think it would be.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Would that be the result as the bill is now?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If this should go through both Houses with the first clause in the bill amended as I think it will be, then it would. There can be no possible harm in taking the chances on that.

Mr. FELTON. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. FELTON. If that clause is restored in the other House and comes back here, will this House agree to it?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think so. The Senate has a right to put any such amendment on the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. This is simply an experiment on your part, without any fixed notion that your amendment will be effective.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think I understand the situation as well as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]; perhaps a little better.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER].

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 68.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. No quorum.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. This amendment is recommended by the committee and is the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. DUNHAM. Will the gentleman from Ohio state whether he would be in favor of cutting down his own salary?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio (one of the tellers). Debate is not in order. Let us go on with the vote.

Before the count was completed,

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, said: If we can have a vote on this in the House I will not insist on the point of order as to a quorum.

Mr. CANNON. If you vote down the previous question you will be entitled to a vote in the House.

The count was resumed and completed; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 101.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For rent of buildings for use of the Department of the Interior, in the discretion of the Secretary, $38,000.

Mr. RANDALL. In lieu of the three lines just read I submit by instruction of the committee the substitute which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph just read and in lieu thereof insert the following:
"The rent of buildings for the Interior Department, namely: For the Bureau of Education, $6,000; Geological Survey, $20,000; Indian Office, $5,000; Bureau of Labor, $1,776; Railroad and General Land Office, $1,800; a store-room for documents, $360; in all, $35,436."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Dakota and Minnesota, $2,500; and for the clerks in his office, $9,000; in all, $11,500.
For rent of office for the surveyor-general, fuel, books, stationery, and other incidental expenses $2,500.

Mr. PAYSON. I move to amend by inserting in line 2234, after the word "Dakota," the words "and Nebraska."

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection to that.

Mr. GILFILLAN. I have no objection to this amendment being considered now if I can reserve the right to make a point of order on the paragraph after it is amended.

Mr. PAYSON. That right can be reserved.

The amendment offered by Mr. PAYSON was agreed to.

Mr. GILFILLAN. I desire to make a point of order on this paragraph—first in respect to the words in lines 2234 and 2235, "and Minnesota." I make a second point upon the words in line 2235, "five hundred."

Upon the first point I will say that the State of Minnesota is by existing law a surveying district of itself, with an established office, and an established surveyor-general with a salary fixed by law. This, then, is new legislation and is repugnant to the rule. I make the point on the words "five hundred," in line 2235, because it is in excess of the salary fixed by law for the surveyor-general of Dakota, and hence is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman state that the salary is now fixed by law at $2,000?

Mr. GILFILLAN. Yes, sir. Now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair entertains the same view that the gentleman from Minnesota does, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota made the point of order that the salary of the surveyor-general of the Territory of Dakota was fixed by law at $2,000. The gentleman also made the further point that there was created by law a surveyor-general for the State of Minnesota.

Mr. RANDALL. It is to the latter point that I desire to speak. Has the Chair ruled upon that?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled that if the salary was fixed by law at $2,000 the provision in this bill seeking to appropriate more was out of order.

Mr. RANDALL. That point of order may be good, but the point that I want to speak to is the one which would go to prevent the consolidation of these offices. This consolidation is proposed at the suggestion of the Land Office. There are no lands to be surveyed in Nebraska.

Mr. PAYSON. The point of order is made not against the amendment, but against the provision in the bill consolidating the State of Minnesota with the Territory of Dakota.

Mr. GILFILLAN. The point is against the words "and Minnesota."

Mr. RANDALL. We omit to make any appropriation for that district, and we do so on the suggestion of the Department. The truth is that very many of these land districts might well be consolidated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GILFILLAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting at the end of line 2240 the following:

For surveyor-general of Minnesota, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $8,000; in all, $10,000.

For fuel, books, stationery, pay of messenger, and other incidental expenses, $1,000.

I will simply say, Mr. Chairman, in support of this amendment, that it is copied from the Statutes at Large of the last session, and is a repetition of the provision which was then made for the salaries and incidental expenses of the office of the surveyor-general of Minnesota.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. As I understand it, the necessity for this amendment results from the decision of the Chair sustaining the point of order.

Mr. GILFILLAN. This amendment is made necessary by the decision of the Chair upon the point of order, but it has merit behind it. We have in the State of Minnesota public lands unsurveyed to the amount of between eleven and twelve million acres.

Mr. RANDALL. Even if Minnesota is put into the bill, I ask this House to adhere to the estimate. The estimate does not call for $10,000. Supposing Minnesota to be included in the bill, still the amount called for is only $4,800; $1,800 for the salary of the surveyor-general, and $3,000 for the clerks in his office. Even if the House is willing to continue that office which the Land Office declares to be unnecessary, I am sure that it does not desire to raise the amount above what the estimate calls for.

Mr. GILFILLAN. How much is estimated for the clerks?

Mr. RANDALL. Three thousand dollars, and $1,800 for the salary.

Mr. GILFILLAN. The salary is fixed by law at $2,000.

Mr. RANDALL. That I understand.

Mr. GILFILLAN. I have not seen the estimates to which the gentleman refers. If the chairman of the committee thinks the sum in this amendment is too large, let it be reduced to the proper amount.

Mr. RANDALL. I say that the Land Office does not ask for any appropriation for this Minnesota office; but if the House insists upon putting it into this bill, then I do not want them to go beyond the estimate.

Mr. GILFILLAN. As I have said, I copied this amendment from the act of last year. Now, if it shall appear that the sum set out in this amendment is in excess of the estimates, let it be reduced to the proper amount.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected—ayes 38, noes 63.

Mr. GILFILLAN. I reoffer my amendment modified by inserting the amount given in the estimates.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of Minnesota, $2,000, and for the clerks in his office, $4,800; in all, $6,800.

For fuel, books, stationery, pay of messenger, and other incidental expenses, $1,000.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman has it wrong now.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman from Minnesota desires to still further modify the amendment.

Mr. GILFILLAN. Yes; the $4,800 should be $3,000. The amendment as it now stands embraces simply the items recommended by the Department, except that the salary is $2,000 instead of $1,800.

Mr. RANDALL. It has been fixed at that for ten years, I think.

Mr. CANNON. It has been $2,000 heretofore.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir.

Mr. PAYSON. Section 2208 of the Revised Statutes provides that the salary of this officer shall be $2,000 a year.

Mr. RANDALL. I find that I was wrong. The appropriation last year was $2,000.

Mr. GILFILLAN. Then the amendment is right.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the amendment so as to appropriate $1,800 for the surveyor-general, as in the other cases; $3,000 for clerk-hire, and $1,000 for incidentals. The gentleman from Minnesota had better accept this.

Mr. GILFILLAN. I accept the amendment of the gentleman as a modification of my amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. GILFILLAN as modified, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of Louisiana, $1,800; and for the clerks in his office, $10,000; in all, $11,800.

Mr. BLANCHARD. In order to make an inquiry of the gentleman in charge of this bill, I move to amend by striking out the last word. In the last two legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation acts, copies of which I hold in my hand, I find there was allowed for the clerical force in the office of surveyor-general of Louisiana, $13,500. In this bill the appropriation for that purpose is only $10,000, a deficiency of $3,500. Now I would like from the gentleman some explanation of the reason of this reduction.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no knowledge of any deficiency. The reason for fixing the amount named in this bill is that it is in accord with the estimate from the Department, which is $1,800 for salary of the surveyor-general and $10,000 for these other purposes. I do not suppose this survey is going on forever; hence I presume the service is susceptible of reduction from year to year, and this, I suppose, is the reason why the estimate this year is lower than the appropriation of last year.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment, and move to amend by striking out in the pending paragraph "$10,000" and inserting "$13,500," and making the aggregate appropriation in the paragraph $15,300. This is the exact amount appropriated for the surveyor-general's office in Louisiana in the last two bills of this character. There is exactly the same clerical force in the office now that has been there during the last two or three years; and there is the same amount of work to be done by that office as when the larger appropriations in the last two bills were made. The only reason that can be given for not making the appropriation in this paragraph $15,300, as heretofore, is that the parties who prepared the estimates fixed the amount at only $11,800. Not one word of explanation is vouchsafed to show that the appropriation for the coming fiscal year should be smaller than it was for the two preceding years. Upon the mere arbitrary estimates submitted to the Committee on Appropriations that committee has reduced this appropriation $3,500, and is not able to give any reason for the reduction except that the estimate calls for only $11,800.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Can the gentleman give any reason why this appropriation should be more than $11,800, the amount of the departmental estimate?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have given the reason that there is now as much work to be done in that office as heretofore. The surveys of public lands now going on there are just as numerous to-day and require just as large an appropriation to pay the expense as during the last two years.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Has the gentleman himself any information on that point?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have information that there is as much work in the surveyor-general's office now as heretofore when larger appropriations were made.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Has the surveyor-general written any communication to you on the subject?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have not any written information from him. I know, however, that there is now as much business in that office as at any time during the last two years and as great need of clerical assistance.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, if the committee is not to depend upon the statements of the Commissioner of the General Land Office as to what he wants, I would like to know whom it can depend on. He not only put in his estimate the amount we propose to appropriate, but, as I am advised, he was spoken to personally. I therefore ask for a vote, and hope the amendment will not prevail.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. BLANCHARD was rejected.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask unanimous consent to turn back to line 2234 to make a verbal correction in the amendment there adopted. The words "State of" should be inserted before "Nebraska."

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP). If there be no objection that verbal modification will be made. The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of Nebraska, $1,500; and for the clerk in his office, $1,000; in all, $2,500.

For rent of office for the surveyor-general, fuel, books, stationery, and other incidental expenses, $1,000.

Mr. RANDALL. These items relating to Nebraska should go out, in view of the amendment already adopted.

Mr. PAYSON. That should be done. I move to strike out these two paragraphs.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of Oregon, $1,800; and for the clerks in his office, $2,500; in all, $4,300.

Mr. HERMANN. I move to amend by striking out, in the paragraph just read, "$1,800, as the salary of the surveyor-general of Oregon," and to insert in lieu thereof "$2,500," and I ask the indulgence of the House while I occupy a few minutes in support of this amendment.

The law allows, as the salary of this officer, $2,500. This bill proposes a reduction of $700 upon the compensation of the surveyor-general of a district the fifth in area in the United States.

Let me direct the attention of the House to some facts in this connection which are worthy of careful consideration by members who are called upon to vote on this proposition: Total area of land in Oregon, 60,975,360 acres; area of land surveyed to June 30, 1885, 39,647,093 acres; area of lands unsurveyed to June 30, 1885, 21,328,267 acres; about one-third yet to be surveyed.

WHAT IS THE CONTINUING DEMAND FOR PUBLIC LANDS IN OREGON?

There were surveyed in 1882 4,711,952 acres; in 1883, 2,492,323 acres; in 1884, 2,130,432 acres; in 1885, 2,868,317 acres—slightly diminished because of the arbitrary restrictions imposed on the public surveys.

I ask special attention of this committee to the statement as to whether settlements keep pace with these surveys? I am satisfied when the House is informed in reference to this matter it will not sanction an unjust discrimination against the surveyor-general of the State of Oregon.

Look at the total land disposals in Oregon:

Years.	Entries.	Acres.
1883	7,329	504,828.80
1884	8,291	604,696.60
1885	8,481	488,287.71
Nine months to March 31, 1886	5,277	377,809.77

Do the settlements keep pace with the surveys? There were taken by homestead settlers in 1881, 122,094.46 acres; in 1882, 153,532.46 acres; in 1883, 236,362.04 acres; in 1884, 233,148.55 acres; in 1885, 191,444.04 acres; for nine months ending March 31, 1886, 221,307.67 acres.

I desire to call your attention to another unjust discrimination.

Montana, whose surveyer-general is allowed $2,500, disposed of 81,821.22 acres in 1884 for homestead settlement, against 233,148.55 acres in Oregon; in 1885, 60,591.72 acres, against 191,444.04 acres for homestead settlement in Oregon.

Wyoming, whose surveyer-general is allowed $2,500, disposed of only 44,153.72 acres in 1884 for homesteads, and in 1885 only 46,195.28.

Utah, whose surveyer-general is allowed $2,500, disposed of only 60,691.46 acres in 1884 for homestead, and in 1885 63,539.81 acres.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HERMANN. I have not concluded my statement in behalf of the amendment. I have offered to strike out "$1,800" as the salary for the surveyor-general of Oregon, as provided in this bill, and in lieu thereof to insert "$2,500."

Mr. PETERS. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. HERMANN. I have a few more statements of facts which should be brought to the attention of the House. I do not trouble the House very often.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] as having yielded his time to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. HERMANN. In addition to the facts already stated, I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that Oregon is now fifth in order in amount of homestead settlements and lands taken thereunder, Kansas, Nebraska, Dakota, and California alone being ahead in the order named; and yet Oregon is placed at the foot of the list, alongside of Louisiana and Nevada and Florida, where there are comparatively few lands to be surveyed or now disposed of.

Wyoming, Washington, Utah, New Mexico, Montana, Idaho, and even Arizona, all are allowed appropriations to cover the maximum, $2,500, fixed by law. Yet their duties and responsibilities are much less and the amount of lands demanded for settlement less than in Oregon.

Why is this discrimination made against Oregon? Why allow a salary to these surveyors-general and deny the same compensation to one with much greater business?

As the figures show, the State is increasing most rapidly in population by immigration in the past few years.

They are coming by the Northern Pacific, the Union Pacific, by the Southern Pacific and local railways, as well as by the Canadian Pacific, and by sea; and still there are 21,328,267 acres of the public domain unsurveyed, and with many millions of the lands surveyed, to afford future homes for the homeless.

You allow $1,800 to Oregon while the law authorizes $2,500. This the surveyor-general has always received. He has no perquisites or fees. He can not maintain himself on this. You require him to hold his office in a large city, where living and rents are high and other expenses in proportion. If he has a family, what has he left?

Sir, the law allows him $2,500. Under this he is offered and accepts the office with this express and stipulated contract price as the compensation for his labors.

He executes a bond of $30,000, undertakes the duties, and assumes the liabilities and responsibilities. Under the law and the decisions he is entitled to the sum promised him in the law. You allow him $700 less than his contract salary. Is he not entitled to the balance? Is there not a deficiency? But aside from the law I ask if this officer, presumed and expected to be a skilled and professional surveyor, and with the vast duties appertaining to his office, should not at least be allowed the full sum of $2,500? His district embraces the whole State of Oregon, an area half as large as France and twice as large as England; an area equal to all of New England and two-thirds of New York, or greater than New York and Pennsylvania combined, and yet it is proposed in the pending bill to allow the surveyor-general the salary of a clerk, and a very subordinate one at that.

I appeal to the House for justice.

Whoever shall hold these public offices, whether Democrats or Republicans, I do trust that gentlemen intrusted with the discharge of duties of this magnitude will be provided with proper and just compensation. When the salary of other surveyors-general with far less business is allowed to remain at $2,500 a year, I hope the proper and just thing will be done in the case of Oregon by adopting the amendment which I have submitted. Because we lack representation on this floor; because I appear before you alone as the Representative of the State of Oregon, I hope that will not militate against the necessity of doing justice in this instance. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will allow the bill in this respect to go through as it has been reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Can a point of order be now raised on these lines 2294 and 2295, which are as follows:

For surveyor-general of Oregon, $1,800.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP in the chair). The Chair thinks it is too late, as debate has been exhausted.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 72.

Mr. HERMANN. No quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the members of the House will take some other occasion to pay tribute to the section of my friend from Oregon. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HERMANN and Mr. RANDALL were appointed as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 87.

So Mr. HERMANN'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. HERMANN. I move then to strike out "$1,800" and insert "$2,250."

Mr. RANDALL. I hope not.

Mr. HERMANN. All the other surveyors-general have been kept at $2,500. There is no other instance where the salary is $1,800, so far as I know.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the recommendation of the committee will be adhered to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon to strike out "$1,800" and insert "$2,250."

Mr. PRICE. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 83.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows.

For office of disbursing clerk and superintendent of building: Disbursing clerk and superintendent, $2,100; one clerk of class 2 (accountant); one clerk of class 1 (storekeeper); one engineer, at $1,400; one assistant engineer, at $1,000; one fireman, who shall be a blacksmith, at $900; one fireman, who shall be a steam-fitter, at $900; one conductor of elevator, $720; two firemen, at $720 each; one carpenter, at $1,200; one assistant carpenter, at $1,000; captain of the watch, at $1,000; nineteen watchmen; twenty laborers; one plumber, $900; one awning-maker, at $900; and fifteen charwomen, at $180 each; and for force in the additional building as follows: Four watchmen, three laborers, and three charwomen, at $180 each; in all, $51,040.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move, in line 2440, to strike out "$180" and insert "$240." I understand it was the understanding of the Committee on Appropriations that the compensation of charwomen should be increased from $15 to $20 a month. As this is the last item in the bill where it occurs I have offered the amendment, and I ask now, if the amendment shall be adopted in this instance, that the same increase shall take place in the preceding paragraphs of the bill; that is, that the pay of these charwomen shall be increased from $15 a month to $20 a month.

Mr. RANDALL. What would be the aggregate?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I am not able to state at this moment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I will offer the amendment here and give the estimates hereafter.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not disposed to make the point of order upon this, but for the present will reserve it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. In all the public buildings throughout the country that class of labor is paid $20 per month.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, if the House wants to increase these salaries I have no objection. They are the lowest salaries paid under the Government. I am not going to sit here individually and object to this amendment increasing the salaries of these women.

The amendment of Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Solicitor of the Treasury: For compensation of the Solicitor of the Treasury, $4,500; assistant solicitor, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; four clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 2; two clerks of class 1; one assistant messenger; and one laborer; in all, $28,080.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Mr. Chairman, in lines 2528 and 2529 I make the point of order on the salary, $4,500, fixed for compensation of Solicitor of the Treasury.

I see by the report here furnished by the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill that the law fixes the salary at $4,000. This is in excess of what the law provides for this salary, and hence I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LONG. Then I move to amend by inserting $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of the district judges of the United States for California, the northern district of Illinois, the eastern district of Louisiana, Massachusetts, Maryland, New York, New Jersey, the southern district of Ohio, and for Pennsylvania, twelve in all, at $4,000 each, $48,000.

Mr. FELTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 2556, after the word "California," "$5,000;" on line 2559 strike out the words "twelve in all;" strike out line 2560; and insert "in all, $49,000."

Mr. FELTON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment will simply restore to the judge occupying that position at the present time the amount to which under the statute he is entitled and has always received—that is to say, $5,000.

Mr. RANDALL. The law fixes it at $5,000, it is true; but that is an old law, and as I have had occasion once before to say in the course of this debate it was probably passed on the assumption that it cost more to live in California than in other sections of the country. The truth is, as I am well advised, that it costs no more to live there now than in other portions of the country.

Mr. HENLEY. Would it be in order to ask for the reading of that amendment again?

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 54, noes 72.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court of Claims: For salaries of five judges of the Court of Claims, at $4,500 each; chief clerk, $3,000; one assistant clerk, $2,000; bailiff, $1,500; and one messenger; in all, $29,840.

For stationery, books, fuel, labor, and other miscellaneous expenses, $3,000.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section last read, formally, that I may submit a statement.

On yesterday the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], commenting on the report on the tariff bill made by me from the Committee on Ways and Means, questioned the correctness of the estimated surplus and the condition of the Treasury for the next fiscal year ending June 30, 1887. He asked that I would examine his figures and state what I thought of their correctness. I have done so, and after the most careful examination I am satisfied of the correctness of my previous estimates. Of course they are but estimates, and are subject to change or variation from causes some of which I stated yesterday, chiefly the condition of the country as to prosperity or adversity.

Here are the closing statements of the gentleman from New York, taken from the RECORD of this morning.

Assuming that you will have the large amount that has been collected from customs for the current year, it simply amounts to an aggregate of $330,000,000 of receipts against $330,000,000 of expenditures, and you can make nothing else out of it.

And again:

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to add a single word, to ask a question of the gentleman from Illinois before he takes his seat; and for that purpose I move to strike out the last word.

Is it not true that you reported a bill for the reduction of tariff taxes upon the assumption that the expenditures this year were only about $303,000,000; and is not that the statement embodied in your report? Is it not equally true that for the next fiscal year your expenditures will reach $344,000,000, including in that only the excess made for the postal service in excess of the postal revenues?

Mr. MORRISON. I will say candidly, in response to the gentleman from New York, that I do not exactly remember the statement in the report, not having the figures immediately before me, but they are based upon estimates derived from the Treasury Department, and within the space of two weeks you will see whether they are correct or not.

Mr. HISCOCK. You will find that they are entirely in error.

In this statement the gentleman makes the receipts and expenditures for next year balance, but it is only just to say that in his estimate of separate items of expenditure he left the Treasury with a deficit of $14,000,000 next year.

That part of the report of the Ways and Means Committee the correctness of which is questioned by the gentleman from New York is as follows:

The Treasury receipts for the fiscal year 1885 were $323,690,706.38. The increased receipts from customs and internal taxes, the principal sources of revenue, for the months of the fiscal year of 1886 already past, over the receipts of the same months of last year, justify the estimate that the receipts for the present fiscal year will exceed $335,000,000. Nor may our annual Treasury receipts be expected again to fall below that sum without reduced taxation, inasmuch as these receipts result chiefly from the taxes on articles of necessity and comfort to be consumed in continually increasing quantities with our ever-growing population.

The expenditures for the fiscal year 1885, including pensions and the legal requirements of the public debt, were $305,830,970.54. Neither "the actual needs of an economical administration of the Government" nor the patriotic expectations of the people justify any increase of this enormous annual expenditure, and we may safely estimate the annual surplus to exceed $30,000,000.

The reductions to result from the proposed bill are within this estimated surplus, and a little exceed $25,000,000 on the basis of last year's importations. (See table of estimates submitted with this report.)

This estimate is based on a comparison of next year, 1887, with last year, 1885, for expenditures, and for receipts it is based on the increase of this year over last; which is shown by actual receipt for the eleven and a half months already past will be more than ten and possibly thirteen millions in excess of last year, when the surplus was in round numbers $18,000,00, but with the additional or increased receipts of this year would have been $30,000,000. This, too, when the usual river and harbor bill of $14,000,000 was passed, and we had the ever-recurring miscellaneous and deficiency bills.

If we base our estimates for 1887 on the receipts and expenditures of the first eleven and a half months of this year, 1886, a still larger surplus for next will appear.

The actual and estimated expenditure for 1886 by the Treasury Department is $290,000,000. The accounts for eleven and a half months elapsed show that estimate is fully up to the amount required. The surplus for this year was estimated by the Secretary at $24,250,000, counting on a revenue of $315,000,000, but I have already shown the revenue will be $335,000,000, which will increase the surplus this year to $44,000,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, all I desire to say in reply to what the gentleman from Illinois has said is this: In the estimate which I submitted on yesterday I did not include but one miscellaneous bill, I believe. I did not include a number of bills which have passed the House carrying appropriations for public buildings. I did not include the probable increase of the river and harbor bill by the Senate. In my opinion the miscellaneous appropriations which will become law before this Congress adjourns will amount to somewhere from six to eight millions of dollars. In reference to the provision for the refunding of customs duties to which I called attention on yesterday I desire to say this, that I have before me the copy of a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury in which he estimates that the effect of the decision in that case will be to reduce the revenues to the extent of from eight to ten millions of dollars each year. It is proper I should add further in this connection that if the proper protests have been served, and I do not know whether they have been or not, but doubtless they have been, the Government may be compelled to refund the duties that have been collected under the construction put by the Department upon the law, and instead of being compelled to refund $10,000,000, it may possibly amount to $24,000,000.

Mr. MORRISON. I stated yesterday that so far as any reply was or is necessary to the gentleman's restatement of the estimated ten millions to be refunded as the result of mistake in the last tariff bill, the ten millions would come into the Treasury and not go out if the tariff bill was passed because it corrected the mistake. In the remarks already made I did not intend to provoke the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to restate his, as I believe, erroneous estimates; but he has done so, and I will restate briefly the basis of my estimates, and if I state anything erroneous I ask that the gentleman will correct me.

The Treasury estimate of expenditures for the present year was $290,000,000. The estimate of revenue was $315,000,000. This shows, if it prove correct, a surplus of $24,000,000 for this year, 1886.

The gentleman from New York has examined the Treasury statements himself, and has doubtless ascertained that the revenue will be eighteen to twenty million dollars more than was anticipated. Therefore the surplus of this year, to end in two weeks, will be forty-four millions instead of twenty-four millions.

Of course I am assuming that in the next year this administration will be as economical as it has been in the present year, except to the extent we make it pay expenditures it was not compelled to pay before. These consist entirely in pensions. So far we have not increased the pension-list to the extent of more than $10,000,000, as I think—at all events not more than $14,000,000—in the widows' bill and the Mexican pension bill. If in that way we increase expenditures $14,000,000, take that from forty-four millions and we still have a surplus of thirty millions left.

Mr. HENLEY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MORRISON. Certainly.

Mr. HENLEY. Does the gentleman deduct from the supposed surplus the items of expenditure just now enumerated by the gentleman from New York, namely, the river and harbor bill, &c.?

Mr. MORRISON. I do. There was no appropriation for rivers and harbors this year, but, as the gentleman from California knows, about as much of the appropriation made two years ago was spent this year as last.

At the beginning of this fiscal year a large balance was unexpended. And whatever appropriation may be made now there will hardly be more expended in the next year than in this. In the $290,000,000, current expenses for this year, is included a part of what was appropriated for rivers and harbors two years ago.

Mr. HENLEY. The reason why I ask the question was because in the estimate of expenditure and probable surplus which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] made in his report on the tariff bill from the Committee on Ways and Means he did not then enumerate the items of expenditure, the river and harbor bill, &c., which have been mentioned by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MORRISON. No, I did not go into detail.

Mr. HENLEY. And yet the result as to the extent of the surplus he estimated was the same then as he thinks it will be now.

Mr. MORRISON. I did not go into details, but I took into consideration the fact that a portion of the appropriation for rivers and harbors was expended this year.

There is no escaping this question, gentlemen, we must vote on it without covering it up by figures or estimates.

Mr. HENLEY. I do not intend to let any delusive statement go uncontradicted, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MORRISON. No, it is not best to delude ourselves.

Mr. HISCOCK. There is not to be any attempt on my part to cover anything up. In reaching this estimate of deficiency I pursued two courses. First, I took the appropriations that have been made by this Congress, or which are reported as pending in the House. I took those as the basis of the expenditure for the next fiscal year as I saw them reported by the committees of this House; and I do not increase them by the amounts which are likely to be added to them in the Senate. Taking them at the figures at which they have passed the House and where they have been concurred in in the Senate, the result is brought out which I stated yesterday, that the deficit for the next fiscal year will be $14,000,000.

Mr. MORRISON. Oh, no; you came out even yesterday.

Mr. HISCOCK. I beg the gentleman's pardon and correct him as to that.

Then I took up the expenditures of the current year and to those expenditures I added the items of increase of certain appropriations which had been made in this Congress in reference to matters for which no appropriations were made for this year or in which there was an excess of appropriation for next year over this year, and then by taking out the $10,000,000 to refund customs and wiping out the deficiency bill which is reported here it balanced. But if those customs duties are to be refunded and the deficiency bill passes here as it is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury or by the Committee on Appropriations that have submitted it, I repeat what I said yesterday, there is to be a deficit of from eleven to fourteen millions of dollars.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not understand this arrangement. The gentleman from New York tells us there is to be a deficit and then his side of the House votes solidly for every increase of appropriation.

Mr. HISCOCK. So far as that is concerned I will say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] that a very old trick is being tried to be perpetrated here. You have reduced a few salaries below the sum fixed by general statute, knowing that as a matter of course additions will be made to them in the Senate, and you have done it with the view of getting a little cheap credit for the House as being somewhat more economical than the Republican Senate, and so that you may talk about it on the stump.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York——

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] is not a party to that trick. I do not charge him with that. It is men of smaller type that are indulging in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRISON. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CABELL]. By agreement of the Committee of the Whole House a certain paragraph was allowed to be passed over with the understanding that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CABELL] should have a right to offer an amendment to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors, for fees and expenses of gaugers, for salaries of storekeepers, and for miscellaneous expenses, $2,050,000.

Mr. CABELL. I move to amend line 1071 by striking out "two million fifty thousand" and inserting "one million nine hundred thousand."

Mr. RANDALL. That is a reduction of $150,000. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I want an explanation as to why it should be adopted.

Mr. BLANCHARD. What is the reason for it?

Mr. CABELL. I will give a reason and a good one, and if the committee will hear me they will see, I think, that this amendment ought to be adopted without hesitation. The appropriations——

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, before we go to that, I desire to make the point of order on the third section of this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. We have passed that.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not care if you have passed it, there has been no amendment offered.

Mr. RANDALL. Too late.

Mr. HISCOCK. I insist that I am in time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks otherwise. The point of order is overruled. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CABELL] will proceed.

Mr. CABELL. The amount appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, was $2,100,000. The amount expended for that period was $1,963,527.41, leaving an unexpended balance of $136,472.59. Since that time the Commissioner of Internal Revenue reports that he has reduced the number of his officials 926. Those are officials that are paid under the clause of this bill which I am seeking to amend. Now, if the amount of $1,963,000 was sufficient to meet the expenses named of the Internal Revenue Bureau at that time, much more ought it to be sufficient now when the force has been reduced.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, by what order are we now proceeding?

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The matter has been already agreed to and directed by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Virginia will proceed.

Mr. CABELL. The amount appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, was $2,100,000. The Commissioner reports that the probable expenditures to the 1st of July next will be $1,849.98, leaving an unexpended balance of $251,000 from the appropriation of last year. Now, the Committee on Appropriations, by this bill, appropriates $2,050,000. We sent to the Commissioner and asked how much he had already expended and what would probably be his expenditures this fiscal year, and here is his reply, in substance:

From the appropriations for salaries and expenses of agents and subordinate officers there were expended up to March 31 $1,359,098. It is estimated that the expenses for the quarter ending June 30 (now nearly expired) will be $470,000, or together an aggregate sum of $1,849,098.

So it will be observed that the amount which I propose that we shall appropriate in this bill is $51,000 more than has been or will be expended this fiscal year for the same identical service. Now, why should we appropriate, and what does the Commissioner want with more money than we propose to appropriate by this amendment? Seeing that the number of officials has been cut down, is not $51,000 more than will be expended this fiscal year a sufficient amount to appropriate in this bill? We give a sufficient amount with considerable margin besides. Indeed, what do you want with any margin? Might we not with propriety reduce this appropriation $200,000? But instead of that, however, I ask only that you reduce the amount named in this bill by about $150,000; thus leaving the appropriation $1,900,000 instead of $2,050,000. That is the amendment I have proposed, and from the Commissioner's statement it is entirely sufficient, for he states what has been and what will be his expenditures during this year, and they do not come up, I say, to within $51,000 of the amount I propose.

Objection has been made, upon this bill and others, to the hazardous manner of appropriating money in bulk. Look at this appropriation to which I have referred and as it appears, and say if it is not the most objectionable paragraph in this bill. Mark the language:

For salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors, for fees and expenses of gaugers, for salaries of storekeepers, and for miscellaneous expenses, $2,050,000.

There you have four classes of officers only designated and appropriated for, and necessarily a large sum for "miscellaneous expenses." Do you not want your appropriations more definite in character and more specifically set out than you have them here? You are appropriating here in the dark as to a large sum of money for miscellaneous and other purposes, and the only guide you have to go by is the amount of the expenditure for last year. That amount is less by $51,000 than I propose by my amendment to appropriate in this bill, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. CABELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The reduction of force to which the gentleman refers was in the home office here in Washington, was it not?

Mr. CABELL. No, sir; here is the statement from the Commissioner's report of 1885, page 19: "Gaugers, 180; storekeepers and gaugers, 532; storekeepers, 214; total, 926." So that the reduction must apply to the whole force throughout the country.

In fact, I do not see why we could not make a greater reduction than I propose in view of the number of officers that have been cut off or dispensed with.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Is the gentleman's amendment in accordance with the estimate of the Department?

Mr. CABELL. Since the original estimates were submitted the Commissioner has ascertained what his expenses have been and what they will likely be to the end of the year, and as a result of his information we ought to cut down this appropriation so as to conform to the amount which will actually be required, taking the present year's expenditures as a basis.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1885 was $2,100,000. The expenditures for that year were $1,963,000, leaving an unexpended balance in round numbers of $136,000. This bill proposes an appropriation of $2,050,000, being $50,000 less than was appropriated for the current year. Now the gentleman from Virginia proposes, as I understand, another reduction of $100,000.

A MEMBER. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. CANNON. If I can have the attention of the gentleman from Virginia——

Mr. CABELL. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to say that as I understand from what he has stated as to the expenditures of the current year the amount he proposes to appropriate would be about equal to that expenditure. Am I correct as to that fact?

Mr. CABELL. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has stated in a letter addressed to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the day before yesterday, that the expenditure for the current year would be $1,849,098.

Mr. CANNON. If I understand correctly the gentleman's statement he proposes now an appropriation for the next year equal to the expenditure for the current year. Am I correct on that point?

Mr. CABELL. I propose an appropriation of $51,000 more.

Mr. CANNON. But $150,000 less than the appropriation this year?

Mr. CABELL. About that.

Mr. CANNON. Now I wish to state that possibly the appropriation proposed by the gentleman may be sufficient. I have no desire that there shall be appropriated one cent more than is required. But I call your attention, gentlemen on the other side of the House, to the fact that you are chargeable this year and the coming year for the collection of these revenues.

Mr. RANDALL. They are increasing now.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says they are increasing. I say you are chargeable with the collection of these revenues.

Mr. RANDALL. And we will collect them.

Mr. CANNON. All I want is that there shall be such an amount of money appropriated that in any event you may be able to collect the revenues honestly; and if you fail to do so, I do not want you to have the excuse of saying that you had not money sufficient. Having said this much, and the responsibility being thrown upon you, you may, so far as I am concerned, make this appropriation just what you please.

Mr. RANDALL. If we appropriate $51,000 more than the expenditure for the present year that certainly ought to be sufficient.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No estimate has been made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or the Secretary of the Treasury which indicates that these revenues can be collected properly for a less sum than has been estimated for. This proposition, so far as I have any knowledge, is not offered at the suggestion of any of the Treasury officials——

Mr. RANDALL. It is based upon the figures of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No, sir. The Secretary of the Treasury informed us that $2,100,000 would be required for this purpose. The Committee on Appropriations cut down that amount $50,000. Now, it is just as important to collect the revenues as to retrench expenditures. All I wish to do is to put into the hands of the Department such an appropriation as will enable it honestly and faithfully to collect the revenue.

If there is hostility against the internal-revenue law, the proper way for gentlemen to proceed against it is to repeal the law. I desire that every man shall bear his fair share of the burdens of the Government. We in Illinois are paying our internal-revenue assessments. I want other States to pay their proper proportion, and I know that if we appropriate an insufficient sum there will be difficulty in the collection of the revenue.

What are the facts? You can not accurately estimate the expenses of the next year by the amount expended in the past year. There may be during the coming year more frauds, more "moonshiners;" there may be unexpected difficulties in the collection of the internal revenue. Prudence demands that you place in the hands of the Treasury officials a fund which shall be sufficient to meet any emergency that may arise. I shall therefore resist this proposition.

Why, sir, the other day we passed a bill which will largely increase the expenditures of the Internal Revenue Bureau. I allude to the oleomargarine bill.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. That will never be a law.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yet after passing a bill which largely increases these expenditures you come in here and propose to cripple the Treasury Department in the collection of the revenues. I repeat, that while I desire to reduce expenditures I want the revenue properly collected. I therefore insist that we should appropriate the amount of the estimate.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I think it due to the House to say that this amendment is based upon information which came in subsequently to the submission of the regular estimates.

A MEMBER. On the day before yesterday.

Mr. RANDALL. I think there is no danger, if this amendment be adopted, that there will be any difficulty about the collection of the revenue. The officer at the head of the Internal Revenue Department ought to be able to collect the revenue for the coming year with $50,000 more than he has expended during the current year. But if by any possibility the appropriation proposed in the amendment should be insufficient, we shall be here in December to meet the emergency.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And provide a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not fair that in the present condition of our finances a large sum should be unnecessarily added to the aggregate appropriations in this bill. I therefore ask that this amendment may be adopted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. A single remark before the gentleman from Pennsylvania takes his seat. He says that information has come from the Department since the bill was prepared. I was a member of the subcommittee that prepared this bill; and I have not received a scintilla of evidence from the Department that there ought to be any change in this appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL (exhibiting a paper). Here is the letter.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What is the character of the information?

Mr. RANDALL. There it is; read it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understand that the only information furnished is a statement of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as to the expenditures of the present year. The letter does not give any new light as to how much may be required for the next year. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. RANDALL. I think we are quite safe in adopting the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CABELL, it was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. By inadvertence the compensation of the assistant treasurer at the city of Cincinnati was made $5,000 instead of $4,500, as it was intended to be. I ask by unanimous consent that that salary be made $4,500 instead of $5,000.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. CANNON. Under the head of the Third Auditor's Office, Treasury Department, I move to strike out "six" laborers and insert "seven."

Mr. RANDALL. That is the addition of one laborer, and as there has been a reduction of twenty-two officers in that bureau I do not know that I should object.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask by unanimous consent that the increase of compensation of charwomen in the various Departments and in all instances be raised from $180 to $240.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee has inserted that increase in one place, and as these charwomen receive the smallest salaries, of course if it goes in one place it should go in all the other places.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Then, as I understand it, there is no objection to the increase being made in all the Departments.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question on the amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. I am under obligation to ask for a separate vote on the increase of the subtreasurers in Boston, Chicago, San Francisco, and Saint Louis.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There are other amendments the gentleman having charge of the bill [Mr. HOLMAN] mentioned on which he would ask separate votes.

Mr. RANDALL. I am under obligation only to ask for separate votes on the amendments I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. If there are any other amendments gentlemen will indicate them.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am unable to do so at this time.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let us have separate votes on all the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised there are more than a hundred amendments to the bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will not insist, then, upon separate votes upon all of them.

Mr. FELTON. If there are separate votes demanded upon the amendments increasing compensation of the subtreasurers I do not see why we should not also have separate votes on all the other amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask only for separate votes on the four amendments I have indicated. Any gentleman can ask for a separate vote on any of these four amendments, but I should prefer, in order to save time, that the vote should be taken on all four at once, as they involve the same question.

Mr. FELTON. I withdraw the demand for separate votes on all the amendments.

Mr. BAYNE. I am willing so far as I am concerned the four amendments in reference to the subtreasurers should be voted on together.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question in reference to these four amendments together—that is, upon the amendments increasing the compensation of the subtreasurers at Boston, Chicago, Saint Louis, and San Francisco.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 84.

Mr. FELTON. No quorum.

Mr. BAYNE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. FELTON. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. LONG. I insist upon it.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. LONG and Mr. RANDALL.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 103.

So the four amendments were rejected.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, in reference to the increase of ten thousand at the New York subtreasury.

Mr. HEWITT. I suggest by unanimous consent that the language of my amendment be substituted for the language contained in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on the amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. It is.

The SPEAKER. Then the amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 1165, after the word "each:"

"For other clerks, messengers, and watchmen in addition to those herein provided for, as the exigencies of the public business may require, $10,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand the gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to modify that by making it $6,000.

Mr. FELTON. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing, of course, that the lesser amount shall be incorporated, and then take a vote upon that.

Mr. HEWITT. I can not consent to that. Ten thousand dollars is required to do the work of this office.

Mr. RANDALL. It is altogether disproportionate to the others.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 39, noes 76.

Mr. SCOTT. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. SCOTT and Mr. RANDALL were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 38, noes 127.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I demand a separate vote on the amendment inserting the Carson City mint appropriation.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Add to the section the following:

"Mint at Carson, Nev.: For salary of superintendent, $3,000; for assayer, melter and refiner, and coiner, at $2,500 each; assistant assayer, assistant melter and refiner, and assistant coiner, at $2,000 each; chief clerk, at $2,250; cashier, book-keeper, and weigh clerk, at 2,000 each; abstract clerk and register of deposits, $1,800 each; assayer's computation clerk, $1,200; in all, $29,550. For wages of workmen and adjusters, $60,000. For incidental and contingent expenses, $25,000.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 86, noes 8.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask a vote on the remaining amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 5886) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887; and

A bill (H. R. 6391) to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 5201) making an appropriation for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

REFERENCE OF A SENATE BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

CONTESTED ELECTION—PAGE VS. PIRCE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House testimony in the contested-election case of Page vs. Pirce; which was referred to the Committee on Elections, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. As there is an evening session fixed for the consideration of private bills to-night, and in view of the fact that we have had a long tug at this bill, I move that the recess be taken now. I do this at the instance of many gentlemen on both sides.

Mr. REAGAN. If no other appropriation bill is ready to be taken up I ask to take up the interstate-commerce bill.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania has moved that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar to which there is no objection, under the special order heretofore made.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I ask the gentleman to let us take up the Iowa forfeiture bill. It will not take twenty minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. It is entirely with the House to decide.

The question being taken on Mr. RANDALL'S motion, there were on a division—ayes 93, noes 19.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the Clerk called the House to order at 8 o'clock p. m., and directed the reading of the following letter from the Speaker:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 16, 1886.

SIR: Hon. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER is designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). The Clerk will report the special order under which the session of the House is held this evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Wednesday next the House will at 5 o'clock take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m., the evening session to be devoted to business on the Private Calendar to which there may be no objection, the session not to continue beyond 11 o'clock p. m.

CLAIMS.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I have reported from the Committee on Claims the bill (H. R. 1357), which passed the Senate with amendments. The Committee on Claims unanimously recommend non-concurrence in the Senate amendments, and that a committee of conference be asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. I ask that order may be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. WISE. I rise to make an inquiry. I understood the Private Calendar was to be called in regular order this evening?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rules require that the bills on the Calendar shall be called in regular order when the House is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I make this request for unanimous consent before the House goes into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the committee will be discharged from the consideration of the Senate amendment to the bill indicated, the amendments will be non-concurred in, and a committee of conference will be asked.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Let the bill be read.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows.

A bill (H. R. 1357) authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and determine certain claims.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Is that a general bill?

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. It is a private bill, which passed the House last session. It relates only to two private claims, those of Joseph C. Irwin & Co. and C. A. Perry & Co.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole was discharged from the further consideration of the Senate amendments to the bill, the amendments were non-concurred in, and it was ordered that a conference be asked.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House to consider bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar under the special order heretofore made. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4840) to confirm a certain private land claim in the Territory of New Mexico.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is understood that this and the next three bills on the Calendar, also relating to private land claims, shall be passed over informally. There is no desire to consider them at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection this bill and the three following bills, H. R. 218, H. R. 3216, and H. R. 3235 will be passed over informally.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2140) for the relief of the Columbia Bank, in Pennsylvania, reported adversely from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. FLEEGER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HIESTAND], who has charge of this bill, is not present. I ask that it be passed over informally.

There was no objection.

Mr. ELY. I presume that bills passed over in this way retain their places on the Calendar?

The CHAIRMAN. That will be the inevitable result.

WILLIAM B. ISAACS & CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the joint resolution (H. Res. 67) for the relief of William B. Isaacs & Co., reported by Mr. REID, of North Carolina, from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest, in order that we may have some uniformity of action, that the bills be first read and then a brief statement made or the report read before objections are called for.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that course will be taken.

Mr. WILLIS. I object.

Mr. BURROWS. We can not know what the subject is unless the bill is read.

Mr. WILLIS. If we are to have the Constitution of the United States read upon every bill we will never get through.

Mr. BURROWS. All I ask is that the bill be read, so that we may know what it is.

Mr. WILLIS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that this joint resolution be read subject to to objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the petition and claim of William B. Isaacs & Co. for certain assets claimed to belong to them, as successors in interest of certain banks of Virginia described therein, with the accompanying papers now on file in the House of Representatives, be referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication; that wherever papers or affidavits are made or executed by persons deceased not interested in the cause they shall be considered as evidence by the court and given such weight as they may deserve, but wherever the affidavits are of living persons the evidence shall be taken in the usual way, subject to cross-examination on behalf of the United States; that the court shall fully adjudicate upon the rights of the parties and the ownership of the property described in the petition, and render such judgment as to justice may obtain, upon finding the fact of ownership or right, either in the petitioners or in the United States, or any other persons, to said property. The said petitioners shall not be barred of relief in the said court by reason of any act of limitations; nor shall said petitioners be bound to make any oath or proof in said court except touching the right and justice of their claim. From any judgment rendered by the said court either party may, within ninety days from the rendition of such judgment, appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States in the manner provided by law in other cases of appeal from the Court of Claims.

The Committee on War Claims reported the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the petitions and claim of William B. Isaacs & Co. for certain assets claimed to belong to them, as successors in interest of certain banks of Virginia, described therein as having been taken by the Government of the United States in the month of August, 1865, with the accompanying papers now on file in the House of Representatives, being Miscellaneous Document No. 5, second session Forty-fifth Congress, be referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication; that wherever papers or affidavits are made or executed by persons deceased, not interested in the cause, they shall be considered as evidence by the court and given such weight as they may deserve, but wherever the affidavits are of living persons the evidence shall be taken in the usual way, subject to cross-examination on behalf of the United States; that the court shall fully adjudicate upon the rights of the parties and the ownership of the property described in the petitions, and, as matter of law, to whom it should be paid, and report said findings of fact and law to Congress for consideration. The said petitioners shall not be barred of relief in the said court by reason of any act of limitations."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. I should like to have a word of explanation about this bill, reserving the right to object. I understood this was simply a reference of this claim, under the general provisions of the Bowman act, to the Court of Claims for the ascertainment of the facts. But as I understood the reading of the amendment, it is referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

Mr. WISE. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report that portion.

The first portion of the amendment was again read.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is certainly an amendment required there. It should read that the claim is referred to the Court of Claims for judicial ascertainment of the facts, instead of "for adjudication."

Mr. WISE. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois——

The CHAIRMAN. That will be a question of amendment after the bill is taken up for consideration. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. GEDDES. Mr. Chairman, that was the amendment made by the committee, and it certainly was so reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. I shall object unless the gentleman agrees to the amendment I have indicated.

Mr. WISE. I have no objection to that, but I would like to state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that this merely provides for the submission of this case to the Court of Claims to ascertain the fact of ownership and report to this House. The bill does not undertake to appropriate any money, or to determine that this money, upon the adjudication of the court, shall be given to these claimants.

Mr. GEDDES. Let the amendment of the committee be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been reported in full.

Mr. SPRINGER. I shall not object to the consideration of the bill if, as I understand, the gentleman from Virginia consents to the amendment I propose.

Mr. WISE. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "adjudication" and substitute the words "judicial ascertainment of the facts."

Mr. WISE. I do not object to that amendment, for that is exactly the intendment of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "adjudication," in line 11 of the proposed amendment of the committee, and insert in lieu thereof the words "judicial ascertainment of the facts."

Mr. ROWELL. I move to add to that the words "including the question of the loyalty of the claimants."

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. SPRINGER as amended was then adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to lay this bill aside with the recommendation that it be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, would it not be well for us to know what the bill is?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been reported once, but by unanimous consent it may be reported again.

Mr. BURROWS. Let us have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] asks for the reading of the report. The Clerk will read it.

The report (by Mr. REID, of North Carolina) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred a resolution (H. Res. 67) for the relief of William H. Isaacs & Co., beg leave to report that the questions involved in this resolution were, by the action of the House in the Forty-fifth Congress, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and a favorable report was made thereon, but no action taken by the House. That in the Forty-sixth Congress like action was taken, and again a favorable report was made thereon. In the Forty-seventh Congress it was referred to the Committee on War Claims, who made a favorable report thereon, but in neither case did the resolution have action by the House.

The facts in this case have been so often and so fully reported that your committee have adopted in the main the report from the Judiciary Committee of the Forty-fifth Congress, as setting forth accurately the facts involved.

That it appears from the papers referred with said petition that on the evacuation of Richmond, on the 2d of April, 1865, the Bank of Virginia and the Farmers' Bank of Virginia withdrew from their said banks about $450,000 in gold and silver coin and bullion, principally, however, in gold coin, and proceeded with said treasure, under the care of certain officers of said banks, to Washington, in the State of Georgia; that on the 24th day of May, 1865, the said officers of said banks, together with said treasure, set out with a wagon-train from Washington, Ga., for Richmond, having the proper permit and safe-conduct for so doing, issued by General M. B. Patrick, provost-marshal-general; that some time during the night of the 24th of May, 1865, being encamped near the Savannah River, about 18 miles from Washington, Ga., they were attacked by an armed cavalry force and their surrender demanded. They claimed the protection guaranteed them under the safe-conduct or pass of General Patrick, which was disregarded, and, under threat of death, they were obliged to submit to being pillaged. These robbers succeeded in carrying away about $250,000 in gold and silver coin and bullion of the said $450,000. The following day that portion of the treasure train left intact proceeded on its way to Richmond, and finally arrived there.

The next day following the robbery the bank officers remaining behind recovered about $110,000 of the treasure of the $250,000 of which they had been pillaged the previous night, and carried the same to Washington, Ga., and placed it on deposit with the cashier of the Bank of Washington, where it remained under the care and custody of the said officers of said Richmond banks until the latter part of July, 1865, at which time, having procured a pass and safe-conduct from General Steedman, in command of that district, with headquarters at Augusta, Ga., said officers proceeded with said $110,000 from Washington to Augusta. That about the 1st of August said bank officers arrived in Augusta with said $110,000 and placed it on deposit in one of the Augusta banks, where it remained under the control and within the possession of said officers of said Richmond banks until the latter part of August, 1865, at which time General Steedman, in obedience to instructions from the authorities at Washington, D. C., requiring the delivery of said $110,000 to a United States Treasury agent, who had been sent to Augusta, Ga., took possession thereof and delivered it to said Treasury agent, who thereupon transported the same to Washington, D. C., and placed it in the United States Treasury.

That soon thereafter the officers of said Richmond banks proceeded to Washington, D. C., and presented their petition in writing to the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury, setting forth that said treasure was the private property of said banks, and that they were entitled to have the same returned to them. That after a full investigation of all the facts in connection with the matter the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney-General decided that said treasure was the private property of the said banks, and that they were legally entitled to have the same turned over to them; and the necessary directions were given therefor. That, notwithstanding this decision, subsequently a joint resolution was introduced in the House of Representatives on the 22d of March, 1867, providing for the covering of said gold and silver coin and bullion into the Treasury of the United States, which said resolution passed the House on the day on which it was introduced, and passed the Senate the following day.

From that day to the present the owners of said treasure have been endeavoring to secure the return of said treasure to its legal owners.

That in June, 1871, under and by virtue of decrees made by the circuit court of the United States at Richmond, the assets of said banks were sold for the benefit of the creditors of said banks. That among the assets so sold was the claim of said banks for said $110,000 of gold and silver coin and bullion. That at said sale William B. Isaacs & Co. became the purchasers, for the benefit of themselves and others as creditors of said banks. That by virtue of said sale said William B. Isaacs & Co. have become the successors in interest of said banks in and to said treasure.

The question for determination is, was said treasure, at the time it was so taken possession of by the United States at Augusta, the private property of said banks? If it was, then your committee agree that the said banks or their legal representatives are justly entitled to receive from the United States the value thereof. In the judgment of your committee it is deemed the better course to refer the question of ownership of said treasure for determination to the Court of Claims.

Your committee have agreed to the accompanying bill, which provides for a reference of this case to the Court of Claims for its investigation.

Upon the case thus stated there would seem to be little or no doubt that the money so taken should be paid over to the petitioners, Messrs. Isaacs & Co. But there must have been evidently another side to this case, which your committee have no means of investigating.

The story of the petitioners, as above recited, is supported very fully by ex parte affidavits and some documentary evidence, which, if they state all the facts, would compel the judgment of the committee. Yet your committee do not fail to see that there must have been some other side to this story to have required or induced the action of Congress; some representations must have been made to Congress that should have induced both branches to have taken the very prompt action which they did in this case, and the President of the United States to approve the bill covering this money into the Treasury of the United States. That side of the case has not been presented to your committee, and if it were we have no proper and adequate means of investigating it, or the truth of the very clear prima facie case made by the petitioners. If the latter case should be fully sustained, upon thorough and impartial investigation, then it seems clear to your committee that the petitioners would be entitled to relief. This seems, therefore, to be one of that class of claims which should be investigated by a judicial court, with a view that the rights of both the United States and the petitioners should be ascertained and determined upon by evidence taken under all the safeguards that the law requires in the investigation of rights by the courts.

Therefore your committee recommend the passage of the joint resolution as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying this bill aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent of the House to have a reconsideration of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] with reference to loyalty. I think that if the House will allow me to make a statement they will see that that amendment is destructive of the whole bill, and that with the amendment retained there would be no use in passing the bill. Further, I think the House will agree with me that it is unjust to pass the bill with that amendment.

The only question involved in the case is as to whether these parties, William B. Isaacs & Co., as the successors of the Virginia banks, are the owners of certain moneys which were taken out of their possession on the 23d day of August, 1865, not captured, not abandoned, but taken from them at a time when there was not in the United States one armed confederate soldier, taken from them after this money in their possession had been deposited in a bank at Augusta, Ga., under the safe-conduct of an officer of the United States, General Patrick, with the approval of General Steedman and General Terry. After it was taken from them, investigation was made by direction of the then President of the United States, the Government being represented by three of the ablest lawyers at that time in the District of Columbia; the question as to whether the property belonged to these banks was fully investigated, and after thorough investigation it was determined that it did belong to them.

Mr. ROWELL. Will the gentleman permit me a suggestion?

Mr. WISE. Certainly.

Mr. ROWELL. This bill proposes to refer this case to the Court of Claims for the ascertainment of all the facts, and requires the court to report to Congress their conclusions of fact and of law.

Mr. WISE. Certainly.

Mr. ROWELL. No money can be paid under this bill until further action by Congress.

Mr. WISE. I understand that.

Mr. ROWELL. Then it will not do any harm to have the character and standing of these parties certified to Congress by the court?

Mr. WISE. But, my dear sir, the question of loyalty does not come in here at all. The simple question is whether this property belonged to them. There was as much right to take my money——

Mr. ROWELL. If the case is as the gentleman states, will not Congress find that way after we get the facts?

Mr. WISE. But the amendment of my friend, as the House will see, would deny to these claimants the right to go into court to prove their ownership of this property if they had taken part in the rebellion.

Mr. ROWELL. That would be the case under the Bowman act, but not under this bill.

Mr. WISE. But by this amendment you propose to say that they shall not go into court unless they establish their loyalty.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. WISE. What was the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. ROWELL. My amendment provides that the court should report to Congress on that question, with the other facts in the case.

Mr. WISE. Then I have no objection whatever to the amendment of my friend. I misunderstood its purport.

The question being taken, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask that gentlemen who desire to reach particular bills be allowed to call them up out of the regular order.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I ask unanimous consent that this method of procedure be adopted.

Mr. BUCHANAN. In view of past experience I shall have to object. I will not object to a series of unanimous consents; but I object to that being made the standing order for the evening.

J. A. WILSON.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration the bill (S. 16) for the relief of J. A. Wilson, administrator de bonis non of the estate of Gregory Jarratt, deceased. This bill is on page 37 of the Calendar. It is for the payment of a small claim, which has been passed repeatedly by first one and then the other branch of Congress, but which has never passed both Houses during the same Congress.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to J. A. Wilson, administrator de bonis non of the estate of Gregory Jarratt, deceased, late of Hardeman County, Tennessee, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,478, in full compensation for supplies furnished to the Union Army by the said Gregory Jarratt, deceased, in said county, in 1862 and 1863.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. ROWELL. If my colleague will permit, I think I can state the facts in this case more briefly than they are stated in the report, as I had occasion once to examine the claim. This case is here because of a little accident which happened in connection with it in the Quartermaster-General's Office.

Gregory Jarratt, for whose property in the form of supplies taken by the Union Army this bill proposes to make compensation, was at the time an old pensioner and a loyal man, but when the Quartermaster-General's Department wrote down to Tennessee to a very prominent loyal man there inquiring in regard to Mr. Jarratt, the reply was sent back that he was a disloyal man. This statement was founded on a mistake, by which Gregory Jarratt was confounded with another man of similar name. From that time the Quartermaster-General refused to consider the case. Payment ought to have been made long ago for the supplies taken from this loyal man; and payment would have been made in the Quartermaster's Department but for the mistake of Colonel Hurst in confounding Gregory Jarratt with another person bearing a similar name.

Mr. SPRINGER. Did my colleague [Mr. ROWELL] examine the facts?

Mr. ROWELL. I did examine the whole case very thoroughly and closely in the last Congress.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I am satisfied that the claim is a proper one.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Allow me to add that, as a member of the Committee on War Claims, I made the report upon this case at the present session, and can confirm the statement of facts as made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL].

The question being taken, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

HENRY S. COHN.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 917) for the relief of Henry S. Cohn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted &c., That the Paymaster-General of the Army be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Henry S. Cohn, late of Company G, One hundred and sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, the full pay and emoluments of a second lieutenant of infantry from the 15th of February, 1863, to the 22d of May, 1863, deducting therefrom all pay received by him from the Goverment as first sergeant for that period.

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill, I believe, involves the payment of only $130.

Mr. ROBERTSON. That is all. The bill is all right.

The question being taken, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARTIN L. BUNDY.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent, for the first time in my life I believe, to put a bill on its passage. It is not one that will cost the Government a penny. It is the bill (S. 365) for the relief of Martin L. Bundy.

A MEMBER. On what page of the Calendar is it?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I believe it is not on the Calendar, having been reported only yesterday. The report from the Committee on War Claims was unanimous; and if the Committee of the Whole will indulge me just two minutes for an explanation I will withdraw my application for the passage of the bill should there be any objection to it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman say the bill is not before the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I say it is not on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that the bill is on the Calendar.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in the settlement of the accounts of Martin L. Bundy, late a paymaster in the United States Army, the proper accounting officers shall allow the sum of $719.47, being for the forage of two horses, to which he was entitled, and which was not drawn by him, from the 17th day of July, 1862, to the 15th day of April, 1865.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I can state this case in a few minutes. Maj. Martin L. Bundy was a volunteer paymaster in the United States Army, and distributed as much money perhaps during the four years of his service as any man who was engaged in that department.

At the end of his term he made a settlement with the department. He received a receipt in full. Seven or eight years afterward it was ascertained, or at least claimed, that he had received duplicate credit for one of the vouchers, amounting to $552. I went to the Treasury Department to see if under the circumstances they would not remit it, Major Bundy in the mean time having become involved pecuniarily. They said it would not be possible to do that. On examination it was ascertained he was entitled to commutation of forage under the law for about forty-four months, amounting to $728, and on the suggestion of the Treasury Department a bill was introduced simply to allow him to recoup the claim for forage against the claim of the Government which had been made. And while the sum of $200 is due to Major Bundy under this bill, he will be allowed simply to extinguish this claim of $552.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am satisfied with the gentleman's explanation.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

WELLS C. M'COOL.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I call for the regular order of business.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for, and the Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3930) for the relief of Wells C. McCool.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. Read the bill.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask by unanimous consent bills be considered in their regular order on the Calendar, and that unless some gentleman asks for the consideration of a bill it be informally passed over.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Does the gentleman mean that the bill shall be passed? [Cries of "No!" "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for, and the Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. BAYNE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill, as the regular order is called for.

Mr. BAYNE. I think, perhaps, my proposition was not understood.

The CHAIRMAN. It was submitted by the Chair, and the regular order was called for.

Mr. BAYNE. It was not understood.

The CHAIRMAN. That was not the fault of the Chair.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas on the 1st day of December, A. D. 1862, Wells C. McCool, formerly of Guthrie County, State of Iowa, and now of the city of Salem, in the State of Nebraska, was regularly mustered into the service of the United States as first lieutenant of Company A, Twenty-ninth Iowa Infantry Volunteers; and

Whereas on the 25th day of February, A. D. 1863, he was senteneed by a court-martial to be dismissed from the service of the United States, with the loss of all pay and allowances; and

Whereas he has never received any portion of his pay and allowances as such lieutenant; and

Whereas the said sentence of said court-martial was not approved or promulgated until about April 30, 1863; and

Whereas said McCool was therefore kept in the service until that time; and

Whereas on the 12th day of September, A. D. 1863, the said Wells C. McCool re-enlisted in said Company I, Twenty-ninth Iowa Infantry Volunteers, as a private soldier, and served faithfully as such until the close of the term of service of his said company, and was mustered out with his company and regiment on the 10th day of August, A. D. 1865; and

Whereas the slight act of insubordination which caused his dismissal was his only unsoldierly act during his entire term of service; and

Whereas his disabilities on account of said dismissal were removed by the President of the United States on the 22d day of August, 1867; and

Whereas he was afterward commissioned by the governor of Iowa as an officer in the State troops of said State, and faithfully served as such until his removal from the State: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $542.50, the amount of the pay and allowances of Wells C. McCool as first lieutenant of Company I, Twenty-ninth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, from December 1, A. D. 1862, to April 30, 1863, to be paid by the proper officers of the United States to the said Wells C. McCool, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assignees: Provided, That the same be accepted as in full of all claims against the United States for the military services of said Wells C. McCool down to the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. BAYNE. I now ask by unanimous consent that the Calendar be called in regular order, and that each bill as it is reached be passed over informally, not to lose its place on the Calendar unless some gentleman rises and asks for its consideration.

Mr. KLEINER. This is the regular order.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, it is in the regular order upon the Calendar; but if its consideration is not asked for, under my proposition it will be passed over informally.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition that the Calendar shall be called in regular order, and unless the consideration of a bill shall be asked for when it is reached it shall be passed over informally? Is there objection to that proposition?

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to ask this question: Has a request been submitted to-night that members present shall be permitted to call up bills on the Calendar whenever recognized by the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. That has been submitted and objected to.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will that bring up bills to which there is objection?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not.

Mr. TAULBEE. I hope consent, then, will be given.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask the gentleman who submitted the report in this case whether this pay is for any part of the time when he was absent from his regiment on leave?

Mr. KLEINER. The report shows the facts.

Mr. LYMAN. This man was in my regiment and was not absent for a day.

Mr. KLEINER. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the joint resolution (H. Res. 82) for the relief of Luther F. Worder.

Mr. HEARD. I ask that this joint resolution be considered.

The joint resolution was read at length.

Mr. FELTON. I object to its consideration.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the gentleman state briefly the ground of his objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has the right to object without specifying any ground under the order for this evening's session.

The joint resolution is not before the House, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1773) for the relief of James J. Johnston.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I ask unanimous consent that that bill lie over, and that the House take up the bill H. R. No. 4594, which is also a patent case——

Several Members demanded the regular order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I shall object to any bills extending patents at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from New Jersey could only be granted by unanimous consent, and the regular order is demanded.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 200) for the relief of Henrietta H. Cole.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the joint resolution H. Res. 60, reported adversely from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to its consideration.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think, possibly, if the committee understood the adverse report this joint resolution might be passed.

The CHAIRMAN. There is objection to its consideration.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill H. R. 4235, reported adversely from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to the consideration of that bill.

SILAS QUACKENBUSH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 528) for the relief of Silas Quackenbush.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I ask that this bill be considered now.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Silas Quackenbush, of Tipton County, in the State of Indiana, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $850, for money paid by said Quackenbush for a substitute during the late war for the Union.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the report be read.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I am satisfied that I can submit a statement to the committee which will take less time than the reading of the report.

Silas Quackenbush is a resident of Tipton County, Indiana. In November, 1864, he was drafted into the military service of the United States and went in response to that draft. He did not go into the Army, but went to Indianapolis and procured a substitute and paid him $850. The substitute was mustered into the naval service and served throughout the war. After that, and under the same draft, through some mistake or fraud on the part of the mustering officers, Quackenbush was drafted into the Army, and though he had paid the substitute who was still serving, he was forced to go into the Army, and served until February, 1864.

At that time he was honorably discharged. He protested against being mustered into the service and went not voluntarily, his substitute being still there. The substitute served throughout the war, and the man who had sent him, Mr. Quackenbush, was compelled also to go.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. What is the amount of the claim?

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Eight hundred and fifty dollars.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Is the report unanimous?

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Yes, sir.

The bill was laid aide to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill (H. R. 4235) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare medals of honor to be bestowed upon certain Pennsylvania volunteer soldiers of the late war. This was passed over when my attention was momentarily drawn away, and I did not hear the statement of the Chair when objection was called for. I hope unanimous consent will be given to return to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the bill was reported and was objected to.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I think my colleague is entitled to consideration in this matter.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think this privilege should be accorded to the gentleman under the circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois himself objected.

Mr. SPRINGER. I objected because it was adversely reported, and I did not hear any gentleman request to take it up.

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be done by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 527) for the relief of William Pike.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. That bill and the succeeding one are identically the same with the claim just passed. The same facts are embodied in these two bills and the one a little lower down on the Calendar. These men were all from the same county and there were four of them. If it is just and equitable to pass the case which has just been passed, it is proper to pass this and the next one to it.

Mr. SOWDEN. I object to the present consideration of this bill.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 529) for the relief of George W. Baldwin and others.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I ask consideration of this bill. The facts are just the same as in the last bill passed.

Mr. SOWDEN. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the committee will evidently be subjected to a system of retaliation I ask unanimous consent that we return to the bill (H. R. 4235), which was objected to.

Mr. HEARD. I object. If we are to be bulldozed by one member in disregard of our rights, let us know the fact and adjourn.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2033) granting the franking privilege to Julia D. Grant.

Mr. SOWDEN. I object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Allow me to make a statement. I want to appeal to my friend from Pennsylvania——

Mr. PRICE. Regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania is going to object to all of these bills, I move that the committee rise.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 20, noes 54.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I rise to make a request for unanimous consent. It is perfectly obvious we will have to abandon this situation unless we can reach harmony among our members. It is known to many of us that the bill which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] desired to call up was passed over because the gentleman did not hear when the Clerk read the title. I ask unanimous consent that we return to that bill.

Mr. FELTON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read the title of the next bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2053) for the relief of Rachael J. Floyd.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the consideration of that bill.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who asks for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2053.

Mr. DUNHAM. I desire to ask a question for information. What has become of the bill which proposed to grant the franking privilege to Mrs. Grant?

The CHAIRMAN. That was objected to.

Mr. DUNHAM. I desire to have it stated to the House who the gentleman was that made that objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has no right now to have that stated. The Clerk will report the bill the consideration of which is called for by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SOWDEN. I object.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement.

There was no objection.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It is always well to do as we would like to be done by. I do not think we should proceed further until the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] is allowed to make a statement. I think he ought to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania making a statement?

There was no objection.

Mr. SOWDEN. I did not come here to-night with the purpose of interfering with the transaction of the public business for which the House has convened. But when I found that the committee was engaged in the consideration of a bill four bills ahead of the bill (H. R. 4235), to which my colleague [Mr. ERMENTROUT] and myself were preparing an amendment and through the preparation of which we failed to hear the calling of the bill when it was passed over, we first detected this when House bill 528 was being considered; and after this bill had been disposed of I immediately arose with the view of calling the committee's attention to the manner in which House bill 4235 had been passed without our observing it when an objection was made and the regular order demanded, and we thus denied even the courtesy of an explanation. This we deemed an injustice and our excuse for objecting to the consideration of these bills.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. What the gentleman has just stated is strictly correct.

Mr. SOWDEN. Now, I say this bill is a meritorious one, and is worthy of consideration; and the fact of my not having heard the announcement that it had been reached ought not to militate against those interested in the passage of this legislation. Therefore it was I asked unanimous consent to call it up for consideration at this time.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Ask it now.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent, in view of the statement that has just been made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN], that we return to that point in the Calendar, to the bill (H. R. 4235), and then proceed as we have been doing in order from that point.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks that the committee return to the point indicated, to the bill designated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and proceed from that point. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MEDALS FOR PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

The bill (H. R. 4235) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare medals of honor to be bestowed upon certain Pennsylvania volunteer soldiers of the late war was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to cause to be prepared a medal of honor, with suitable devices, to be bestowed upon each of the surviving soldiers of the Logan Guards, of Lewistown, Pa.; Allen Infantry, of Allentown, Pa.; Washington Artillery, of Pottsville, Pa.; National Light Infantry, of Pottsville, Pa.; and the Ringgold Light Artillery, of Reading, Pa., they having been the first to respond to the President's call for troops of date April 15, 1861, having been mustered in at Harrisburg, Pa., on April 18, 1861, and reported for duty at Washington on the same day.

Mr. SPRINGER. I reserve the right to object till the report has been read.

Mr. SOWDEN. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I suggest that the reading of the report is not necessary. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] called for the reading of the report, reserving the right to object.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report from the Committee on Military Affairs (by Mr. NEGLEY), as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred House bill 4235 H. Res. 60, and petition of Lieutenant-Colonel Muzzy and others, beg leave to submit the following report:

Each of the foregoing references contains an eloquent appeal to Congress to bestow, in a fitting manner, a badge of personal distinction on the survivors of the Logan Guards, Allen Infantry, Washington Artillery, National Light Infantry, and the Ringgold Light Artillery, volunteer organizations of Pennsylvania, who marched in advance of the other troops to the defense of the capital in April, 1861. A like honor is requested by the survivors of the "forlorn hope," formed by General Banks preparatory to the storming of Port Hudson, La., in June, 1863.

Mr. ROWELL. I think the Clerk is not reading the right report. This refers to the joint resolution (H. Res. 60) which has been passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that the same report applies both to the bill and the joint resolution.

The Clerk continued the reading, as follows:

That it would be an eminently just expression of patriotism and profound wisdom for the Government, which owes its existence to the unfaltering loyalty, patriotic zeal, and high moral courage of those who first entered the path of duty in defense of the laws and to preserve the Union in that eventful hour when the nation first realized its peril and its duty no one will deny; still less will any true friend of liberty or lover of his race question the justice or propriety of the Government rewarding, in a spirit of immeasurable gratitude, the services of the men who knew no sacrifice too great to achieve success for our arms.

The inquiry under consideration is whether at the present time the distinction sought for can be granted with impartial discrimination, and whether a votive gift of this character from a great nation would do deserved honor to the dead as well as to the living, according to the sphere of action of each individual, not only in the commands enumerated, but all others. We fear not. However sacred the duty, it does not lie within the scope of the law, or that of sweet persuasion, to summon to an earthly recompense the men who felt the sharp agony of death on the battlefield, or who perished in pitiless despair from the savagery of the prison-pen, or who felt the crimson current of life slowly ebbing away without a soothing hand to bind their wounds or moisten their feverish lips with a drop of water. Neither can we deal with the individuality of the many who disappeared on the march, beneath swift waters, hidden by the smoke of the skirmish line, and, beyond the simple word "missing," have passed into the realm of the unknown.

A long sweep of years have disappeared in the abyss of time since that golden-hued morning when the Angel of Peace stood in the dawn of the new era and showered her benign blessings upon those who lost and those who won.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with. We have got the facts.

A MEMBER. This is now the rhetoric.

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of the report was called for, the right to object being reserved.

Mr. SPRINGER. My only object in calling for the reading of the report was to learn whether the Military Committee had good reason for reporting adversely.

Mr. SOWDEN. It is a misnomer to call this an adverse report, as the reading of it will show.

Mr. ROWELL. I am told it was reported back with an adverse recommendation unanimously.

Mr. MATSON. I ask if the fact that there was an adverse report is not in the nature of an objection?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I understand there is a dispute whether the report was adverse or not in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion an adverse report is not per se an objection in contemplation of the order made.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It is certainly an adverse report against the granting of the gold medals.

The Clerk continued the reading of the report:

The battle-riven standards, which were hallowed by the love and devotion of the old soldiers, have been enwrapped with tender care and folded away among the nation's heir-looms; but why should any member of the old guard entertain the fear of being forgotten? The aims, the statesmanship, and martial dignity of a nation are nothing more than a truthful reflection of the lives and meritorious deeds of the men who stood in the ranks of its defenders. The historian who gleans after the tempest of battle and who lays his sheaves of homage on the altar of truth is the only faithful artificer of personnel of the contending armies. The only inheritance a brave soldier can translate into immortality is the record of his services in defense of truth, liberty, and humanity. Every life given up in obedience to the commands of the state is another golden thread added to the warp destiny is busily weaving for the nation. The irresistible and ever-expanding influences of a higher civilization and a broader Christianity sown in the conscience of the American people by the war will sanctify and glorify the services of the men who solved by the stern arbitrament of the sword whether a popular government had the inherent power to resist and survive the greatest civil war since the mediæval ages. The memory of the chivalrous sons of every period live in deeds and not in testimonials. The brief inscription, "Stranger, go tell the Lacedæmonians that we lie here obedient to their commands," has remained like a perennial monument on the plains of history, when all the other trophies set up to honor Leonidas and his forlorn hope have been washed away by the flood of centuries.

Mr. GLOVER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. How much longer is that report?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report, as follows:

In after years, when the pride of race, love of country, and the convictions which will flower and fruit on our tree of knowledge shall subdue the demons of ignorance and prejudice, each generation will thank the Giver of all Good that the Union was saved and the "government of the people" was preserved for the people. In that day the names appended to the petitions before us and those of their comrades will appear in letters of living light.

In conclusion, we respectfully recommend that the bills and petitions herein referred to be laid on the table, and that this, the unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs, be spread on the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MOFFATT (in his seat). I object.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman did not rise in his place and object.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MOFFATT (still in his seat). Yes, sir.

Mr. STEELE. I insist upon the point of order that no gentleman has risen in his place and objected.

Mr. MOFFATT. Mr. Chairman, if it is understood that an immediate vote can be taken on this bill I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. There will be no trouble about that. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the objection withdrawn?

Mr. MOFFATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I have offered an amendment to the bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Let it be reported. I do not want to object to the consideration of this bill, but this report is made——

A MEMBER. Let us hear the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I wish to state, Mr. Chairman, that this report is made by Mr. NEGLEY, a member from the State that is to be benefited. I think it but proper that he should be present when this report is considered, and upon that ground I object.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. He might stay away forever.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYNE. The chairman of the Committee of the Whole had stated the question to the committee, no objection was made, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERMENTROUT] offered an amendment. Pending that amendment this objection was made, and my point is that it was made too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] was on his feet awaiting recognition to object.

Mr. RANDALL. No; it was another gentleman behind him.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERMENTROUT] had been recognized by the Chair to offer an amendment.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Yes; and I had sent it to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had not stated the proposition to the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. I understood the Chair to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] was on his feet seeking recognition.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. The Chair was about putting the question on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] to be on his feet seeking recognition to object.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, again rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his objection?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. If these gentlemen will sit down and behave themselves, I will withdraw the objection. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his objection?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Whenever they keep quiet I will.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not withdraw his objection. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I withdraw the objection, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The objection is withdrawn. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. ERMENTROUT.

The Clerk read as follows:

And that the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury for the foregoing purpose.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Chairman, I would not take up a moment of the time of this committee if I supposed that this proposition would be voted down, but as there is some danger that it may be voted the other way, I desire to make a very brief statement. I think that the proposition to grant medals to our volunteer soldiers is rather a dangerous one; I think it is opening a wide door; but if we do it at all, let us at least crown those soldiers who are best entitled to such recognition. The parties who will be decorated according to this proposition are men who never made an attack upon Port Hudson.

Mr. SOWDEN. One word, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WEBER. I understood that this report was precisely the same as the report on the bill preceding it.

Mr. SOWDEN. No, sir. The gentleman is mistaken. There is but one report on both this bill and the joint resolution covering the men who had made the attack upon Port Hudson, and which fact leads to this confusion——

A MEMBER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WEBER] is "off."

Mr. WEBER. I may be "off," but if so it is because the Clerk was "off" in the statement made from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. STEELE. I move that the report of the committee be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WEBER] is on the floor.

Mr. WEBER. If gentlemen will allow me to proceed a moment perhaps this matter can be straightened out without difficulty. The Calendar does not specify whether these were Port Hudson volunteers or not; but I understood the Clerk to say that this report was precisely the same as in the preceding case. If that be so, then my remarks are pertinent; if not, of course I have nothing further to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the caption of the report, which shows to what it relates.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Before any further action is taken on this bill I desire to know who was the author of the adverse report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not informed.

Several MEMBERS. General NEGLEY.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the caption of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred House bill 4235, H. Res. 60, and petition of Lieutenant-Colonel Muzzy and others, beg leave to submit the following report.

Mr. WEBER. Then I submit that I am in order in my remarks; and I make the assertion that the last assault on Port Hudson was June 14.

Mr. SOWDEN. Will the gentleman hear me a moment?

Mr. WEBER. If the gentleman can give me any information I shall listen to him very gladly.

Mr. SOWDEN. The purpose of this bill is to cover the five original companies from Pennsylvania, known as the "First Defenders." It seems that the first proclamation of President Lincoln calling for seventy-five thousand troops was issued on the 15th of April, 1861. On the afternoon of the same day the Secretary of War telegraphed to the governor of Pennsylvania that a call had been made on Pennsylvania for sixteen regiments.

Two regiments were wanted within three days; a sudden dash upon the capital was strongly threatened; Washington was entirely unprotected and at the mercy of the assailants. Earnest appeals were made by the governor of Pennsylvania for men, and the first five companies to respond to the governor's call were the companies named in the bill before the committee. These five companies, numbering four hundred and eighty-two men, arrived at Harrisburg on the 17th of April, and on the morning of the 18th of April they were mustered into the United States service by Captain Simmons, of the United States Army, and departed for Washington at 9 a. m. on the same day, arriving at Baltimore at 1 p. m.

These troops were forced to march some 2 miles through that city, from Bolton to Camden Station. They were attacked by the mob as they passed through the streets of that city, and orders were given to the men to preserve their tempers and to make no reply to anything that should be said to them. Every insult that could be heaped upon them was offered, but no word of reply was elicited, the officers and men marching steadily on toward Camden Station.

As these men boarded the train at the station the angry mob hurled a shower of bricks, clubs, and stones into their disorganized ranks, fortunately inflicting but slight injuries. At 7 o'clock p. m. of the 18th of April these five companies, the head of the grand column of two millions of men who afterwards marched in their wake, arrived in Washington.

Maj. Irwin McDowell assumed command and ordered them to quarters in the Capitol. These soldiers were the first volunteers that arrived at the capital in response to President Lincoln's first call for troops, and for this distinction the slight recognition provided for in the bill under consideration is sought. They ask for no pension, nor did they receive any bounty, but they do ask this Congress to give them a medal of some kind in recognition of the fact that they were the first soldiers who arrived at the capital.

Mr. ROWELL. There was not in the Northern States a single village where the telegraph reached that did not enlist soldiers on the same day. Here is a soldier, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN], who enlisted on that day. I enlisted twenty soldiers on the same day.

Mr. WEBER. My objection generally, as I stated, is to granting medals at all. My special objection was with reference to the "forlorn hope" storming party at Port Hudson, La. As it seems this bill does not include the soldiers named in the preceding bill, I have nothing further to say on that particular point. I now yield my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON].

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, five minutes ago I asked the gentleman to yield to me, because at that time I apprehended there was some danger this bill might be reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole, but since ascertaining the sentiment on both sides of the House I think there is no danger of that. The proposition to decorate men who enlisted for three months and to leave without decoration men who fought clear through the war is so absurd on its face that I have no apprehension it will meet the favor of this House.

Mr. BRUMM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understand that the adverse report of the committee in this case assumes to be a unanimous report. I am told by one member of the committee, a gentleman from Pennsylvania, that he never saw this report and never consented to it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. SOWDEN. I desire to be heard, Mr. Chairman, in response to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON]. I say that this Congress has been invidious in conferring distinctions upon certain soldiers. It has made a distinction in granting special pensions to some of the widows of general officers. It has made discriminations in favor of many general officers of the Army and Navy. Now, here we have four hundred and eighty-two private soldiers who admittedly were the first to arrive at this capital at the outbreak of the late war—more than one-half of whom are dead now.

They served their term honorably. They received no pay while in the service. It was only after they had returned home some time that they were paid.

The majority of these three-months' men, who first responded to the call of the President, led other companies into the war afterwards. The majority of them re-enlisted and returned to fight for the flag of their country and the preservation of the Union.

It is folly for the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] to say they were only in the service three months and why should they receive this distinctive recognition from the hands of Congress.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SOWDEN. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I ask the gentleman, then, whether the troops of the District of Columbia had not been mustered in some time before that; and whether they had not been guarding public property when these troops from Pennsylvania got here?

Mr. SOWDEN. No, sir; and that fact is apparent when we recollect that the Washington troops celebrated a different day from the 18th of April as the anniversary of their enlistment. These troops known as the first defenders who came from the State of Pennsylvania were the first men to respond to the call of the President, and were the first men who arrived at the capital. Are these brave soldiers to be laughed at by some of these would-be soldiers' friends? These brave men ask for very little at the hands of the Government which they helped to save, and they ought to have the medals provided for in this bill.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Let me ask the gentleman whether none of these soldiers were severely injured while passing through Baltimore?

Mr. SOWDEN. Some of them were slightly injured. Now, sir, when we refer to this report unfortunately the gentleman who wrote it coupled with these men who came first to the capital other men who are alleged to have stormed and carried Port Hudson, with which they had nothing to do.

Let me call attention to what is stated in this report of these brave men from Pennsylvania:

That it would be an eminently just expression of patriotism and profound wisdom for the Government, which owes its existence to the unfaltering loyalty, patriotic zeal, and high moral courage of those who first entered the path of duty in defense of the laws and to preserve the Union in that eventful hour when the nation first realized its peril and its duty no one will deny; still less will any true friend of liberty or lover of his race question the justice or propriety of the Government rewarding, in a spirit of immeasurable gratitude, the services of the men who knew no sacrifice too great to achieve success for our arms.

When these men so promptly responded to the call of the President to defend the capital is it not proper that the Government should grant them this recognition? It will cost the Government but little, and while these medals are of no great intrinsic value, they will be to these men the source of just pride.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I hope the gentleman will give us a chance to vote.

Mr. SOWDEN. I now move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, notwithstanding the adverse report which has been submitted. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The question first recurred on Mr. ERMENTROUT'S amendment; which was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question next recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 53.

Mr. SOWDEN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, tellers will be appointed.

Mr. ROWELL. Under the special order that point can not be made.

Mr. PERKINS. That is the consideration we get for going back.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to recommit the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. SOWDEN and Mr. SPRINGER.

Mr. DUNHAM. By turning to page 65 of the Calendar we find the special order for this evening's session. That order provides bills may be considered to which there is no objection. It does not provide that nothing can be done if there is objection. It seems to me when a bill is brought up and there is objection the whole matter should be passed over informally. I therefore submit this bill should be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state in response to the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois that the question of objection pertains only to the commencement of the consideration of the bill If the consideration is entered upon, the rules of the House, the Chair thinks, apply to the bill, and it requires, if the point is made, the presence of a quorum.

Mr. STEELE. Regular order!

Mr. DUNHAM. But this order under which the House meets does not apply alone to the objection to the question of consideration. It applies generally to the question of objection to the bill at any stage.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman has the right to make the point of no quorum.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Is it in order, pending these proceedings, to move that the committee rise?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. The tellers will report.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 8, noes 52.

Mr. SOWDEN. No quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee finding itself without a quorum, it is the duty of the Chair to order the roll to be called.

Mr. ROWELL. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I object.

Mr. THOMPSON. Is it in order to move that the committee rise?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not at this time.

The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Illinois for unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside temporarily. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I withdraw the objection.

So, there being no further objection, the bill was temporarily laid aside.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I shall object to the consideration of the two bills immediately succeeding this on the Calendar—House bills No. 527 and No. 529, which were objected to when reached in their regular order, and ask the House to take up the next bill on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE TO JULIA D. GRANT.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call up the next business on the Calendar, the bill (H. R. 2033) granting a franking privilege to Julia D. Grant.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all mail-matter carried by post to Julia D. Grant, widow of the late Ulysses S. Grant, or sent by her under her written autograph signature, be conveyed free of postage during her natural life.

Mr. PRICE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I ask is it not true that in the bill pensioning Mrs. Grant at $5,000 a year the franking privilege was included?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think not.

Mr. PRICE. I think it was.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mrs. Garfield has the franking privilege, but not Mrs. Grant.

Mr. FELTON. It can do no harm if she already has it to pass the bill again.

Mr. PRICE. There is harm in it all the way through.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I am informed by the Clerk that there is a Senate bill precisely like the one just passed granting this privilege to Mrs. Grant. I would therefore ask, if it be in order, to reconsider the vote just taken so as to take up and pass the Senate bill instead of this.

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be done in the committee. When we reach the consideration of the bill in the House that motion will then be in order.

RACHAEL J. FLOYD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2053) for the relief of Rachael J. Floyd.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the consideration of this bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to pay the said Rachael J. Floyd, widow of said deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $510, being the proportion earned during the time served of the gratuity for continuous services of said deceased as a machinist in the Navy, provided for under said act relating to machinists in the Navy, approved June 16, 1880.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM DOLTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1501) referring the claim of William Dalton to the Court of Claims.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I call for the present consideration of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the claim of William Dalton, of the city of Trenton, in the State of New Jersey, against the Government of the United States, for the rental alleged by the said William Dalton to be still due him from the said Government for the use of a building in said city for a post-office by the post-office authorities, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims of the United States for adjudication and settlement; and that said court is hereby authorized and, upon filing in said court of a proper petition therefor by said Dalton, directed to take jurisdiction of said claim as fully and with the same effect as if the time limited by law for the filing of such claim had not heretofore expired: Provided, however, That the said William Dalton shall commence his said action in the said court within six months after the passage of this act.

The committee recommend the following amendments:

Strike out the name "Dalton" wherever it occurs in the bill and insert the name "Dolton," and also amend the title to conform.

The amendments were agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

R. D. BECKLEY AND LEON HOWARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5872) for the relief of R. D. Beckley and Leon Howard.

Mr. TRIGG. I ask the present consideration of the bill.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to R. D. Beckley and Leon Howard, late employés under the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, Forty-eighth Congress, the sum of $368 each, being the difference in salary paid to laborers and that paid to messengers, which latter office they respectively filled from the 2d day of January, 1884, to the 7th day of July, 1884, and from the 1st day of December, 1884, to the 4th day of March, 1885, aggregating nine months and six days, during which they performed all of the duties of messengers and received only the pay of laborers.

SEC. 2. That the amount to pay the same is hereby appropriated and made immediately available.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Let me ask if this is favorably reported; and, if so, by what committee?

Mr. TRIGG. It is favorably reported from the Committee on Claims, and is in keeping with other bills of the same kind recently passed.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is the same. The principle has been settled by a test vote in the House recently.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELEANOR T. BROOKBANKS AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar called up for consideration (by Mr. WARD, of Indiana) was the bill (H. R. 506) for the relief of Eleanor T. Brookbanks and others, reported by Mr. KLEINER from the Committee on War Claims.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Eleanor T. Brookbanks, Joseph L. Brookbanks, Amos E. Brookbanks, Reuben G. Brookbanks, and Mary E. Lee (the only heirs at law of Reuben M. Brookbanks, deceased), of Tipton County, in the State of Indiana, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $850, for money paid by the said Reuben M. Brookbanks for a substitute during the late war for the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I would like to know why a man should be paid for hiring a substitute? I presume the report of the committee discloses some reason for this?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I do not object to the consideration of the bill. I simply desire to know why the money should be paid.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to have the report read, reserving the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late to reserve the right to object. The Chair called for objection twice and no objection was made. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD], if he desires it, can call for the reading of the report in his own time.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I do not call for the reading of the report.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. This is the same character of bill as we have already passed. This man was drafted, put in a substitute, and by some mistake had to serve also while his substitute was serving.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HEIRS OF JACOB CRAMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar called up for consideration (by Mr. RANDALL) was the bill (H. R. 3642) for the relief of the heirs of Jacob Cramer; reported by Mr. ST. MARTIN from the Committee on War Claims.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the heirs of Jacob Cramer a bounty-land warrant for 200 acres of land for services rendered by said Jacob Cramer as a lieutenant in the Pennsylvania Continental Line in the Revolutionary war; the said Jacob Cramer being entitled thereto pursuant to the resolution of the Continental Congress of September 16, 1776, and the provisions of the act of July 27, 1842, extended by the act of February 8, 1851.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a unanimous report.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BANGS, BROWNELL & CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar called up for consideration (by Mr. MILLIKEN) was the bill (H. R. 1034) for the relief of Bangs, Brownell & Co.; reported by Mr. REID, of North Carolina, from the Committee on War Claims.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Bangs, Brownell & Co. the sum of $5,410, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for tar and wood seized by the United States and sold and for use of vessel and loss of tools and materials.

The Committee on Claims recommended the following amendment:

In line 5, strike out "$5,410" and insert "$5,000."

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I would like to have the report read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest to the gentleman from Maine to make a statement in explanation of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Maine will make an explanation of the bill, the right to object being reserved.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Messrs. Bangs and Brownell are two as honorable men as are to be found in this country. One of them lives in Maine, the other in New York. Mr. Bangs is one of the most noted military officers in Maine. He engaged by a permit from the Government to make tar down upon the coast of Florida during the war. Gentlemen will remember, perhaps, that tar was something that we very much needed at that time. The Government itself approved of this. These men were officers of the Army, and went out for that purpose. Their vessel was seized, as the report shows, and their tar was taken and was turned over to the Government. Their tools also were turned over to the Government. The vessel was retained for a considerable time.

The matter was referred in the first place to the Comptroller of the Treasury, and, as the report shows, he stated squarely it was a just claim and should be paid, but it did not come under his jurisdiction. It afterward went before the Commissioners of Claims and they stated the same thing in substance.

Mr. Brownell was arrested on the charge of making tar where he was not permitted to do so. He was tried. It was shown by abundant evidence that he had a special permit. He was acquitted. And now these men come here for justice, and ask payment for merely the property that was taken by the Government when they were in pursuit of a legitimate business under the permit of the Government.

This is a unanimous report from the Committee on War Claims, as the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES], will state to the House.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Did the Government dispose of the property and turn the proceeds into the Treasury?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUTCHEON. And this bill gives just the amount?

Mr. MILLIKEN. It gives payment for the property turned in to the Government and also for the use of the vessel at the same rate the parties had to pay themselves.

Mr. COMPTON. Where and when was the seizure made?

Mr. MILLIKEN. It was made as the vessel was bound from New Orleans, I think, to the coast of Florida.

A MEMBER. It was seized at Barrancas, Fla.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. There is an amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FRANCES H. PLUMMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3750) for the relief of Frances H. Plummer.

Mr. LYMAN. I ask the present consideration of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $1,000 be paid, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Frances H. Plummer, widow of J. B. Plummer, deceased, in full satisfaction and discharge of any and all claims against the United States for the loss of property by said J. B. Plummer or his said widow at the evacuation of Fort Cobb, Indian Territory, in May, 1861.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

An amendment reported by the Committee on War Claims striking out the words "five hundred," in the first line of the bill, so as to make it read, "That the sum of $1,000 be paid," &c., was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM H. MORHISER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5877) for the relief of William H. Morhiser.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I ask the present consideration of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum of money sufficient to pay to William H. Morhiser the pay and allowances due him for services to the United States Government for which he has not been paid, and which shall be computed as follows:

First, the pay and allowances of a private of cavalry from November 30, 1863, to January 1, 1865; and

Second, such additional pay and allowances as commutation of rations, &c., as were allowed to prisoners of war from July 30, 1864, to January 1, 1865.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE T. DUDLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1503) for the relief of George F. Dudley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas on or about the 18th day of May, A. D. 1865, George T. Dudley, first lieutenant of Company M, Fiftieth Regiment New York Volunteer Engineers, for visiting the city of Richmond, Va., on the occasion of its evacuation by the confederate army, on the 3d day of April, 1865, was dismissed from the United States service by sentence of court-martial, with loss of pay and allowances, having been absent from his command without permission for twenty-four hours; and

Whereas the facts in the case being put before him, the honorable Secretary of War did order "that the sentence of said court-martial be revoked," intending to restore to the said officer his pay and allowances, as well as his rank and commission; and

Whereas the order issued by the War Department did not carry out the wishes of the honorable Secretary, but merely restored to the said officer his rank and commission, without giving him his pay and allowances, which can only be restored to him by an act of Congress: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the said George T. Dudley shall be entitled to and receive the pay and allowances of his rank which were due him at the date of his dismissal from the service; and that the Treasurer of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to pay the said George T. Dudley, from any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the amount found to be due him at that time.

Mr. LYMAN. I ask the consideration of that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman state the amount involved?

Mr. LYMAN. I do not remember exactly, but it is about $200.

There was no objection.

Mr. LYMAN. Mr. Chairman, since this bill was reported a similar bill for the same purpose has come from the Senate, and I move that it be substituted for the House bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That can be more properly done in the House after the Committee of the Whole shall have reported the bill to the House.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MOSES B. WALKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1802) for the relief of Moses B. Walker.

Mr. WADE. I ask the present consideration of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to enter in the records of his Department the settlement of $550 which is charged in the accounts of Moses B. Walker, late colonel of the Thirty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry, as of the 30th day of September, 1861, for money received by him while in the service of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN R. HARRINGTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4594) for the relief of John R. Harrington.

Mr. MATSON. I ask the present consideration of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That John R. Harrington have leave to apply to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension for the term of seven years of the reissued letters patent numbered 2415 and 2416, each dated December 11, 1866, for improvements in carpet-lining and means for producing the same, from and after his decision thereon; such application to the Commissioner of Patents to be made within three months from and after the date of the passage of this act, and the proceedings before said Commissioner to be made to conform to the statute relating to the extension of letters patent granted for the term of fourteen years.

SEC. 2. That no right of action to recover damages shall accrue to the patentee, or his assignee, from the time of the expiration of said patents until the extension, as contemplated by the first section of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

STEPHEN N. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3126) for the relief of Stephen N. Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the patent granted to Stephen N. Smith on the 13th day of June, in the year 1882, for "improvements in machines for making lacing-hooks," and which patent, on the face thereof, was granted for the term of seventeen years from the date of said patent, shall be, and the same is hereby, made a valid grant for the full term of seventeen years from the date of said patent, notwithstanding the fact that a patent had been previously granted to said Stephen N. Smith in Canada for the same invention.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I object, and shall object to all bills extending patents.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish the gentleman would allow me to make a brief statement in regard to this bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I am willing to hear the gentleman's statement.

Mr. SPOONER. This is merely a bill asking that the patent be validated for the time for which it was originally granted, the time it bears on its face, that is, seventeen years from the date it was issued. The difficulty in the case arises from the fact that by some error in the Canadian patent——

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I object to discussion. As the gentleman from Kansas objects to the consideration of the bill, there is no use in taking up time in discussing it.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think the gentleman from Kansas will object when he understands the case.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ILLEGAL TONNAGE DUES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4583) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make final adjustment of claims of certain foreign steamship companies arising from the illegal exaction of tonnage dues.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to allow and pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the North German Lloyd Steamship Company of Bremen, the Hamburg American Packet Company of Hamburg, and the Norse American Line of Sweden, interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum on such moneys as have been exacted from such companies in contravention of treaty provisions, and heretofore refunded under the act of June 19, 1878; such interest to be computed from the date of the respective payments by such companies up to the time of refunding the same under the act aforesaid: Provided, however, That such interest shall be accepted by said companies, respectively, in full settlement of all claims on account of said moneys exacted from them in contravention of treaty provisions as above stated.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the right to object until we have an explanation of the circumstances of the case and a statement of the amount of money involved.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. GLOVER (before the reading of the report was concluded) said: Mr. Chairman, I think it obvious from the importance of the subject-matter of this bill that it ought not to be considered to-night; and as the report is some twenty pages long, I desire to object now to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman will allow me to say that I have here a communication from the Treasury Department, directed to the Secretary of State, which is very short, and will perhaps serve as a substitute for reading the remainder of the report.

Mr. GLOVER. I did not hear the gentleman's remark.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This communication, in fact, recommends the payment of this money. This is a matter of treaty obligation, involving the honor and good faith of the country.

Mr. GLOVER. That does not convince me that it is proper to consider the matter to-night.

Mr. CUTCHEON. What is the amount?

Mr. RANDALL. The original amount, if I understood the report correctly, was $138,000, and the rate of interest is 5 per cent.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order being called for, the Clerk will read the next bill.

STEPHEN N. SMITH.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask consent to say that the bill which was before the Committee of the Whole just before the last one—a bill for the relief of Stephen N. Smith—was, I understand, not for the extension of a patent. I will, therefore, withdraw my objection to its consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. That bill can only be recurred to now by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope that will be granted.

Several members called for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded; and the next bill on the Calendar will be reported.

SURVIVORS OF EXPLORING STEAMER JEANNETTE.

The next business on the private Calendar (called up by Mr. BUCHANAN) was the bill (H. R. 1659) for the relief of the survivors of the exploring steamer Jeannette, and the widows and children of those who perished in the retreat from the wreck of that vessel in the arctic seas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the steamer Jeannette, while engaged in an exploring expedition by authority of Congress and under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, was wrecked in the arctic seas, on the 13th day of June, 1881, and in consequence thereof the lives of many of her officers and crew were lost; and

Whereas a court of inquiry, appointed in pursuance of a joint resolution of Congress to investigate the circumstances attending the loss of the said steamer Jeannette, and the general conduct and merits of all the officers and enlisted men of the expedition, reported, after a thorough investigation, that, while every officer and man so conducted himself that there was no occasion to impute censure to any member of the expedition, the constancy and endurance with which they met the hardships and dangers that beset them entitle them to great praise: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That to reimburse the survivors of the officers and crew of the said steamer Jeannette for losses incurred by them, respectively, in consequence of the wreck of that vessel, there shall be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sums, to wit: To George W. Melville, chief engineer, $1,000; to John W. Danenhower, lieutenant, $1,000; to Raymond L. Newcomb, naturalist and taxidermist, $600; to John Cole, acting boatswain, $600; to W. F. C. Nindemann, seaman, $600; to James A. Bartlett, fireman, $600; and to the remaining survivors of the crew of said vessel, namely, Louis P. Noros, Herbert W. Leach, Henry Wilson, Frank E. Manson, Charles Tong Sing, seamen, and John Lauterbach, coal-heaver, the sum of $600 each.

SEC. 2. That the 23d day of March, 1882, being the date of finding the remains of the commanding officer and others of the said expedition, shall be deemed and taken to be the date of the decease of the following-named officers and enlisted men of the expedition who lost their lives in the retreat from the wreck of the said steamer Jeannette, namely: Lieut. Commander George W. De Long; Lieut. Charles W. Chipp; Passed Assistant Surgeon James M. Ambler; Jerome J. Collins, meteorologist; William Dunbar, ice-pilot; Walter Lee, machinist; Henrich H. Kaack, Carl A. Gortz, Adolph Dressler, Hans H. Erichsen, Ah Sam, Alfred Sweetman, Henry D. Warren, Peter E. Johnson, Edward Star, and Albert G. Kuehne, seamen; Nelse Iverson, George W. Boyd, and Walter Sharvill, coal-heavers; and Seaman Alexy.

SEC. 3. That the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to allow to the widow of any deceased officer or enlisted man named in the second section of this act, or if there be no widow living, to the lawful child or children of such deceased, or if there be no widow or child living, to the surviving parent or parents of such deceased, or if there be no widow, child, or parent living, to the brothers and sisters of the deceased, if any, a sum equal to twelve months' pay according to the rate of pay at which the name of such deceased was borne upon the pay-rolls of the said steamer Jeannette: Provided, That the legal representatives of the deceased officers and enlisted men named in the second section of this act shall also be paid from the Treasury any arrears of pay due such deceased, the same to be computed up to and including the said 23d day of March, 1882: Provided further, That the relatives, in the order herein named, of Seaman Aniguin, one of the crew of the steamer Jeannette, and who, while connected with said expedition, died at Irkutsk, Siberia, January 5, 1883, shall in like manner be entitled to receive twelve months' pay in addition to the amount due said deceased at the time of his death.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Claims were read, as follows:

In line 6 of section 3 insert after the word "surviving" the word "dependent."

In lines 7 and 8 of the same section strike out the words "or if there be no widow, child, or parents living, to the brothers and sisters of the deceased."

At the end of the bill add the following:

"Provided, further, That in any case where heretofore a pension has been granted, or may hereafter in fact be granted, to any such widow, child, or dependent parent, by reason of the death of any of the persons named in the second section of this act, in the payment of such pension account shall be taken of any sum paid under this act, and to the extent of its amount said sum shall be in lieu and stead of such pension, and no further."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM TALBERT.

The next bill on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. HOWARD) was the bill (H. R. 3475) for the relief of William Talbert.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the claim of William Talbert, of Montgomery County, Maryland, for the use by the Government of his patented improvement for marine railways, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, with authority to take jurisdiction thereof, and to award judgment thereon according to its value to the Government during the existence of said patent, on principles of equity and justice.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to hear the report read, unless some gentleman will state the facts of the case.

Mr. McCOMAS. This is a claim for the use of an invention for hoisting vessels, which was used for a certain length of time by the Government. The bill provides that the case be referred to the Court of Claims, that it may ascertain whether the Government owes anything for the use of this patent, and if so, what.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What amount is claimed?

Mr. McCOMAS. I do not know the precise amount—just whatever the court may say the use of the invention was worth.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. In round numbers, what is the amount of the claim?

Mr. McCOMAS. I have a very vague recollection, but my impression is that it is a very small matter. This is all I can say about it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. After examination by the Court of Claims, the case is to come back to Congress for further action?

Mr. McCOMAS. That is all. It will come back here after the report by the Court of Claims.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. McCOMAS subsequently said: I wish to say that I was partially in error in the statement I made a few moments ago as to the bill for the relief of William Talbert. I was right in saying that the amount of the claim is small; but on examining the bill I find that it does not provide for bringing the case back to Congress after an examination by the Court of Claims, but allows the court to dispose of it. I think it just to make this correction, so that any member who may regard the fact as material may take action accordingly.

ALEXANDER GOBLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. LYMAN) was the bill (H. R. 2176) for the relief of Alexander Goble.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Alexander Goble, late a corporal of Company A, One hundred and fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $190, with interest thereon from the 15th day of June, 1865, being bounty-money due said Alexander Goble from the Government of the United States.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on War Claims to strike out the words "with interest thereon from the 15th day of June, 1865," was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

DR. W. S. HOSACK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2175) for the relief of Dr. W. S. Hosack.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is an adverse report in this case. I object to the consideration of the bill.

MYRON E. DUNLAP.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. BAYNE) was the bill (H. R. 2013) for the relief of Myron E. Dunlap.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Myron E. Dunlap, late first lieutenant of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery, was cashiered from the service for tendering his resignation; and

Whereas said dismissal was based upon insufficient grounds: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the said First Lieut. Myron E. Dunlap, late of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery, be, and he is hereby, honorably discharged from the military service of the United States, with like effect and with the same rights and privileges in all respects as if he had been regularly mustered out of the military service of the United States on the 23d day of July, 1864; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to enter upon the proper records of the War Department the corrections made by this act of the military record of said officer.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Military Affairs were read, as follows:

In lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "with like effect and with the same rights and privileges in all respects."

At the end of the bill add the following:

"Provided, That this act shall never be construed so as to grant any pay or allowance to the beneficiary under the same."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FARAN & M'LEAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1776) for the relief of Faran & McLean.

Mr. MATSON. I ask for the consideration of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reopen and reconsider the claim of Faran & McLean for the refunding of certain taxes alleged to have been improperly and illegally assessed and collected, namely, for the amount of $2,260, as claimed by them in the papers now on file in the Treasury Department; and if, upon reopening and reconsidering said claim, said Commissioner shall find said taxes, or any part of the same, to have been illegally or improperly assessed and collected from said claimants, it is hereby made his duty to audit and ascertain the amount of taxes so illegally and improperly collected from said claimants, deducting, however, any legal unpaid taxes which claimants should have paid and did not, if any there shall be, under section 103 of the act of June 30, 1864, entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes;" and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount of taxes so found by said Commissioner of Internal Revenue as aforesaid to have been illegally and improperly assessed and collected to the said Faran & McLean.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LIGHT-HOUSE TENDER LILLY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5889) for the relief of the officers and crew of the light-house tender Lilly and the inspector of the fourteenth United States light-house district.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I ask for the consideration of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be applied by the United States Light-House Board to reimburse the officers and crew of the United States light-house tender Lilly and the inspector of the fourteenth light-house district for losses sustained by them by the burning of said vessel, on the 20th day of September, 1884, at Cincinnati, Ohio: Provided, That each person claiming remuneration under this act shall furnish to the Light-House Board a statement, duly verified, of the value of the property by him lost; also what amount of insurance, if any, received thereon, which amount shall be deducted from the value of said property on settlement by the accounting officers of the Light-House Board: Provided also, That the award of the Light-House Board for such losses shall be final, and the payment thereof to the several claimants shall be held and taken as a complete relinquishment and satisfaction of all claims for damages sustained by them by reason of the burning of said vessel as aforesaid.

SEC. 2. That said sum, or as much thereof as may be necessary, shall become at once available for the purposes aforesaid.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF JOHN M. ROBESON, DECEASED.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 209), with amendment, for the relief of the legal representatives of John M. Robeson, deceased.

Mr. GEDDES. I ask for the consideration of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal representatives of John M. Robeson, deceased, the sum of $1,000; and this amount to be in full satisfaction of all claims of said estate against the United States.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out "one thousand" and insert "five hundred."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I move that the committee rise. [Cries of "No!"]

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 42.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is the session to-night limited?

The CHAIRMAN. The order of the House provides the session shall not extend beyond 11 o'clock. The noes have it.

So the committee refused to rise.

ALLEY BETWEEN LOTS 6 AND 7 IN SQUARE 635.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4162) authorizing the District of Columbia to convey the alley, 15 feet wide, running east and west between lots 6 and 7, in square 635, comprising an area of 3,480 square feet of land, to the owner of said lots.

Mr. ROWELL. There has been a Senate bill passed on the same subject.

The CHAIRMAN. No demand being made for the consideration of the bill, it will be passed over informally.

KANSAS CITY, FORT SCOTT AND GULF RAILROAD COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the joint resolution (H. Res. 26) for the relief of the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad Company.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask for the consideration of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad Company, successor to the Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company, has, under and in accordance with the provisions of "an act to secure the rights of settlers upon certain railroad lands, and to repeal the first five sections of an act entitled 'An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad and its extension to Red River,' approved July 25, 1866," restored to the United States all the unsold lands received by it under its land grant herein specified, and paid into the Treasury the proceeds of all lands sold: Therefore,

Resolved, &c., That the said Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad Company, successor to the Missouri River, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad Company, shall be, and is hereby declared to be, entitled to the payment in full of all compensation earned heretofore by said last-mentioned company in transporting mails and military and other supplies for the Government, to the same extent and effect as though no lands had been granted for the benefit of said company; and the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby required to audit and pay all such accounts, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same as if no lands had been granted to said company.

Mr. ROGERS. I interpose objection until I hear some explanation of this joint resolution.

Mr. PERKINS. This has passed the Senate four times. The Senate joint resolution has been reported favorably by the committee as well as the House resolution. When we reach the House I will ask that the Senate resolution be substituted in place of the House resolution.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is the only railroad company on record in the United States which voluntarily surrendered a land grant. In 1866

Congress made to the State of Kansas, to aid in the construction of a road, a grant of lands; and in the course of time those lands passed by proper authority to this company under the conditions this railroad should transport troops and military supplies of the Government without charge. This continued until 1877. Under the grant a great tract of land passed to this company. In the mean time many settlers had gone on it; controversies arose; litigations ensued. This company then came to Congress and asked that it be relieved of this obligation to transport troops and military supplies upon the condition to return to the Government of the United States its entire grant except where it had sold lands, and where lands had been sold the money it had received therefor be covered into the Treasury of the United States. That it did this is shown by the certificate of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which is made a part of the committee's report. The lands have been reconveyed to the Government with the exception of those which were sold, and in that case the money has been turned over to the Government.

Of course the bill simply authorizes the accounting officers of the Treasury to investigate and ascertain how much this company, if they had not been a land-grant company, would have received for the transportation of troops.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the amount involved.

Mr. PERKINS. It is estimated that it is between twelve and fifteen thousand dollars; I can not give the exact figures.

I may say that during the time this was a land-grant company they paid to counties, municipalities, and to the State of Kansas more than $15,000 of taxes, not a dollar of which will ever be returned, of course. This proposition now pending is to pay the company for the work which it did and the services it rendered the Government without compensation for the transportation of troops at the time to which I have referred.

Mr. GEDDES. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Kansas whether it was not ascertained by this railroad company that it would make more by this transaction than by holding on to the land grant.

Mr. PERKINS. No, sir.

Mr. GEDDES. It ought to have a medal, then, for returning the grant. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. The reason is, perhaps, as I have already suggested: That there were settlers upon the lands, and there was litigation in the courts; and although the court decided in favor of the railroad company, yet the settlers were there upon the lands, refusing to recognize the title of the railroad company, refusing to enter into contracts and resisting its claims to have possession. The company, to avoid the difficulty thus presented, concluded it would be better to surrender the grant.

Mr. SPRINGER. The report, I presume, shows the amount of money received for lands actually sold and turned into the Treasury of the United States. How much does the gentleman recollect was the fund derived from this source?

Mr. PERKINS. But a small amount; some three or four thousand dollars, I think.

Mr. SPRINGER. And how much do you undertake to say the remainder of the land would be worth that was surrendered by the company?

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, very much more than the claim against the Government.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the present claim?

Mr. PERKINS. Some twelve or fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. SPRINGER. But for what purpose?

Mr. PERKINS. For the transportation of troops and stores during the time it was a land-grant railroad, and for which the company received no compensation. All this bill does is to authorize the accounting officers of the Treasury to find how much during that time it would have received from the Government for the service rendered if it had not been a land-grant road, and to audit and pay the amount.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. That is all. It has no further effect.

Mr. PERKINS. And report the facts so ascertained for the settlement of the account of the company.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Just the same I understand as if it had not been a land-grant road.

Mr. PERKINS. Precisely; it having rendered the service without compensation and afterwards restored the lands.

Mr. SPRINGER. This service was not rendered during the war.

Mr. PERKINS. No, sir; the act was in 1866 which granted the lands, and the act was approved in 1877 which relieved the company of the grant.

Mr. ROGERS. Inasmuch as the matter is now before the House, I withdraw the objection. If any other gentleman desires to renew it he can do so.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM HUNTINGTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2918) for the relief of William Huntington.

Mr. HEARD and Mr. VOORHEES asked for the consideration of the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William Huntington, formerly marshal of the United States for the Territory of Washington, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,064.11, the same being a balance found due him from the United States on the judicial determination of two suits instituted against said Huntington and his bondsmen, in the district court of the second judicial district of Washington Territory, by the United States.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It is now twenty-five minutes to 11 o'clock, and I think it will be 11 before we can pass the bills in the House which have been reported favorably.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the gentleman will allow me to call up a bill to which I think there will be no objection and have it passed.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I will renew the motion, then, after the consideration of the next case.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE TO JULIA D. GRANT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 579) granting the franking privilege to Julia D. Grant.

Mr. ROWELL. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. We have already passed a House bill for the same purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. One or the other of these bills can be reported adversely.

Mr. SPRINGER. When we get in the House the House bill can be laid upon the table and the Senate bill substituted.

The CHAIRMAN. It may by unanimous consent be substituted now.

Mr. ROWELL. I ask unanimous consent that it be substituted now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it can be done in the House, and for the present it will be laid aside informally to be acted upon by the House when the committee rises.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the committee rise.

LEAVENWORTH, NORTHERN AND SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the gentleman to permit me first to call up for present consideration Senate bill 1352, granting the right of way to the Leavenworth, Northern and Southern Railway Company through the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth. This is a bill which interests a hundred thousand of my constituents.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the right of way, not exceeding 100 feet in width, is hereby granted to the Leavenworth, Northern and Southern Railway Company, a corporation created under the laws of the State of Kansas, to construct and operate a railroad across and over the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, upon such line as shall be designated and fixed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That if any part of the line to be so designated and fixed shall be upon any portion of any right of way heretofore fixed by the Secretary of War for any other railroad company, all differences between such companies as to the occupying of such line, and as to any compensation to be paid therefor, shall be determined by the Secretary of War: And provided further, That no further interference with any railway line now in operation on said reservation shall be made than the public interest shall require.

Mr. MORRILL. This bill allows this company to build its road through a corner of this military reservation, subject, as far as the location of the line is concerned, to the approval of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SPRINGER. This I understand is the shortest line to Leavenworth?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members rose and asked unanimous consent to call up bills out of their order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I see it is impossible to accommodate all the gentlemen now. I suggest that we now rise and report these bills, and after we have disposed of them other bills may be called up in the House, so far as there may be time. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Can we not agree that each gentleman shall hand his bill to the Clerk and have it entered as passed? [Laughter.]

The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the Private Calendar under the special order, had directed him to report back sundry bills with various recommendations.

BILLS PASSED.

The first business reported from the Committee of the Whole House was the joint resolution (H. Res. 69) for the relief of William B. Isaacs & Co., with amendments.

Mr. WISE. If in order I call for a division of the amendments.

Mr. ROWELL. Having heard the report read, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment I offered.

Mr. WISE. I thank my friend. I think the question to which his amendment referred is not involved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment to the amendment. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert these words: "Including the question of the loyalty of the claimant."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection this portion of the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole as thus modified was agreed to, and the joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendments, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 9017) for the relief of Henry S. Cohn;
A bill (H. R. 3930) for the relief of Wells C. McCool;
A bill (H. R. 528) for the relief of Silas Quackenbush;
A bill (H. R. 2053) for the relief of Rachael J. Floyd;
A bill (H. R. 5772) for the relief of R. D. Beckley and Leon Howard;
A bill (H. R. 506) for the relief of Eleanor T. Brookbanks and others;
A bill (H. R. 3642) for the relief of the heirs of Jacob Cramer;
A bill (H. R. 5877) for the relief of William H. Morhiser;
A bill (H. R. 1802) for the relief of Moses B. Walker;
A bill (H. R. 3475) for the relief of William Talbert;
A bill (H. R. 2176) for the relief of Alexander Goble;
A bill (H. R. 1776) for the relief of Faran & McLean; and
A bill (H. R. 2918) for the relief of William Huntington.

House bills of the following titles were reported with amendments, which were agreed to; and the bills as amended were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 1501) referring the claim of William Dolton to the Court of Claims (the title was amended so as to read "A bill referring the claim of William Dolton to the Court of Claims");
A bill (H. R. 1034) for the relief of Bangs, Brownell & Co.;
A bill (H. R. 3750) for the relief of Frances H. Plummer;
A bill (H. R. 1659) for the relief of the survivors of the exploring steamer Jeannette, and the widows and children of those who perished in the retreat from the wreck of that vessel in the Arctic seas; and A bill (H. R. 2013) for the relief of Myron E. Dunlap.

The following Senate bills, reported without amendment, were severally ordered to a third reading, and were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. 16) for the relief of J. A. Wilson, administrator de bonis non of the estate of Gregory Jarratt, deceased;
A bill (S. 365) for the relief of Martin L. Bundy; and
A bill (S. 1352) granting the right of way to the Leavenworth, Northern and Southern Railway Company through the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth.

Sundry House bills and a joint resolution were reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole House, for which, by unanimous consent, Senate bills and a joint resolution of the same titles were taken from the Private Calendar, ordered to a third reading, and were accordingly read the third time, and passed; as follows:

A bill (S. 579) granting a franking privilege to Julia D. Grant; the bill (H. R. 2033) with the same title was laid on the table;
A bill (S. 498) for the relief of George T. Dudley; the bill (H. R. 1503) with the same title was laid on the table;
Senate joint resolution (S. R. 18) for the relief of the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad Company; joint resolution (H. Res. 26) with the same title was laid on the table; and
A bill (H. R. 5889) for the relief of the officers and crew of the light-house tender Lilly and the inspector of the fourteenth United States light-house district was reported with amendments.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to report at this time from the Committee on Claims the bill (S. 2073) with the same title, and that it be passed in place of the House bill.

There was no objection; and the bill (S. 2073) having the same title was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

House bill 5889 was laid on the table.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the several votes by which the bills were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL B. SEAT.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill No. 24 on this Calendar (there having been reported favorably a House bill of like tenor) and put it upon its passage.

Mr. MATSON. I reserve the right to object to that bill until I hear it read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Samuel B. Seat, of Montgomery County, Tennessee, the sum of $933.72, the same being a refund to said Seat of the amount hitherto paid by him in excess of what was actually due by him to the United States, and which he paid in satisfaction of an erroneous judgment.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a brief statement, and I am satisfied that after I make it there will be no objection to this bill.

Mr. MATSON. I make no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to discharging the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of this bill and bringing it before the House for immediate consideration?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

RIGHT OF WAY FORT RUSSELL AND FORT LARAMIE RESERVATIONS.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 2222, and that it be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Cheyenne and Northern Railway Company, a corporation created and organized under the laws of the Territory of Wyoming, is hereby authorized to build its road across the Fort Russell and Fort Laramie military reservations, upon such a line and subject to such restrictions as may be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided, That such right of way shall not exceed 100 feet in width, and shall be subject to such change or removal as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, at the expense of the railway company.

SEC. 2. That if the rights hereby conferred shall not be exercised and the road built within three years next after the passage of this act, all the rights and authority hereby granted shall absolutely cease and determine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to discharging the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of this bill and bringing it before the House at this time for consideration?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the Secretary of War approve of this?

Mr. CAREY. Yes, sir; his letter is here approving it.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCMILLIN moved to reconsider the votes by which the two last bills were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House to take up one bill and pass it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 11 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair, under the order of the House for this special session, to declare the House adjourned until to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 17, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting, in reply to a resolution of April 5, 1886, a report in regard to the distribution of public documents by the Department of the Interior; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of June 14, 1886, a statement in regard to the transportation of United States mails over inland water routes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the communication will be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and printed.

Mr. FRYE. Was not that called for by a resolution offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was.

Mr. FRYE. Then my impression is that he wants it for use on the Post-Office appropriation bill which is now pending between the two Houses, and I suggest that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that order will be made.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the Cincinnati (Ohio) Chamber of Commerce, remonstrating against the proposed construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Saint Louis, Mo.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Cincinnati (Ohio) Chamber of Commerce, remonstrating against the proposed construction of a bridge across the Little Kanawha River at its junction with the Ohio River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Memorial Post, No. 141, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio, praying for favorable action on the recommendations of the committee on pensions of the Grand Army of the Republic; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM presented the petition of John D. Pope, vice-president of the Saint Louis Canal Company, praying that should the desert-land act be repealed lands lying within the scope of works already under construction be exempted from the operation of the proposed repeal of the existing law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Produce Exchange of Chicago, Ill., representing the produce and dairy interests of Illinois, and attested by George W. Linn, president, and R. M. Littler, secretary, favoring the passage of the House oleomargarine bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Ellis Mendell and others, citizens of Mattapoisett, Plymouth County, Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the bill respecting oleomargarine as reported by the House Committee on Agriculture; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DAWES. I present the memorial of Thomas Dana & Co. and a large number of other merchants of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the passage of the bill defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of a large number of citizens of Mississippi, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 1800) to secure to the Cherokee freedmen and others their proportion of certain proceeds of lands under the act of March 3, 1883. As the bill is before the Senate now, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER presented a petition of the American Agricultural and Dairy Association and 164 dairy farmers of Wisconsin, praying for the passage of the bill regulating the sale of and taxing imitation butter; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented a petition of the American Agricultural and Dairy Association and 821 dairy farmers of Iowa and 240 cattle-men of Dakota, praying for the passage of the bill regulating the sale of and taxing imitation butter; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. TELLER presented petitions of 114 dairy farmers of Colorado and California, praying for the passage of the bill regulating the sale of and taxing imitation butter; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SAWYER presented resolutions adopted by the Green County (Wisconsin) Pomona Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, in favor of the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SAULSBURY presented the petition of Capt. Douglass Ottinger, of the United States Revenue Marine, praying that the joint resolution (H. Res. 125) awarding to Joseph Francis the thanks of Congress and a gold medal for the construction and perfection of life-saving appliances, be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce of the Senate for the purpose of hearing further evidence in regard to that matter; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CONGER presented nine petitions of 548 dairy farmers of Michigan, praying for the passage of the bill regulating and taxing imitation butter; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DOLPH presented the petition of 109 dairy farmers of Oregon, praying for the passage of the bill regulating and taxing imitation butter; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2431) granting a pension to Henry Shoulders;

A bill (S. 2519) granting an increase of pension to Richard B. Rians;

A bill (H. R. 4374) to increase the pension of Samuel Frost;

A bill (H. R. 944) for the relief of Mary Jane Conrad; and

A bill (H. R. 6087) granting a pension to Patrick Murphy.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2554) to amend section 2133 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, moved its indefinite postponement, which was agreed to; and he reported a bill (S. 2676) to repeal chapter 360 of the statutes of 1882, entitled, "An act to amend section 2133 of the Revised Statutes in relation to Indian traders;" which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 758) granting a pension to Alexander Harper, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HARRISON. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1801) for the reappraisement and sale of a certain tract of land of the reservation of the Sac and Fox Indians of the Missouri tribe, in the State of Nebraska, to report it without amendment. I do not accompany the bill with any written report. I desire to state that Senate Executive Document No. 83 of this session contains a communication from the Department of the Interior showing the reasons for the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. RANSOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2851) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and the State of Colorado, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, striking out everything after the enacting clause and proposing the substance or actually the bill of the Senate No. 11, which has been reported favorably to this body by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1205) to provide for the construction of a bridge across the west channel of the Detroit River to connect Belle Isle Park with the mainland, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 2677) to regulate the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DAWES (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2678) to amend sections 2529 and 2728 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to the appointment of appraisers in the Boston custom-house; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 2679) granting a pension to Hugh N. Shanks; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2680) granting a pension to Elizabeth M. Miller; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2681) increasing the pension of George W. Harris; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VAN WYCK introduced a bill (S. 2682) granting a pension to Thomas W. Egan; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to say in this connection that while I introduce the bill most cheerfully, it was drawn by the friends of General Egan, and proposes to have the pension date back to 1864, a matter which I presume will not be agreed to by the Senate or by the Congress of the United States. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 2683) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River at the foot of Pennsylvania avenue east; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEARST introduced a bill (S. 2684) granting a pension to Kate C. McDougal; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. SAWYER submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

ACCOUNTS OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. SAWYER. I submit the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be requested to inform the Senate of the amount of additional compensation allowed postmasters and late postmasters in the State of Wisconsin under the act of March 3, 1883, for the payment of which no provision has been made.

Mr. INGALLS. It is not the custom of this body to request information from subordinate officers. I suggest that the customary word "directed" be inserted in the resolution.

I would add in connection with this subject that I offered a resolution similar in purpose the other day, calling for information as to the amount due postmasters in the State of Kansas on the readjustment of salaries. That was amended at the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] so as to include the information in regard to all States in the Union. A report was sent back from the Postmaster-General to the effect that it would require a very large force of clerks fourteen months to furnish the information, and thereupon the matter lay upon the table, where it now reposes.

I will add that I have reason to believe that the response of the Postmaster-General was not correct. That is the mildest term I will employ in my criticism. I am informed that the adjustment has been made in every case, and that it appears in dollars and cents upon the jacket in each instance. So all that would be required would be a simple transcription of the indorsements upon the jackets in those cases in order to give us the information desired.

The Post-Office Department is determined that those amounts shall not be paid, if any obstacle that it can interpose will prevent it. There have been too many concurrent expressions on that subject to leave any doubt in my mind on that point.

Inasmuch as the Senate has once called on the Post-Office Department for this information respecting the postmasters in every State in the Union, and the reply has been that there is an impossibility to furnish it, I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that the adoption of such a resolution the second time would put the Senate in a very disagreeable and unfortunate attitude.

Mr. SAWYER. I was not aware of the previous resolution. If there is no objection I will withdraw the resolution I have offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is withdrawn.

DEPARTMENTAL CLERKS—CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. INGALLS submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish to the Senate the following information:

First. The number of clerks now embraced within the provisions of the civil-service act of January 16, A. D. 1883, who were removed from office in the several Executive Departments, and the number of such clerks who were appointed to office in the several Executive Departments under the civil-service rules from July 16, A. D. 1883, to March 4, A. D. 1885, not including in such removals and appointments clerks excepted from examination by Rule XIX of the amended civil-service rules.

Second. The number of clerks embraced within the provisions of the civil-service act of January 16, 1883, who were removed from office in the several Executive Departments and the number of such clerks who were appointed to office in the several Executive Departments under the civil-service rules from March 4, A. D. 1885, to June 15, A. D. 1886, not including in such removals and appointments clerks excepted from examination by Rule XIX of the amended civil-service rules.

Third. The number and names of chiefs of division and chief clerks who were removed from office in the several Executive Departments from July 16, A. D. 1883, to March 4, A. D. 1885, and the number and names of such chiefs of division and chief clerks who were appointed to office during the same period, and the number of such appointments which were made by promotion.

Fourth. The number and names of chiefs of division and chief clerks who were removed from office in the several Executive Departments from March 4, A. D. 1885, to June 15, 1886, and the number and names of such chiefs of division and chief clerks who were appointed to office during the same period, and the number of such appointments which were made by promotion.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall want to offer an amendment to the resolution, and I have not time to prepare it now. Let it be printed and lie over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. INGALLS. It will go over under the rule.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no objection to the passage of it except that I want to make it a little more comprehensive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over.

SOLDIERS' CLAIMS.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to certify to the Senate the claims of the volunteer soldiers adjusted by the accounting officers of the Treasury since the last deficiency report of the Treasury.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed, and the Calendar is now in order under a rule adopted by the Senate which will be read; and the Chair will strictly enforce it if the Senate will sustain him in doing so.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Thursday, June 17, be devoted to the Calendar under the five-minutes' limitation for debate and subject to objection, which objection shall operate only to pass over the case, retaining its place on the Calendar; and that no motion shall be made to proceed to the consideration of any bill where objection is made to the consideration of the same; and that Friday shall be devoted to the Calendar under the eighth rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar will be proceeded with at the point where its consideration was left off when the Calendar was last considered.

WILLIAM TALBERT.

The bill (S. 1554) for the relief of William Talbert was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

The Committee on Claims reported an amendment, after the word "patent," in line 9, to strike out "on principles of equity and justice;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the claim of William Talbert, of Washington City, D. C., for the use by the Government of his patented improvement for marine railways, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, which said court is authorized and directed to take jurisdiction thereof, and to award judgment thereon, according to its value to the Government during the existence of said patent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIMON J. FOUGHT.

The bill (H. R. 1902) granting an increase of pension to Simon J. Fought was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Simon J. Fought, formerly a corporal of Company D, Forty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, to $30 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF ERSKINE S. ALLIN.

The bill (S. 1359) for the relief of the heirs of Erskine S. Allin was announced as next in order on the Calendar, and was read.

Mr. CULLOM. The bill seems to appropriate a large amount of money. I should like to have some explanation of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is reported from the Committee on Patents with an amendment reducing the amount from $100,000 to $30,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the bill had better be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it retain its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not lose its place under the order applicable to this day.

JOHN WILLIAMS.

The bill (S. 2262) for the relief of John Williams was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. DOLPH. I object to that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

STATE WAR CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 309) to settle and adjust the claims of any State for expenses incurred by it in defense of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. GORMAN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

The bill (S. 2199) to increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States was announced as the next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is objected to, and goes over.

Mr. CULLOM. That bill was reported by my colleague [Mr. LOGAN]. I do not see him present, and I ask that it be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over under objection already made.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not hear the objection stated.

J. M. HIATT.

The bill (S. 1492) for the relief of Hiatt & Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, in line 10, after the word "cents," to insert "or so much thereof as may be found actually due the claimant after an investigation of the facts by the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to J. M. Hiatt, only surviving partner of Hiatt & Co., late traders for the Osage tribe of Indians, out of any money in the Treasury accruing to the Osage tribe of Indians by act of Congress approved June 16, 1880, the sum of $16,759.99, or so much thereof as may be found actually due the claimant after an investigation of the facts by the Secretary of the Interior, which sum shall be in full satisfaction of the claim of said Hiatt & Co. against the Osage tribe of Indians for goods sold them on an extended credit.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I observe that the bill proposes that the payment shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior. I think it should be made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not object to its consideration; I simply call attention to the fact.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 3, I move to strike out the word "Interior" and insert "Treasury;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, &c.

It is a mere clerical oversight, evidently.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of J. M. Hiatt, only surviving partner of Hiatt & Co."

E. C. CHIROUSE.

The bill (S. 1375) for the relief of E. C. Chirouse, late United States Indian agent, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the accounting officers of the Treasury, in the settlement of the accounts of E. C. Chirouse, late United States Indian agent at Tulalip, Wash., to adjust and settle the same upon the principles of equity and justice, and to award him credit for disbursements that appear to have been honestly made in good faith and have inured to the benefit of the Indians or the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN F. MALO.

The bill (S. 1376) for the relief of John F. Malo was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay, out of the unexpended balance of appropriations for schools for 1885 or prior years, to John F. Malo, for services rendered and expenditures incurred by him in maintaining an Indian boys and girls' school among the Turtle Mountain Chippewas of Dakota, from September 20, 1882, to December 1, 1883, $1,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, April 29, 1886:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1376) for the relief of John F. Malo, respectfully submits the following report.

In response to a communication from the chairman, the acting Secretary of the Interior writes as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, March 19, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of 6th instant, referring, with request for examination and report, Senate bill No. 1376, "for the relief of John F. Malo," which contemplates the payment, out of the unexpended balance of appropriations for Indian schools for 1885, or prior years, to Rev. John F. Malo $1,000, for services rendered and expenditures incurred by him in maintaining an Indian boys and girls' school among the Turtle Mountain Chippewas of Dakota, from September 20, 1882, to December 1, 1883.

The subject having been referred to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, I transmit in reply a copy of his letter of 18th instant, with accompanying papers noted therein.

The late Commissioner of Indian Affairs urged an appropriation for the payment of this claim, in which Mr. Secretary Teller concurred.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs expresses the opinion that the claim is a just one, and recommends the passage of the bill, in which recommendation this Department concurs.

Very respectfully,

H. L. MULDROW, Acting Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

This communication was accompanied by the following:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, Washington, March 18, 1886.

SIR: By your reference of the 8th instant, I am in receipt of a letter from Hon. H. L. DAWES, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate, requesting a report on Senate bill (S. 1376) for relief of John F. Malo, for services rendered and expenditures incurred by him in maintaining an Indian boys and girls' school among the Turtle Mountain Chippewas of Dakota, from September 20, 1882, to December 1, 1883, amounting to $1,000.

In reply I have the honor to state that the claim in favor of J. F. Malo was allowed by this office on December 27, 1883, under authority of the Department of December 22, 1883, and for your information and that of the Senate committee I inclose herewith copies of the voucher and authority upon which the settlement was made, and also Ex. Doc. No. 240, House of Representatives, Forty-eighth Congress, second session, containing letter from this office dated June 10, 1884, giving history of the claim and reasons why it was not allowed by the accounting officer. I think the claim a just one and recommend its passage.

Very respectfully,

J. D. C. ATKINS, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

The United States, to Rev. John F. Malo, Dr.

For conducting a day school among the Turtle Mountain Chippewa Indians, in Dakota, from September 20, 1882, to December 1, 1883, say fourteen months, with an average attendance of thirty-five boys and thirty-five girls..... $1,000

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 21, 1883.

I, John F. Malo, of Turtle Mountain, Dakota, do swear that I have conducted the school referred to in the above account during the period therein mentioned; that the average attendance therein named is correct; that the charge for conducting the school is, I believe, reasonable and just, and that no part of said account has ever been paid by said Indians or by the United States.

JOHN F. MALO, M. P.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 21st day of December, A. D. 1883.

THE BUREAU OF CATHOLIC INDIAN MISSIONS, Washington, D. C., December 21, 1883.

We certify that the records of this bureau show that the school named in the above account was conducted by said Rev. J. F. Malo, at his own expense, during the time therein named, and that the average attendance named is correct; and that, in our opinion, the charge made is reasonable and just.

I. B. A. BROUILLET, Director.
CHAS. S. LUSK, Secretary.

Official copy.
Settled December 27, 1883.

——— ———, Chief Finance Division.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, December 22, 1883.

SIR: In compliance with the recommendation contained in your communication of 21st instant, authority is hereby granted for the settlement of account in favor of Rev. John F. Malo, in the sum of $1,000, for conducting a day school on the Turtle Mountain Chippewa reservation in Dakota from September 20, 1882, to December 1, 1883, payable from funds applicable thereto.

The account is herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

Official copy.

——— ———,
Chief of Finance Division.

The COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The committee is fully satisfied that the claim set forth in the bill is just and reasonable, wherefore the committee recommends that said bill do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHEROKEE FUNDS.

The bill (S. 1800) to secure to the Cherokee freedmen and others their proportion of certain proceed of lands under the act of March 3, 1883, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that there is a long amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who is not present.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Alabama left his amendment in my charge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts move that amendment?

Mr. DAWES. No; but the original bill I should like to amend. In line 7, after the word "against," I move to insert the words "any money now or hereafter due;" and after the words "Cherokee Nation," in the same line, to insert the words "and deducted therefrom," and to strike out the succeeding lines, 8, 9, and 10, in the following words:

On account of its lands west of the Arkansas River, and shall be a lien on said lands, and which shall be deducted from any payment hereafter made on account of said lands.

So as to read:

That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act; and the amount actually expended shall be charged against any money now or hereafter due the Cherokee Nation and deducted therefrom.

The object of the amendment is not to charge it specially on the land.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

INDIAN TRAINING-SCHOOL IN OREGON.

The bill (S. 2060) to authorize the purchase of a tract of land near Salem, Oreg., for the use of the Indian training-school, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to purchase for the use of the Indian training-school near Salem, Oreg., a tract of land, containing 84.92 acres, adjoining the farm of the training-school, at a sum not exceeding $1,500, payment to be made in labor, to be performed by the Indian pupils attending the school.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE OVER WILLAMETTE RIVER.

The bill (S. 2115) granting to the Oregonian Railway Bridge Company of Oregon the right to construct a bridge over the Willamette River in the vicinity of Ray's Landing, Oregon, was considered next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. My colleague [Mr. DOLPH] has charge of the bill, but the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] some days ago indicated to me that he wished to suggest an amendment to it. Therefore I ask that the bill be laid over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, subsequently said: The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is not in his committee-room, and he was aware that this order was coming up to-day, and I understand he does not now desire to suggest any amendment. I will say in addition that this bill was carefully considered by the Committee on Commerce and reported unanimously by that committee, and I ask the Senate to go back to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the consideration of the bill (S. 2115) granting to the Oregonian Railway Bridge Company of Oregon the right to construct a bridge over the Willamette River in the vicinity of Ray's Landing, Oregon, will be resumed as in Committee of the Whole. The amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The committee propose to amend by striking out section 5 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 5. That such alterations or changes as may be required by the Secretary of War or Congress in bridges constructed under the provisions of this act shall be made by the persons or corporations owning or controlling said bridges, at their own expense; and said Oregonian Railway Bridge Company is hereby authorized to borrow money to be used in the construction of such bridge, not exceeding the sum of ——— thousand dollars, and for such purpose to issue bonds running ——— years and bearing 7 per cent. per annum interest, payable semi-annually, and, for the purpose of securing payment of the principal and interest thereof, to execute a mortgage on all the rights, privileges, and franchises of such company, including the said bridge; and it is hereby expressly provided that Congress reserves the right at any time to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

And in lieu thereof inserting:

SEC. 5. That the right to alter or amend this act so as to prevent or remove all material obstructions to the navigation of said river is hereby expressly reserved; and all changes or alterations so required shall be made at the expense of the parties owning or controlling said bridge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC SHIP-RAILWAY.

The bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. INGALLS. That bill can hardly be considered this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

ESTHER A. KEYSER.

The bill (S. 2291) for the relief of Esther A. Keyser was announced as next in order.

Mr. INGALLS. Since that bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia information has reached me that there are parties interested who have not been heard. My memory just reminds me of that fact. I ask that the bill may be passed over, retaining its place, until such time as I can consider it further.

Mr. HARRIS. Would it not be quite as well to recommit the bill?

Mr. INGALLS. Perhaps that would be better.

Mr. HARRIS. It would be better.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

PROSPECT HILL CEMETERY.

The bill (S. 1187) to amend an act incorporating the proprietors of Prospect Hill Cemetery, approved June 13, 1860, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 11, before the word "acres," to strike out "100" and insert "18;" in line 12, after "District of Columbia," to strike out the words "to sell and dispose of such parts of said land as may not be wanted for the purposes of said cemetery;" so as to read:

That the name and title of said corporation shall be the Prospect Hill Cemetery, and in that corporate name it shall have perpetual succession, and shall be able and liable to sue and be sued as a body politic and corporate, and exercise all the corporate authority and powers conferred upon it, and be subject to all the liabilities and duties imposed under the original act of incorporation aforesaid, may have and use a common seal, and shall have power to purchase and hold not exceeding 18 acres of land in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following as an additional proviso to section 1: .

And provided further, That no portion of said 18 acres shall be sold by said corporation, except for cemetery or burial purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 5, after the word "proprietors," to insert "or owners;" and in the same line, before the words "said cemetery," to insert "lots in;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the affairs of said corporation shall be conducted by a board of nine directors, any five of whom shall constitute a quorum, with full authority to act, which board of directors shall be elected annually by a majority of the votes of the proprietors or owners of lots in said cemetery; and the board of directors shall select and appoint from their own board a president and treasurer, and also from their own board or otherwise, a secretary and a superintendent, which superintendent shall have the immediate custody, supervision, and management of the cemetery, under the rules and regulations of the board. The directors shall have authority to fill temporary vacancies occurring in their board, and shall hold their offices until their successors are elected or appointed and qualified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, after the word "business," at the end of line 10, to strike out "each member of said corporation or proprietors of lots shall pay an annual fee of $1;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That the annual meeting of the proprietors of lots in said cemetery shall be held in the city of Washington on the first Monday in March of every year, for the purpose of receiving the annual report of the board of directors and for electing a new board, the place and hour of assembling to be specified in a public notice previously given by publication in one or more of the daily newspapers published in said city of Washington. At such meeting there shall be at least twenty lot proprietors to constitute a quorum to transact business. In all elections held under this act each proprietor shall be entitled to one vote.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 7, in the following words:

SEC. 7. That the words "the proprietors," where they occur in the original act of incorporation hereby amended, shall be interpreted and construed to mean the proprietors of lots in said cemetery, and which is hereby declared by this amendment to be the true intent and meaning of said words.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [8] 7, after the word "kind," in line 4, to insert "nor shall the cemetery grounds be enlarged beyond the ground now owned by said corporation;" so as to make the section read:

That burial lots in said cemetery shall not be subject to the debts of the proprietors thereof, and the land of the company dedicated to the purpose of a cemetery shall not be subject to taxation of any kind; nor shall the cemetery grounds be enlarged beyond the ground now owned by said corporation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 12, as follows:

SEC. 12. That this act shall take effect from the passage thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions hereof be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LICENSE TAX OF PRODUCE DEALERS.

The bill (S. 2219) to reduce the license tax of produce dealers at large and in the several markets was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas to strike out in line 27 the words "not less than ten." It seems to me that a minimum penalty is always wrong.

Mr. INGALLS. Very well, let that be done. The bill was prepared by the District commissioners and sent here as a suggestion of their own after full examination into the condition of affairs here. The suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts is very proper, and I think the amendment should be made.

Mr. HOAR. The bill provides that a man must pay his license tax and he may be subjected to a penalty of not more than $30 for not paying in time. If it is a mere accident, the court ought to be permitted to waive it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment striking out the minimum penalty will be made. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT OF LABORERS FOR DECORATION DAY.

The joint resolution (S. R. 40) providing for the payment of per diem laborers in Government employ on the 30th of May of each year as on other days was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF CHEROKEE RESERVATION IN ARKANSAS.

The bill (H. R. 138) to provide for the sale of the Cherokee reservation in the State of Arkansas was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHEROKEE CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 2292) to provide for the settlement of a certain Cherokee claim under the treaty of February 14, 1883, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for paying to the treasurer of the Cherokee Nation $2,800 as a full and final discharge of all claims against the United States for the erection of certain corn-mills, as stipulated in the fourth article of the Cherokee treaty of February 14, 1833.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHANGE OF INAUGURATION DAY.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the next order of business, being the joint resolution (S. R. 55) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, may be considered pending so far that I may move an amendment to it to be printed, and then go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts offers an amendment.

Mr. HOAR. It is not necessary to have either read. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over; and the amendment will be printed.

FEDERAL ELECTIONS.

The bill (S. 2297) concerning Federal elections was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that bill go over. It can not be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill being objected to goes over.

ANN B. HUBBARD.

The bill (H. R. 4009) for the relief of Ann B. Hubbard, administratrix, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Ann B. Hubbard, as administratrix of the estate of Edward Hubbard, deceased, of $336.41, in full compensation for his services in transporting the mails of the United States between the post-offices at Wiscasset and Sheepscott Bridge, Me., from December 8, 1871, to February 11, 1873.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM WARD.

The bill (S. 1990) to provide for the adjustment of matters connected with certain judicial proceedings in Pennsylvania in which the United States was a party was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Attorney-General to ascertain what sum, if any, is a fair equivalent for services rendered by William Ward in the court of common pleas of Delaware County, Pennsylvania, in defending certain attachments and suits pending therein against the United States Revenue-Marine Steamer William H. Seward; and to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Ward such sum as the Attorney-General shall certify to be a fair equivalent for the services.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. G. COMBS AND OTHERS.

The bill (S. 2298) for the relief of R. G. Combs and others was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to various persons named the sums specified, being the value of labor and materials furnished in the building of the United States revenue-cutter called Thomas Corwin, built at Albina, Oreg., during the years 1875 and 1876, and for which labor and materials no sum whatever has ever been paid.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SPOONER May 3, 1886:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 83) for the relief of R. G. Combs and others, have examined the same, and beg leave to report:

That in 1875 the United States entered into an agreement with the Oregon Iron Works, an Oregon corporation, for the construction at Albina, Oreg., of the revenue-cutter called Thomas Corwin. The contract-price was $92,000, to be paid as the work progressed, in four equal installments. The contract gave to the Government the right to finish the vessel at the cost of the contractor, in case the latter failed.

The contractor made various subcontracts, and proceeded with the work, borrowing money for the purpose from the First National Bank of Portland, and making to the bank, to secure it for advances made and to be made, an assignment of the sum to grow due from the Government under the contract. The contractor received three installments, and before the payment of the last one failed and was adjudged a bankrupt. The bank at the time of the failure had advanced for the completion of the vessel upon the security of the last installment the sum of $18,399.96.

Upon the failure the United States took possession of the vessel and removed her to San Francisco, and finished her at a cost of $10,150.77, leaving a balance of the original contract-price of $8,249.23, which was covered into the Treasury and carried to the surplus fund at the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877.

A suit was brought by Coffin & Hendry, San Francisco, to recover for material furnished in rigging the vessel, $3,659.20.

The court held (1) that the United States did not become the owner of the vessel until completion and delivery after trial trip; (2) that the possession of the Government while the vessel was being completed was the possession of the contractor; (3) that the Government, in completing the vessel, was, under the contract, simply the agent of the contractor.

The committee are of opinion that the decision was right and in accordance with the terms of the contract, and they have, therefore, reported favorably at this session a bill giving to the First National Bank of Portland the surplus of $8,249.23, assigned to it as before stated.

The parties named in the bill are ship carpenters, painters, laborers, and firms who furnished material for the vessel. The labor and material all went into its construction. Some of them sought to enforce against the vessel liens for labor and materials under the State law, but they failed because of the relation of the United States to the vessel.

Mr. Evans, a Treasury agent, reported upon the case in 1878, in which he says:

"The Corwin is really a valuable vessel, finely finished, and her probable value is in excess of her cost."

Referring to the claims covered by this bill, he says:

"They are mostly due to poor men who feel the loss keenly, and it is hardly to be supposed that the Government desires to avail itself of any technicality to evade the payment to these her citizens."

The committee think these people should be paid. They belong to a class who can not well afford to work for nothing. The claims have no foundation in strict law, but have in them the strongest elements of equity. The probability is that the contract for the construction of the vessel was too low, and the committee, having recommended the allowance of the surplus to the bank, which gives it not quite 50 per cent. of its advances, think the Government should pay these claims for labor and material, of which it has had the benefit, at 50 cents on the dollar.

A similar recommendation was made by the committee at the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress, Mr. MANDERSON making the report.

The committee report a substitute which simply cuts down one-half the amounts named in the original bill, and recommend the passage of the substitute.

The committee recommend the indefinite postponement of S. 83.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDNANCE ACCOUNT OF KANSAS.

The bill (S. 2332) to authorize the Secretary of War to credit the State of Kansas with certain sums of money on its ordnance account with the General Government was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of War to cause the State of Kansas to be credited on its ordnance account with the General Government with the sum of $24,448.50, for ordnance and ordnance stores drawn by the State to aid the General Government in the protection of the State against Indian invasion and depredations.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TAXATION OF DISTILLED SPIRITS.

The bill (H. R. 4833) relating to the taxation of fractional parts of a gallon of distilled spirits was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Committee on Finance are considering sundry amendments to that bill, and I suggest that it go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

ELIZUR B. HALL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5891) to authorize a patent for the south half of the southeast quarter of section 34, in township 22 of range 15 east of the sixth principal meridian, to Elizur B. Hall, as administrator of the estate of William Frederick Schlagel.

The Committee on Public Lands reported an amendment, in line 3, after the words "issue to," to insert "the grantee of;" and in line 7, after the word "meridian," to insert "State of Kansas;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That a patent shall issue to the grantee of Elizur B. Hall, as administrator of the estate of William Frederick Schlagel, for the south half of the southeast quarter of section 34, in township 22 of range 15 east of the sixth principal meridian, State of Kansas, in the usual form and with the usual covenants, as far as may be practicable.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY QUARTERS AND BARRACKS.

The bill (S. 1935) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to enlarge, repair, and complete certain military quarters and barracks in Wyoming Territory and in the State of Nebraska was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALFRED M'MURTRIE.

The bill (H. R. 2066) for the relief of Alfred McMurtrie was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Alfred McMurtrie, of Luzerne County, Pennsylvania, $115, for hay, corn, and oats taken for the use of and used by the Army of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUFFERERS BY WRECK OF STEAMER ASHUELOT.

The bill (S. 250) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States steamer Ashuelot was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was, in section 1, line 13, after the word "paymaster," to strike out "James Entwistle, passed assistant engineer;" and in lines 14 and 15 strike out "Robert R. Leitch, passed assistant engineer;" so as to read:

That to reimburse the officers of the United States steamer Ashuelot, wrecked off the Lamock Islands, in the China Sea, on the night of the 18th of February, 1883, for the loss incurred by them, respectively, in said wreck, there shall be paid, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the following sums, namely: To Andrew J. Iverson, lieutenant; Ambrose B. Wyckoff, lieutenant; Henry T. Stockton, lieutenant; Frank R. Hotchkin, lieutenant, junior grade; T. E. D. W. Veeder, lieutenant, junior grade; Edward N. Whitehouse, paymaster; Samuel H. Dickson, passed assistant surgeon; and James M. Pickrell, assistant engineer, each $1,000. To Silas H. Wright, naval cadet; Samuel H. Williamson, naval cadet; William T. Webster, naval cadet; Robert Stewart, naval cadet; A. F. Collander, mate; and David Monat, pay clerk, each $700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 2, after the word "the," to insert "surviving;" and after "parents," in the same line, to strike out "and if there be no parent, the brothers and sisters;" in line 7 strike out "Brownson" and insert "Bronson;" in line 9 to strike out "Woo" and insert "Yoo;" and in line 10 to strike out "Scutland" and insert "Scotland;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That the widow, child, or children, or in case there be not such, then the surviving parent or parents of those in the service who were lost in the wreck of the United States steamer Ashuelot, namely: William Gronan, seaman; George Valentine, captain of the hold; Fritz Rackenbach, quartermaster; William Bronson, landsman; Saint Leger Crone, quarter-gunner; Ah Kid, painter; Sun Shing, carpenter's mate; George Ashton, carpenter; Ah Yoo, landsman; Andrew Scotland, private marine; and Benjamin H. Wohlrab, landsman, shall be entitled to and receive, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, as follows, to wit: The relatives, in the order named, of the persons connected with the United States steamer Ashuelot hereinbefore referred to, a sum equal to twelve months' sea-pay of each person lost.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the proviso after the word "lost," in line 16 of section 2, as follows:

Provided, That the legal representatives of the above deceased persons who were in the service of the Government shall also be paid from the Treasury of the United States any arrears of pay due said deceased at the time of their death.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Provided, That in any case where heretofore a pension has been granted, or may hereafter in fact be granted, to any such widow, child, or dependent parent by reason of the death of any of the persons named in this section, in the payment of such pension account shall be taken of any sum paid as above provided, and to the extent of its account said sum shall be in lieu and stead of such pension, and no further: Provided further, That the legal representatives of the above deceased persons who were in the service of the Government shall also be paid from the Treasury of the United States any arrears of pay due said deceased at the time of their death.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED CONGRESS OF AMERICAN NATIONS.

The bill (S. 2362) to promote the political progress and commercial prosperity of the American nations was announced as next in order.

Mr. FRYE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

THE BRITISH BARK CHANCE.

The bill (S. 2088) for the relief of the owners, officers, and crew of the British bark Chance was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Foreign Relations reported an amendment, in line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen;" and after the word "thousand" to insert "five hundred;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of State be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to draw his requisition upon the Secretary of the Treasury for the payment, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, of the sum of $15,500 to the duly accredited representative of the Government of Great Britain at Washington, to enable said government to pay the same to the owners of the British bark Chance, of the port of Sydney, New South Wales, to indemnify them, and the officers and crew of said bark, for abandoning their whaling voyage in the Arctic Ocean, in the month of September, in the year 1871, and rescuing from shipwreck ninety-six American seamen and transporting them to Honolulu.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator desire to hear the report?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like some explanation of the case.

Mr. FRYE. It is a very plain case and has been reported favorably by House committees and Senate committees three or four times.

In 1871 this British bark, having been on the whaling-ground for months, received notice that American vessels were fast in the ice farther north, with a request for help. The men immediately abandoned their fishing, went up, and rescued ninety-six American sailors and carried them to Honolulu. That broke up their whole whaling voyage. They never received one dollar for it. They received $35 a head under the disabled and destitute sailors' act for the support of our sailors while they were on board this vessel; that was all the Government could do. The matter has been standing from that time to this, fifteen years, and it is rather a discredit to the Government of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why did they not know how much was due to them? When they introduced the bill they only claimed $10,000, and the Senate committee have raised it to $15,500.

Mr. FRYE. The calculation on the part of the House——

Mr. COCKRELL. This is a Senate bill.

Mr. FRYE. There was a report made at this session in the House. It has been reported favorably in the House, and reported for $10,000. The calculations were made—of course there was necessarily something indefinite about it—as to the loss of the adventure for the whole year's season was lost. They made calculations about the loss, and they made it about $22,000. The House committee then cut it down one-half to make it absolutely certain, and called it $10,000. We took the bill in our committee at $10,000, and the committee unanimously said it was an injustice, and that it was so long ago that what we should do would be to practically add interest to the $10,000 by an amendment, and we have added it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it not a violation of every rule and precedent in the Senate to allow interest?

Mr. FRYE. This is due to foreign people, and not to our own people. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] advocated that and advised it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE IN GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

The bill (H. R. 544) granting leave of absence to employés in the Government Printing Office was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with amendments.

The first amendment was, after the word "office," at the end of line 3, to insert "whether employed by the piece or otherwise;" and in line 6, before the word "year," to insert "fiscal;" so as to read:

That the employés of the Government Printing Office, whether employed by the piece or otherwise, be allowed a leave of absence, with pay, not exceeding fifteen days in any one fiscal year, after the service of one year, and under such regulations and at such time as the Public Printer may designate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any report with that bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no report.

The next amendment was, in line 8, after the word "designate," to insert:

Such employés as are engaged on piece-work shall receive the same rate of pay for the said fifteen days' leave as will be paid to day-hands: Provided, That those regularly employed on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shall receive leave, with pay, at the close of each session pro rata for the time of such employment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as an additional section:

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect on and after the 1st day of July, 1886.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

FERRY AT FORT BUFORD.

The bill (H. R. 1280) to authorize Frank W. Hunt to erect and maintain a ferry across the Missouri River at the military reservation of Fort Buford, Dakota Territory, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS. In the title the word "a" should be converted into "and;" so as to read: "A bill to authorize Frank W. Hunt to erect and maintain a ferry across the Missouri River at the military reservation of Fort Buford, Dakota Territory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment to the bill will be made.

JOSEPH FRANCIS.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 125) in recognition of the services of Joseph Francis was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. McPHERSON. In the absence of the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It goes over.

FORFEITURE OF RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

The bill (H. R. 392) declaring forfeited certain grants of land made to certain States in aid of the construction of railroads was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was in line 13, after the word "act," to insert:

Also except so much of said act as relates to a grant of land in aid of a railroad from Brandon to the Gulf of Mexico, commonly known as the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad.

So as to read:

That so much of the several acts and parts of acts of Congress as are below recited be, and they are hereby, repealed, namely:

Chapter 83, 11 Statutes at Large, page 30, approved August 11, 1856, entitled "An act granting public lands in alternate sections to the State of Mississippi to aid in the construction of railroads in said State, and for other purposes," except so much of said act as relates to a grant of land in aid of "a railroad from Jackson to the line between the State of Mississippi and the State of Alabama," which road was completed within the time prescribed by said act; also except so much of said act as relates to a grant of land in aid of a railroad from Brandon to the Gulf of Mexico, commonly known as the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "domain," in line 42, to strike out the words:

And subject to entry and settlement, under the provisions of the homestead laws, by actual settlers only.

So as to read:

That all rights, titles, and privileges as to any of the public lands granted or conferred by, through, or under the said several provisions of law be, and they are hereby, declared forfeited and determined; that all the lands within the terms and scope of said several provisions of law be, and they are hereby, restored to the public domain.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW T. M'REYNOLDS.

The bill (S. 2217) for the relief of Andrew T. McReynolds was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill has been heretofore considered, the report of the Committee on Pensions read, and a motion made to refer it to the Committee on Claims. The question is on that motion.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the bill will be acted on. It was up the other day and passed over. It is a pension bill for an old soldier of the Mexican war, Colonel McReynolds, and also a soldier in the war for the Union, a gentleman whom I had the pleasure of meeting but a few days ago, old and infirm.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is not a pension bill at all; it is a bill that the Committee on Pensions reported, without having, in my judgment, jurisdiction of the matter. I object to it unless it is referred to the Committee on Claims. It is purely a claim; not a pension.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose the Senator allows the report to be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been read heretofore.

Mr. CONGER. I said it was a pension bill. I have not examined the case, although I know the man.

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to make a suggestion.

Mr. CONGER. I think the bill ought to pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is to pay Mr. McReynolds $950, taking his receipt therefor in full discharge of all claims. It is not to pay him a pension.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion before he makes an objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. A bill now referred to the Committee on Claims would not, in all probability, with the great mass of business before that committee, get examined and reported in time to be considered by the present Congress. I never heard of this case before and know nothing about it; but if it be true, as the Senator from Michigan says, that this is an aged man, a soldier of two wars, it seems to me it would be a pity to dismiss the man to another Congress merely on the technical ground that the wrong committee had considered it. I hope the Senator from Missouri will look at the report and see whether it is a good case or not.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill retain its place on the Calendar and go over for to-day. We can take it up to-morrow, if necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill is passed over without losing its place.

JUDGE FOR SOUTHERN ALABAMA.

The bill (H. R. 28) to provide for the appointment and compensation of a district judge for the southern district of Alabama was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 6, after the word "receive," to strike out "the same" and insert "a;" and after the word "salary" to strike out "and to be paid in the same manner that the judge of the other district court of said State is allowed and paid" and insert "$3,500, payable quarterly;" so as to make the section read:

That there shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a district judge for the southern judicial district of the State of Alabama; and that said judge shall be entitled to receive a yearly salary of $3,500, payable quarterly.

Mr. HARRISON. Before the amendment is agreed to I desire to offer an amendment, which, if it is adopted, involves a disagreement to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator propose an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. It is not in the nature of an amendment to this amendment. I propose to offer two additional sections to the bill, being the bill regulating the salaries of United States district judges generally, which has been passed by the Senate.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Senator insists on that amendment I shall have to object to the consideration of the bill. That question can not be considered properly under this order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that for the present the Senator from Nebraska will consent that the bill may be passed informally so as to be called up again to-day when the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] is in the Chamber.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is withdrawn. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Indiana that the usual course is to act upon the amendments of the committee before other amendments are received.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I hope the Senate will disagree to this amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I reported the bill. I will waive the amendment of the committee until the question is taken on the Senator's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Chair will entertain the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer the following amendment in the nature of additional sections to the bill:

SEC. —. That the salaries of the several judges of the district courts of the United States shall hereafter be at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. —. That no person related to any justice or judge of any court of the United States by affinity or consanguinity, within the degree of first cousin, shall be appointed by such court or judge to or employed by such court or judge in any office or duty in any court of which such justice or judge may be a member.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on this amendment.

Mr. MAXEY. That amendment is certainly too broad to go on a bill local in its character. It increases the salary of all the district judges not now at $5,000 up to that in the future. I hardly think in a thin Senate like this it is advisable to go into that subject.

Mr. HARRISON. Allow me to say that it is absolutely essential in creating this new district to fix the compensation of this judge.

Mr. MAXEY. Precisely; but the bill fixes it at $3,500.

Mr. HARRISON. I know it does, but if we are to increase the salary to $5,000 by general legislation, of course it is entirely appropriate to do it on a bill which fixes the salary of a single judge.

Mr. MAXEY. I do not want to object to the bill, but I think we ought to discuss that matter much more fully than it is possible to do on a bill like this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 8, noes 7; not a quorum voting.

Mr. HARRISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Evidently this can be considered to-morrow under the order of business for to-morrow.

Mr. HARRISON. It will hardly be reached to-morrow; but if we can have unanimous consent to call it up to-morrow when the Senate is fuller I will let it go until to-morrow.

Mr. CONGER. By the understanding and unanimous consent all bills which are even objected to in this course of proceeding hold their place, going over without prejudice under Rule VIII, and come up whenever they are reached again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is true under the order.

Mr. HARRISON. That is true; but the place this bill occupies on the Calendar is such that it is uncertain when it may be reached under the general call. I hope we shall either consider it now, or if Senators prefer to have it go over let it go over until to-morrow with the understanding that it may be called up then.

Mr. MAXEY. Neither of the Senators from Alabama is present. I do not want to interfere with the passage of a bill in relation to that State. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana opens a great, broad question, in which every State is concerned and about which there is very great difference of opinion. I do not propose to consider that question on this bill. I do not want to object to the bill if doing so can be avoided; and if the Senator is willing to let it go over informally until to-morrow, I shall not object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana that the bill be informally postponed, subject to be called up at any time, with all its rights under the rule under which the Senate is acting?

Mr. KENNA. Does that consent carry with it the amendment of the Senator from Indiana?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It carries with it the consideration of the whole question.

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to make one suggestion. That assent carries with it the power of any single Senator at any time to object, as now. It does not put it beyond the right of objection.

Mr. KENNA. I have no earthly objection to the original proposition, but I do object to attaching to it a general salary feature, as suggested by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest then that by unanimous consent this bill go over until to-morrow, until the Senators from Alabama are present, to be then considered the same as it would have been to-day, subject to the objection of any Senator to put it over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to that suggestion?

Mr. KENNA. I have no objection to the bill going over without the amendment of the Senator from Indiana. I think no one objects to the original bill; but if that carries with it the consideration of the proposition of the Senator from Indiana, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator will withdraw that objection until the Senators from Alabama are present. I want to consult them on this point.

Mr. KENNA. I withdraw the objection until those Senators are present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to passing over the bill informally, subject to its being called up? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

JOHN TAGGART.

The bill (H. R. 4115) for the relief of John Taggart was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to John Taggart, late postmaster at Bolton, Harrison County, Missouri, of $30.64, in full of all claims against the United States on account of stamps destroyed by fire in the fall of 1870.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN SOUTHERN FLORIDA.

The bill (H. R. 5221) to change the time of holding United States circuit and district courts in the southern district of Florida was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL F. GARRETT.

The bill (H. R. 1840) granting a pension to Samuel F. Garrett was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report in that case?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. SEW-

ELL, from the Committee on Pensions, May 11, 1886, but before concluding,

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that case be passed over. I remember the case now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ISAAC HARTER.

The bill (S. 1802) for the relief of Isaac Harter was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CATHERINE WHITESELL.

The bill (H. R. 6590) granting a pension to Catherine Whitesell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Catherine Whitesell, widow of Dr. George L. Whitesell, as if Dr. George L. Whitesell had been mustered into the military service of the United States during the war of the rebellion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. BARBARA FUCHS.

The bill (H. R. 6489) granting a pension to Mrs. Barbara Fuchs was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Barbara Fuchs, step-mother of John Fuchs, late of Company H, Sixth Regiment of Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 11, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6489) granting a pension to Mrs. Barbara Fuchs, have carefully examined the same, and adopt the report of the House of Representatives, and report in favor of the passage of the bill:

The claimant filed her application for a pension as the dependent step-mother of John Fuchs, late private of Company H, Sixth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers, and who was killed in action June 19, 1864, at Petersburg, Va. Soldier was never married. Claim was rejected on the ground that there is no title in claim, she not being the natural mother of soldier.

M. Feelder and Jacob Blum testify that they knew claimant as the step-mother of soldier; that soldier at the time of his father's (Sebastian Fuchs) marriage with said claimant was a child of about three years of age.

John G. Steiger and Philip Eder testify that claimant's husband, at soldier's death, was feeble and unable to support her.

Michael Feelder and Jacob Blum further testify that claimant has not remarried since the death of soldier's father, April 5, 1867. He was a laboring man, sickly and unable to support his family. He used to mend shoes, and had no income from his real estate. Since his death claimant has supported herself by selling the real estate she owned. They owned some real estate in Fountain City, Wis., worth about $2,000, and she has sold the most of it to support herself. Soldier worked for his parents prior to his enlistment, and gave all his earnings to them, and did this for three years before his enlistment.

In soldier's letter to parents, bearing date February, 1864, at Camp Washburn, he sends for their support $60 out of his bounty of $75; he also sent them his certificate of muster, to enable them to draw the bounty given by the town, with instructions to use it for their support.

The applicant at the death of her husband (soldier's father) was left with four girls to support, the oldest being seventeen and the youngest two and one-half years of age. The soldier's letter, written but a few months before his death, and his sending a large portion of his earnings to the support of his parents, strengthened with other testimony showing that prior to and at the time of his enlistment he felt it his duty to contribute to the support of his father's family, evidence the fact that had he lived he would have cared for her who cared for him in his infancy in her now poor and helpless condition.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I must object to that. I do not think that is a case which comes within the provisions of the law. The holding of two or three thousand dollars' worth of real estate does not seem to me to constitute a person a dependent mother.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is objected to, and goes over.

JAMES B. RUSSELL.

The bill (H. R. 5696) for the relief of James B. Russell was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

TURNER C. GOODRUM.

The bill (S. 2397) for the relief of Turner C. Goodrum was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of $100 to Turner C. Goodrum, due as additional bounty under the act of July 28, 1866.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS AT SAN ANTONIO AND FORT BRADY.

The bill (H. R. 7183) to authorize the purchase of a certain tract of land near San Antonio, Tex., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of War to purchase and acquire a valid title to, for the United States, a certain tract of land lying in the county of Bexar, in the State of Texas, near the city of San Antonio, consisting of 310 acres, more or less, and being the same now held by the United States for a drill-ground under a rental contract with John H. Kampmann, and dated July 1, 1885.

Mr. CONGER. I offer an amendment to this bill, to be added as additional sections.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as additional sections the ollowing:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to sell the military reservation known as Fort Brady, in the village of Sault Sainte Marie, in the State of Michigan, except that portion lying north of Water street extended, which shall be reserved for canal and wharf purposes, and except the plot of ground now occupied as a military cemetery, which shall also be reserved. In disposing of said property the Secretary of War shall cause the grounds to be platted in blocks, streets, and alleys, corresponding as near as may be with the plat of the village of Sault Sainte Marie, and in lots not exceeding one-quarter of an acre in each, unless with due reference to the requirements of the houses and buildings now located on said grounds. The Secretary of War shall also cause the lots to be appraised and sold at public or private sale, at not less than the appraised value, having first been offered at public sale. The expense of advertising, appraisement, survey, and sale shall be paid out of the proceeds of said sale, and the balance paid into the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of War is also authorized to purchase grounds in or near the village of Sault Sainte Marie, suitable and sufficient for fortification and for garrison purposes, and construct thereon the necessary buildings, with appurtenances, sufficient for a four-company military post, to be known as Fort Brady, in accordance with estimates to be prepared by the War Department; and a sufficient sum of money, not exceeding $120,000, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of War to comply with the provisions of this act: Provided, That the title to the lands authorized to be purchased under the second section of this act shall be approved by the Attorney-General.

SEC. 5. That in platting these grounds the Secretary of War, in his discretion, may reserve all that part of the reservation lying south of Portage street, to be set apart and kept by the municipal authorities of Sault Sainte Marie as a public park for its citizens and the people of the United States.

SEC. 6. That section 1 of this act shall not be of effect until the purchase of a new site provided for in section 4 shall have been effected.

Mr. CONGER. The proposition I offer has passed the Senate as a separate bill. I have in my hand the report of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate in which there is a copy of reports of the officers from the commandant of the fort, General Hancock, and the Secretary of War, all recommending that the site of the old fort used for Indian purposes half a century ago and which is below the present United States canal where it is no protection to it, be changed. It is right in the middle of the village. On the bluff opposite the canal is the site recommended by the War Department, ground which can be obtained by purchase and the fort be located there. The report is a long one, but in substance each of these officers recommends that the change be made.

The bill which I have offered as an amendment has passed the Senate without opposition and it was prepared by the War Department and sent to me to be introduced in the Senate at the time it was passed with such modifications as the committee had made. The necessity of the change for military purposes is fully set forth and also the necessity of it for the protection of the canal and the bridges across into Canada of the railroad companies.

The only reason I desire to have it put upon this bill is that it has passed the Senate and it is kindred to this bill, in order that both these bills may become a law, and I shall ask a conference committee in regard to it.

Mr. MAXEY. If the bill under consideration for the purchase of grounds in San Antonio for military purposes were a Senate bill, I should certainly make no objection; but the Senator from Michigan knows the situation in which I am placed. The bill that has now been reached has passed the House. It was reported with a conclusive report in its favor by the Committee on Military Affairs by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. Those directly interested in the passage of the bill fear that the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, which has nothing whatever to do with the pending bill, but is a separate and distinct bill itself, would endanger and probably lose both in the House. That is the only objection they have to it.

Believing that it is my duty to act toward those who are responsible for the House bill and knowing that it is not their desire to have the amendment put on, I sincerely hope the Senator will not insist upon the amendment. I do not wish to do anything against the wishes of those who have engineered the bill successfully to its present point, and it being a House bill, I would greatly prefer that the Senator should take some other occasion to pass his bill. I know his bill is right. I once reported on that bill myself; I am not objecting to it on that ground; but at this stage of the session, I fear that it would endanger the passage of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. There can possibly be no objection to the measure I have offered. Both are for procuring military sites and regulating them. They are kindred objects. They are both for the interest of the Government, not for individuals or for corporations, and both have been recommended by the Secretary of War as necessary for the military purposes for which they are proposed. In a committee of conference there can be no possible doubt this will be agreed on, it having passed the Senate and no objection being made to it anywhere. The bill itself in fact came drafted from the Secretary of War, and I take the usual course which it is very proper to take to secure the passage of both these bills. My amendment can not jeopardize the House bill, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. MAXEY. I have said——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair having indulged the Senator from Michigan will indulge the Senator from Texas, but under the rule no Senator has the right to be heard more than once on the same question.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to say that no man in the Senate is more accommodating than myself. If it was a question of my own and this was a Senate bill I would not say a word. I have explained why it is that I regard it as a duty to object to the amendment. If the Senate sees proper to put it on, I can not help myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONGER. The title should be amended by adding the words: "And to provide for the sale of the old site of Fort Brady, Michigan, and for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title will be so amended, there being no objection.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to; and by unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. COCKRELL, Mr. CONGER, and Mr. HARRISON were appointed.

NATIONAL CEMETERY AT NATCHEZ.

The bill (H. R. 1341) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Natchez, Miss., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $10,000 for the construction of a macadamized road from the city of Natchez, Miss., to the national cemetery near that city, and provides that the right of way, not less than 75 feet in width, shall first be secured to the United States to the ground over which the road shall run, and that the road shall be constructed under the supervision of the Secretary of War, upon a contract let to the lowest bidder.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The amendments to this bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment is, in line 6, after the word "macadamized," to insert "or gravel."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 8, to strike out the word "seventy-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

That the right of way, not less than 50 feet in width, &c.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Mississippi whether or not these proposed amendments were considered in committee.

Mr. WALTHALL. They were recommended by the Secretary of War, and the committee did not receive his recommendation till after the bill was reported.

Mr. FRYE. They were not then voted on by the committee?

Mr. WALTHALL. No, sir; not before the bill was reported. I submitted them afterward.

Mr. FRYE. All right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 11) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories was announced as next in order.

Mr. TELLER. Let that go ever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CHRISTIAN BROTHERS' COLLEGE, SAINT LOUIS.

The bill (S. 2415) for the relief of the trustees of the Christian Brothers' College, of Saint Louis, Mo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to have the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army investigate the circumstances, character, and extent of the alleged occupation by the United States authorities, for Government purposes, during the late war, of the college building and grounds of the Christian Brothers in Saint Louis, Mo., the actual value of the use and occupation of that portion of the property occupied for the time it was occupied by the United States troops, the amount of damage to the real estate arising from and incident to such occupation, and to find and award and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury what amount, if any, is equitably due the trustees from the United States as the reasonable value of such use and occupation, and for damages to the buildings and grounds the natural result of such occupation. The Secretary of the Treasury is to pay to the trustees, or their successors, the amount, if any, so found to be due from the United States; and the acceptance by the trustees of any sum so paid is to be in full satisfaction of all claim of every name and nature for the occupation, and all damages resulting therefrom.

Mr. CONGER. Is there a report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is.

Mr. DOLPH. I will state that the report is very long. The bill was a long time before the committee.

Mr. CONGER. This bill appropriates money. I wish to know what the amount of damages supposed to be incurred was.

Mr. DOLPH. Whatever is allowed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. FRYE. How much was claimed?

Mr. DOLPH. The amount claimed was $30,000. The amount reported by the majority of the committee two years ago was $20,000. But the report will show that the actual damages would be much less.

Mr. CONGER. I understand this to be a war claim for damages arising during a state of war.

Mr. DOLPH. It is claimed and shown to the satisfaction of the committee that Saint Louis at the time the property was occupied was not in hostile territory so as to come within the rule laid down. The committee were not satisfied to report any given amount but preferred to refer it to the Secretary of War to investigate and examine into it upon such testimony as might be furnished.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose technically the fact is that the State of Missouri was not at any time within the rebellion. I will not make any objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES C. DUANE.

The bill (S. 1576) for the relief of Col. James C. Duane was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $648 to reimburse Col. James C. Duane, brevet brigadier-general, United States Army, for losses incurred in his office as engineer of the third light-house district through the forgeries committed by a clerk in his office, Henry J. Buete (who has fled the country), in raising his official checks to amounts greater than those for which they were drawn and signed, between the 1st of January and the 23d of June, 1879, without any negligence or fault on the part of Colonel Duane.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ILLEGAL TONNAGE DUES.

The bill (S. 1651) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make final adjustment of claims of certain foreign steamship companies arising from the illegal exaction of tonnage dues was announced as next in order.

Mr. FRYE. Is the report long?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ten or twelve pages, the Secretary states to the Chair.

Mr. ALDRICH. I object to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ALEXANDER K. SHEPARD.

The bill (H. R. 33) for the relief of Alexander K. Shepard was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Claims reported an amendment, in line 5 to strike out "$17,268.53," and insert "$14,458.04;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and required to pay to Alexander K. Shepard, of Tuscaloosa, Ala., the sum of $14,458.04 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HARRISON. There seems to be a minority report there. I think that had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM TALBERT.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I enter a motion for the reconsideration of Order of Business 952, being the bill (S. 1554) for the relief of William Talbert. My object in entering the motion is to call up the House bill, which is identical with this, which has just passed the House. When that comes here I should like to have that taken up instead of this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's motion will be entered.

SAMUEL P. EVANS.

The bill (S. 277) for the relief of Samuel P. Evans was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Samual P. Evans $1,154.04 as fees for services rendered by him as marshal after the expiration of his term of office and before his successor was appointed and qualified.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM FISHER.

The bill (H. R. 7470) for the relief of William Fisher was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the sum of $231.30, being the amount of revenue tax imposed by law upon William Fisher, of Franklin County, Virginia, for the manufacture of 257 gallons of distilled spirits which were destroyed by fire at the house of Fisher on the 11th of March, 1885, without fault or negligence upon his part, and the interest and penalties imposed for the non-payment of the tax shall be released and remitted to him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

The bill (H. R. 6637) relating to contested elections was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 19, after the word "elections," to insert the words "and the same shall be kept by him in the Capitol;" so as to read:

That section 127 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be so amended as to read as follows:

"All officers taking testimony to be used in a contested-election case, whether by deposition or otherwise, shall, when the taking of the same is completed, and without necessary delay, certify and carefully seal and immediately forward the same, by mail or by express, addressed to the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, Washington, D. C.; and shall also indorse upon the envelope containing such deposition or testimony the name of the case in which it is taken, together with the name of the party in whose behalf it is taken, and shall subscribe such indorsement.

"The Clerk of the House of Representatives, upon the receipt of such deposition or testimony, shall file the same with the clerk of the Committee on Elections, and the same shall be kept by him in the Capitol," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 45, after the word "printed," to insert the words "as he shall determine;" so that the paragraph will read:

If either party, after having been duly notified, should fail to attend, by himself or by an attorney, the clerk of the committee shall proceed to open the packages, and shall cause such portions of the testimony as he shall be of opinion ought to be printed, as he shall determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, in the following words:

That the clerk of the Committee on Elections shall hold his office until his successor is appointed and qualified. He shall receive for his services $2,000 per annum; and he shall prepare, when directed by the committee, for publication, a digest of election cases, but shall not be entitled to additional compensation therefor.

Mr. HOAR. The words "to be printed" ought to be repeated. I move to amend in line 44, inserting after the word "testimony" the words "to be printed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BUSH & GRIGSBY.

The bill (S. 1534) for the relief of John P. Bush and James Grigsby was announced as next in order.

Mr. BERRY. There is a House bill in precisely the same language as that bill. I move that the House bill be considered in lieu of the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to consider the House bill of the same title. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill (H. R. 2953) for the relief of John P. Bush and James Grigsby was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to John P. Bush and James Grigsby, doing a distilling business at Glennville, in the county of Washington, Kentucky, under the firm-name and style of Bush & Grigsby, of $1,029.34, in full for taxes paid by them for and on account of deficiencies in not producing 80 per cent. of the producing capacity of their distillery as established by law, by reason of unavoidable accidents, which occurred during the months of February, March, April, and May, 1875.

Mr. FRYE. Is the amount the same in both bills?

Mr. BERRY. Precisely the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill No. 1534 will be indefinitely postponed.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

The bill (S. 778) to equalize the bounties of soldiers, sailors, and marines of the late war for the Union was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that go over. We can not consider that now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill, being objected to, goes over.

COMMERCIAL PRIVILEGES.

The bill (S. 2392) to limit the commercial privileges of vessels of foreign countries in the ports of the United States to such purposes as are accorded to American vessels in the ports of such foreign countries was announced as next in order.

Mr. FRYE. That bill has become a law in the form of an amendment to another bill, and may as well be indefinitely postponed. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

PATRICK COOK.

The bill (S. 1018) for the relief of Patrick Cook was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Patrick Cook, a resident of the District of Columbia, $1,500, being the amount awarded him by the late board of audit for and on account of damages to his real estate in the city of Washington, one-half of the sum to be chargeable to the revenue derived from taxation within the District of Columbia.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. BLACKBURN May 17, 1886, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1018) for the relief of Patrick Cook, having considered the same, report as follows:

That on the 20th of January, 1875, Patrick Cook filed before the board of audit a claim for damages to certain lots belonging to him in the city of Washington, in square No. 24, said damages occasioned by public improvements in excavating Twenty-fourth street northwest, between M and N streets; and on the 3d of August, 1875, the board of audit, after inspection, awarded to said Patrick Cook the sum of $1,500, that sum being the one-half of the amount claimed by him in his said petition. The said sum of $1,500 was, however, not paid to the said Patrick Cook, for the reason that the board of audit was legislated out of existence before they had prepared and issued to him the necessary certificate; and thus the claim now stands. Your committee think that he should be paid the $1,500 adjudged by the board of audit as due to him, and to that end report the accompanying bill with recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see any one of that committee present. I should like to make some inquiries as to whether there are any other claims of this same class; whether there may not be other claims, and this simply be a precedent for them. The board is defunct, having been legislated out of existence. This may be a precedent to bring in a large class of claims, and as there is no member of the committee present I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill, being objected to, goes over.

BILLS POSTPONED INDEFINITELY.

The bill (S. 711) to establish the meaning of the word "month" in the statutes of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. FRYE. That and the next three bills in order are adversely reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the three cases will go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not postpone them indefinitely, unless they are wanted to be retained on the Calendar.

Mr. FRYE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move then to indefinitely postpone Senate bill 711.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the other two be passed over, the bill (S. 1877) for the relief of John McNaughton, and the bill (S. 1822) for the relief of Maj. E. A. Hancock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

YELLOWSTONE RIVER PARK.

The bill (S. 2436) to amend sections 2474 and 2475 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, setting apart a certain tract of land lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River as a public park, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is quite a lengthy bill, and the Senator who reported it [Mr. MANDERSON] is not present. As my colleague [Mr. VEST] takes an interest in it, and is not here, it had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

INSURANCE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 1213) to regulate insurance in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 9, after the word "policies," to strike out "of" and insert "or;" so as to read:

That no company hereafter organized or incorporated within the District of Columbia shall transact the business of insurance in any of its branches unless the whole capital of such company be not less than $100,000, actually and in good faith paid up in full, in cash, excepting life-insurance companies which issue to their members policies or certificates agreeing to pay benefits or sums of money which are to be realized by assessments levied upon the members; no other capital than such assessments shall be required of them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 12 of section 1, after the word "them," to strike out—

A majority of the directors or trustees of such insurance companies shall reside within said District.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 4, after the word "December," to insert "accompanied by a list of the names of the stockholders;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That every insurance company doing business in said District must transmit to the commissioners of the District a statement of its condition and business for the year ending on the preceding 31st day of December, accompanied by a list of the names of the stockholders, which statement shall be rendered on the 1st day of January following, or within sixty days thereafter, except that foreign companies shall transmit their statements of business, other than that done in the United States, prior to the following 1st day of July, which statements must be in form and state the particulars required by the blanks prescribed by the commissioners.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after section 5, to insert as a new section:

SEC. 6. That each insurance company doing business in the District of Columbia shall attach to each policy issued by such company a copy of the application made by the insured, so that the whole contract may appear in said application and policy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIREMENT OF ARMY OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 2193) to retire disabled officers of the Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that that be indefinitely postponed. It is reported adversely.

The motion was agreed to.

EDWARD D. PATCHIN.

The bill (S. 2455) granting a pension to Edward D. Patchin was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 18, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Edward D. Patchin, have examined the same, and report:

The petitioner is a son of Bernard Patchin, who, as shown by the report of the Adjutant-General, was a private in Company B, Forty-first Ohio Volunteers, was enrolled September 30, 1862, died of disease at Nashville, Tenn., January 17, 1863. Officer's certificate shows that he died of typhoid fever contracted in line of duty; that at the time he entered the service he was a young man of good health and habits. The Pension Office records show that the widow and two minor children were pensioned; that the widow remarried in 1865, and that the two sons, Edward D. and Charles B. Patchin, were continued on the roll until the expiration of the time limited for their receiving a pension.

The petitioner now prays for the passage of a special act placing him on the pension-roll by reason of an accident whereby he has been crippled for life and disqualified for engaging in active employment. He is now about twenty-five years of age, and says he is the only surviving issue of the said Bernard Patchin; that he is not able to perform manual labor, and that he has no means of support.

His identity is established by the testimony of three witnesses, who say he is the only surviving issue of the soldier; that he is hoplessly maimed for life, and that he has no means of support.

In view of his helpless condition, and of his being deprived of support and protection, the committee report the accompanying bill for his relief with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made the bill goes over.

MARY KARSTETTER.

The bill (H. R. 2043) to place Mary Karstetter on the pension-roll, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that Mary Karstetter, widow of Jacob Karstetter, a soldier in the volunteer service of Pennsylvania, be placed on the pension-roll as the widow of a soldier.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEEL FOR ORDNANCE.

Mr. HAWLEY. The next two orders on the Calendar may be passed over, the bill (S. 662) to encourage the manufacture of steel for modern army ordnance, armor, and other army purposes, and to provide heavy ordnance adapted to modern army warfare, and the bill (S. 663) to encourage the manufacture of steel for modern naval ordnance, armor, shafting, and other naval purposes, and to provide heavy ordnance adapted to modern naval warfare.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bills will go over.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not wish to enter an objection; I merely ask that they may be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The effect is exactly the same. They hold their places on the Calendar under the rule for to-day.

MEXICAN WAR PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 807) granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war was announced as next in order.

Mr. TELLER. That had better go over. It can not be considered under this order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is objected to, and goes over.

GUTHERZ'S "FARMING IN DAKOTA."

The bill (S. 2457) providing for the purchase of the painting entitled "Farming in Dakota" was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $3,000 for the purchase of the painting entitled "Farming in Dakota," by Carl Gutherz.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT LAND IN LOUISIANA AND MICHIGAN.

The bill (H. R. 985) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer the United States barracks at Baton Rouge, La., to the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College, at said place for educational purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments: In line 6, after the words "Baton Rouge," to insert the words "the possession of;" in line 9, after the word "line," to strike out the word "fifty" and insert the words "one hundred;" in line 11, after the word "Texas," to strike out the word "railroad" and insert "railway;" and in line 21, after the words "United States," to strike out "they" and insert the words "the possession of the same;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College, at Baton Rouge, the possession of the buildings and grounds of the United States barracks at Baton Rouge, for the purposes of the said university and college, except that portion of said grounds that lies westward of a line 100 feet east of the center of the railroad track of the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas Railway Company, and said excepted lands may be used and occupied by said railroad company; but should said railroad company cease to use and occupy said lands, then the possession shall revert to the United States: Provided, however, That the board of managers of the said university and college shall keep the buildings in good repair and insured for the use of the United States: And provided further, That whenever the said buildings and grounds cease to be used for educational purposes by the said university and college, or when required by the Secretary of War for the use of the United States, the possession of the same shall revert to the Government of the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I move to add as an additional section at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. 2. That fractional section 1 and lot numbered 4, section 2, township 48 north, range 25 west, in the district of lands subject to sale at Marquette, Mich., except a tract 220 feet by 190 feet, containing 1 acre, on the extreme north end of said tract, being a light-house reservation, be, and the same are, granted to the city of Marquette, Mich., to be held in trust for the purpose of a public park, reserving the right of way on the above-granted land to the above-excepted tract: Provided, That if the above-granted land shall cease to be used for park purposes the same shall revert to the United States: Provided further, That Congress reserves the right at any time to alter or amend this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER].

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan if that question has been referred to any committee of the Senate?

Mr. CONGER. I was about to read from the report of the House committee containing the recommendation of Vice-Admiral Rowan and the Light-House Board.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has it been reported by any committee of the Senate?

Mr. CONGER. It has not.

Mr. COCKRELL. And it has not been presented in the Senate?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir; I presented a bill for this purpose.

Mr. COCKRELL. To what committee was it referred?

Mr. CONGER. To the Committee on Commerce. It relates to a light-house reservation.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is not the Senator the chairman of that committee?

Mr. CONGER. No, I am not; I am a humble member of that committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator is a member of the committee, and I should think he would not want to have a bill pending before his own committee taken away from that committee.

Mr. CONGER. In order that the bill may pass, if it is a proper one to become a law, I have asked that it be appended to this House bill. It is the recommendation of the House Committee on Public Lands. It is also the recommendation of Vice-Admiral Rowan in the report which I have here, and the recommendation of C. S. Fairchild, acting Secretary of the Treasury, that this rocky promontory overlooking Lake Superior at Marquette, which has been reserved for thirty or forty years for light-house purposes, may be given to the city of Marquette in trust for a public park. Mr. Peter White, of that town, has offered to spend several thousand dollars in making it an agreeable place of resort for the people of the United States. It is useless for agricultural or mineral or timber purposes. I have here a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury. I have also the letter of Vice-Admiral Rowan, the chairman of the Light-House Board, the closing part of which is as follows:

Recommendation is, therefore, respectfully made, that the proper steps be taken by the Department for the relinquishment of the reservation in question, except as to the acre and right of way above specified, the right of the board to use any part of the reservation that may be needed hereafter for light-house purposes to be reserved.

I will say that at Marquette, on another point near the entrance into Marquette Harbor we have a light-house erected, and that there may never be a necessity for a light-house on this point. It is the wish of the citizens that they may use it as a public park, and the Secretary of the Treasury and the Light-House Board both recommend its use for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONGER. The title should be amended by adding "and granting to the city of Marquette, Mich., certain lands for park purposes."

Mr. WALTHALL. I move to amend the title further by striking out the word "War" and inserting "the Interior;" so as to read "Secretary of the Interior." This is one of the abandoned reservations which as passed into the charge of the Interior Department.

Mr. CONGER. The ground covered by my amendment is still a light-house reservation, and is only granted temporarily, or as long as Congress may desire, for park purposes. I do not know why that change in the title should be made. However, if the Senator from Mississippi insists I do not care.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title will be reported as proposed to be amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to transfer the United States barracks at Baton Rouge, La., to the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College, at said place, for educational purposes, and granting to the city of Marquette, Mich., certain lands for park purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title will stand as reported, if there be no objection.

Mr. CONGER. I now ask for a committee of conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. WALTHALL, Mr. CONGER, and Mr. TELLER were appointed.

GEORGIA STATE CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 2457) for the relief of the State of Georgia was announced as next in order.

Mr. LOGAN. I object to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is objected to and goes over.

COURTS IN EASTERN MICHIGAN.

The bill (S. 1458) to provide for holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Michigan at Bay City, in said district, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISS EULA E. HENRY.

The bill (S. 2414) for the relief of Miss Eula E. Henry was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Postmaster-General in his discretion to credit the account of Miss Eula E. Henry, late postmaster at Centre Point, Ark., with $202, lost by a robbery of the mails at or near Hope, Ark., on or about November 13, 1884.

Mr. BUTLER. If there is a report in that case let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MAXEY May 19, 1886:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 2414) for the relief of Miss Eula E. Henry, respectfully submits the following report:

That Miss Henry was postmaster at Center Point, Howard County, Arkansas, prior to September 12, 1884, and has so been continuously from and since that date; that as such postmaster it was her duty to make remittances to the postmaster at Little Rock, Ark., of money collected for money-orders issued from her office.

It appears that she made the following remittances to the postmaster at Little Rock, to wit: 1884, September 12, in registered package 67, the sum of $47; 1884, November 15, in registered package 45, the sum of $10; 1884, November 22, in registered package 53, the sum of $133; 1884, November 27, in registered package 56, the sum of $12, making total $202, all inclosed in official envelopes, and sealed in the presence of Alice Henry, and each package addressed to the postmaster at Little Rock, Ark., and in the presence of the same witness placed in the mail-sack for Nashville, Howard County, Arkansas, and in the presence of said witness delivered to the proper mail-carrier, and that she, the said postmaster, Eula E. Henry, in due time received from the postmaster at Nashville, Ark., a receipt for said registered package, but that she has never received a receipt therefor from the postmaster at Little Rock, Ark.

About the remittance there does not appear to be question by the Post-Office Department. The Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department, Edwin E. Bryant, esq., writes to Miss Henry, February 5, 1886, that she had not asked for credit for the above amounts within three months from the date of the loss, and that under the proviso to the act approved March 17, 1882, which requires the claim to be made within three months from the date of loss, the credit can not be given. It does appear, however, that on December 9, 1884, which was less than three months from the date of the first loss, she did notify the Superintendent of the Money-Order System of the loss of the remittances of November 15, 22, 27, 1884. The exact character of remittances is set forth of the above dates in the form prescribed by the Department.

In addition to the foregoing Miss Henry wrote to the Department December 6, 1884, notifying the Department of the robberies going on between her office and Little Rock, and requesting to be advised if she should still continue to remit to Little Rock. Replying to the letter of Mr. Bryant, that she had failed to formally advise the Department within three months of the loss, she says she was daily expecting discovery of the thief, and that she was young, inexperienced, and had no one to advise her. The fact that robbery of the mails in that vicinity about that time was largely carried on was developed before the committee in the case of Rosa Wallace, postmaster at Washington, Ark., who has been relieved of her losses at the present session.

The committee is of opinion that the transmission of the sums set forth and in due form has been fully proven, the loss has been fully proven, and the only error of Miss Henry was the technical error of failing to report within three months, and that she satisfactorily accounts for the failure.

The object of the bill is simply to enable the Department to settle her accounts the same as if her report had been made within the three months, and this the committee believes equitable; wherefore the bill is reported back without amendment with recommendation that it pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH H. MADDOX AND OTHERS.

The bill (S. 565) for the relief of Joseph H. Maddox and others was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri object?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be passed over under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is objected to and goes over.

Mr. GORMAN subsequenty said: During my absence I understand that the bill (S. 565) for the relief of Joseph H. Maddox and others was reached on the Calendar and passed over. I ask leave to go back to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that all matters in relation to the agreement of Joseph H. Maddox and his associates, made with the supervising agent of the Treasury, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the delivery of tobacco and other property, under the permit, safeguard, and orders of the President of the United States, shall be referred to the accounting officers of the Treasury Department for determination upon the evidence taken and now on file in the office of the clerk of the United States Court of Claims and the War Department; and directs the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust, settle, and pay to Maddox the amount found to be due him, in his own right as well as assignee, on account of the loss and damage sustained by him and his associates by the seizures by the military forces of the United States of the tobacco purchased by them under their agreement, and which was actually taken and seized by the United States, by or under the orders of a military officer or officers, which amount shall not exceed the value of the tobacco at the time it was taken.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 4, after the word "Maddox," I move to strike out the words "and his associates" and insert "Benjamin F. Camp and D. P. Parr, parties of the one part;" after the word "with," in the same line, to insert the words "H. A. Risley;" and in line 6, after the word "Treasury," to insert "dated November 13, 1864, and sanctioned by President Lincoln on November 17, 1864;" so as to make the first part of the bill read:

That all matters in relation to the agreement of Joseph H. Maddox, Benjamin F. Camp, and D. P. Parr, parties of the one part, made with H. A. Risley, the supervising agent of the Treasury, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, dated November 13, 1864, and sanctioned by President Lincoln on November 17, 1864, for the delivery of tobacco and other property, &c.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Does the bill authorize the payment of assigned claims to be paid the assignee? I think there is a statute preventing that.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is just the assignment of his copartners. This pays all to him.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It is the assignment of a claim simply to one copartner.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to know a little more about the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I can state all about it in a moment.

Mr. LOGAN. Just explain it.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I will explain the matter to the Senator from Illinois. July 2, 1864, Congress passed an act empowering the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury to authorize agents—

To purchase for the United States any products of States declared in insurrection at such places therein as shall be designated by him, at such price as shall be agreed on with the seller, not exceeding the market price thereof at the place of delivery, nor exceeding three-fourths of the market value thereof in the city of New York, at the latest quotations known to the agent purchasing.

In pursuance of the several provisions of the act a contract was entered into with Maddox, Parr, and Camp authorizing them to proceed South and purchase gold-bearing products in the insurrectionary States then engaged in rebellion. The object of the act evidently was to deprive those engaged in war against the Government of the sinews of war, gold-bearing products. The contract was entered into and was submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, approved by him, and a safe-conduct was issued by the President of the United States, Mr. Lincoln, over his own signature, as follows:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, November 17, 1864.

An authorized agent of the Treasury Department having, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, contracted for the products above mentioned, and the parties having agreed to sell and deliver the same to the said agent, it is ordered that products moving in compliance with and for fulfillment of said contract, and being transported to said agent or under his direction, shall be passed from seizure and detention by any officer of the Government; and commanders of military departments, districts, posts, and detachments, naval stations, gunboats, flotillas, and fleets will observe this order, and give the said B.

F. Camp, J. H. Maddox, and D. P. Parr, their agents and transports, free and unmolested passage, for the purpose of getting said products, or any part thereof, through the lines, and safe-conduct through our lines, excepting blockaded lines, while the same are moving, with strict compliance with regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury, and for the fulfillment of said contract with the agent of the Government.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

In pursuance of this contract, which was made with a special agent of the Treasury Department, Mr. Risley, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, approved furthermore by the President of the United States, Mr. Lincoln, by the safe-conduct issued in pursuance of it, they went South and purchased an amount of tobacco for the purpose of bringing it to Norfolk, Va., to turn it over to the United States authorities. While in transit the property so purchased, and for which they paid their money, was captured, notwithstanding the safe-conduct, by the Federal troops. A portion of it was burnt. Of course no claim could be made properly for that, but so far as the property was taken by United States officers and devoted to the use of the United States Army a claim is made.

The bill simply authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to investigate and find out what amount was so lost and to pay it. That is about the sum and substance of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. The only object I had was to understand the proposition. I see the statement is made that it was a contract with Mr. Risley. It was a contract in what way? Was the Government purchasing tobacco? Did the Government purchase the tobacco, or were these people purchasing it for speculation?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Government was authorized by Congress to do this very thing, and the contract provided that the Government was to receive one-fourth and the parties purchasing the property three-fourths of the profits of the enterprise. This was authorized by a law of Congress.

Mr. LOGAN. I recollect very well that there was an order of the United States Government against paying for any commodities within the lines of the enemy in gold. I intend to understand this bill before it is passed, not that I am objecting to it, but I want to understand it and I want Senators to understand it. To say that it was a contract with the Government will not do. Parties went to the President of the United States under that law and asked permits to go and purchase property for themselves—tobacco, cotton, and sundry things. The permits were given, but the parties went on their own responsibility. They were merely permitted to pass through the lines and to have a safe-conduct and to pay in gold for these things.

By examining the law you will find that when the agents or other persons took possession of the cotton and abandoned property, the Government was entitled to one-fourth of the profits and they were entitled to the balance; but in regard to the purchase of this tobacco, when it is stated now at this late day that it was a contract with the Government to purchase tobacco for the Government, that can not be the fact; nor to purchase cotton for the Government. It could not be a contract of that kind; and to call merely a permit for a person to pass through the lines to purchase property for the purpose of speculating on it, a contract with the Government, is going further than I propose to allow the law to be construed, if I can help it, because I do not believe it.

So far as the tobacco is concerned and this man's rights, that is another thing, but I do not desire to sit here and allow the construction given so that hereafter every claim which can be possibly brought against the Government may be paid under one construction or another. One day we hear the construction given that if an Army officer entered a town with his army and issued a proclamation to the people that if they would only be quiet their property would be protected, they are entitled to damages for all the property which might have been destroyed in any way whatever, and that they shall be paid for it by the Government. That construction has been given here on the floor of the Senate.

That is not the law, and nobody ever thought of its being the law until within the last two or three months. Nobody ever before heard of such a construction given to the law, and there is no basis for it to be found anywhere on the face of God's earth in the laws of war. There never has been any such law, but it is coming to be so asserted now, and I do not desire to see it go any further.

I do not wish to discuss the proposition as to the rights of these people; they may have rights; but I do object to this being called a contract with the Government, where a permit was given to a man to pass through the lines for his own profit and gain, that therefore it is a contract with the Government and the Government is responsible for every dollar's worth of property that he purchased. Millions of dollars' worth of cotton were bought down in the South. I can give one instance, at Jackson, Tenn., where a man in Illinois had a permit to pass through the lines and purchase cotton. He purchased 300 bales of cotton and paid gold for it, and my troops burned every pound of it, and he has never asked to be paid, because I told him he could not get it; and he ought not to have it either. He took the risk when he passed through the lines and had the permit of the President. He took the risk of the fortunes of war and lost his property, and he is not entitled to have the Government pay for it.

A man who passed through the lines under a permit of the President took the risk of the fortunes of war just the same as the man who was in arms against the Government. They stood upon the same basis precisely, and you will find no law regulating the principles governing warfare that will recognize such a man as standing in any other light; and when he passed through the lines on his own responsibility and has only protection for the property, it can not be claimed that the Government should be responsible for it if he loses it. In that way millions of dollars would be paid out of the Treasury.

This is the first case I ever heard of where one of the men passing through the lines with a permit and his property was destroyed is proposed to be paid by the Government for his property.

Mr. HOAR. Is there any proposition here to pay for the property?

Mr. LOGAN. What is the proposition then? I should like to know before the bill passes how much tobacco was taken by the Federal forces and what this man claims. Here is a claim, no estimate made, no account to refer to, nothing of that kind; and is he to be allowed to come in and prove anything he chooses to prove at this late day before the Court of Claims and get a judgment against the Government for it? Is that the argument? I say this is too loose a way of legislating in reference to property and in reference to values and in reference to money to be paid out of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well. I am perfectly willing it should expire. I object to the case until I understand more about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois objects, and the bill goes over.

SAMUEL NOBLE.

The bill (S. 2475) for the relief of Samuel Noble was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to have the case reported back to Congress. I shall move to strike out the words "to render final judgment" and to insert "to report the same back to Congress," at the end of line 18. Instead of making it an ordinary case, let the court be required to report it back to Congress, as they have been doing in so many cases.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that the facts in this case have already been passed upon by the Court of Claims after full investigation.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then why is it proposed to refer it back to the Court of Claims?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The object of the bill is simply to remove the effect of the statute of limitations. That was the only question. That being the case, the committee thought that it would not be a matter of justice to this claimant to have the case come back to Congress again.

Mr. COCKRELL. Did the court in that investigation determine the amount? There was a great deal of difference in the value put upon cotton during the war. It ranged from $1.25 down to 50 cents a pound.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not think there was any question about the amount, but there was a technical reason why the court could not render a judgment in favor of the claimant. The matter was considered very carefully by the Committee on Claims. There was no dissenting opinion. It was the unanimous belief of the Committee on Claims that it was a case wherein the statute of limitations should be waived.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be passed over, and I will look into it.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri object?

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that it be passed over under the rule on which we are acting. I shall object, if necessary.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I will state that the case immediately preceding the case of Maddox, in which the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] takes some interest, as he introduced the bill, is something of a very similar nature.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know that.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I wish the Senator from Missouri would look into that case also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SOLDIERS' HOME BARRACKS.

The bill (H. R. 5401) making appropriations for additional barracks at the Southern, Northwestern, and Western Branches of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROADS IN MONTANA.

The bill (S. 2281) granting to railroads the right of way through the Indian reservation in Northern Montana was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, in section 1, line 13, after the word "feet," to strike out the words "on each side of the central line of said road" and insert "in width;" and in line 19, after the word "amount," to strike out the words "twenty acres" and insert "three hundred feet in width and three thousand feet in length;" so as to make the section read:

That the right of way through the Indian reservation in Northern Montana set apart for the use of the Gros Ventre, Piegan, Blood, Blackfeet, and other Indians, by act of Congress approved April 17, A. D. 1874, is hereby granted to any railroad company duly organized under the laws of any State or Territory, except the District of Columbia, or by the Congress of the United States, which shall have filed with the Secretary of the Interior a copy of its articles of incorporation, and due proofs of its organization under the same, to the extent of 100 feet in width; also the right to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road material, stone, earth, and timber necessary for the construction of said railroad; also ground adjacent to such right of way for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, not to exceed in amount 300 feet in width and 3,000 feet in length for each station, to the extent of one station for each 10 miles of its road.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. In section 1, line 6, "April 17" should be "April 15." The act referred to was approved April 15, 1874. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 16th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 121) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road;

An act (S. 2053) for the relief of Chester A. Arthur and William H. Robertson, late collectors of the customs of the district of the city of New York;

REMOVAL OF EASTERN CHEROKEES.

The bill (S. 1799) for the removal of the Eastern Cherokee Indians to the Indian Territory was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $20,000 to pay for the removal and subsistence of those members of the Eastern band of Cherokees who have removed themselves, as well as those who may now or hereafter desire to remove, to the Cherokee Nation, in the Indian Territory, at the rate of $53.33 per head, being the amount specified in the eighth article of the Cherokee treaty of December 29, 1835, and the act of Congress approved July 29, 1848.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some report explaining that matter.

Mr. DAWES. This arises from a negotiation which has been going on by the Interior Department with the remnant of the Cherokees who still remain in North Carolina. Originally, in the early treaty of 1835, I think it was, it was provided that out of a certain fund which belonged to the Cherokees there should be paid $53.33 to each one of the Cherokees of North Carolina who would remove and become a part of the Cherokee Nation.

For a long time that was done by individual Indians, and a good many years passed. Then after a while the sum so appropriated, it being supposed that no more of them would go, was set apart by an act of Congress for another beneficial purpose for the Indians in North Carolina. Since then the Indians in North Carolina have been more and more inclined to join their brethren in the Indian Territory, and now the Secretary of the Interior and the Indian Commissioner have an idea that they will get them all there. At any rate, there is quite a body of them ready to go now. They are entitled each one as fast as he shall go to the $53.33.

It would not be necessary to have an act of Congress to authorize the payment of it had it not been that some time in the past, supposing that there would be no further use of that kind, the fund was set apart by an act of Congress for other beneficial purposes.

Mr. COCKRELL. This comes out of the Treasury? It does not come out of the Indian funds?

Mr. DAWES. No, it is a fund in the Treasury which belongs to the Indians. It is not United States money, but it has been by act of Congress taken under the possession of the United States, and the Government still holds it to be money belonging to those Cherokees.

Mr. COCKRELL. If you make it come out of the Indian fund and amend the bill so that it will come out of the Indian fund, it is all right; but if not, it is all wrong. I do not think that because about the year 1833 or 1835 we may have agreed to pay these Indians a certain amount if they would leave North Carolina and go over to the Indian Territory, they can be allowed to stay there and raise two or three generations and then all of them get $53.33 apiece. I do not believe that any such contract or obligation exists, actual or implied.

Mr. DAWES. When we purchased of the Indians east of the Mississippi River their possessions, in our agreements, and the consideration which we pledged those Indians that we would pay them for that land, among other things was this sum of money.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it a continuing contract, that they can stay there and raise three or four generations of children, and then all of them get $53.33 a head?

Mr. DAWES. There was no limitation upon the time in which they should go. I have no question about the Senator's concurring in this measure if he will sit down and look at it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it come out of the Indian fund and it will be all right; I shall then have no objection to it at all; but I do not want it to come out of the Treasury, out of the tax-payers.

Mr. DAWES. I have no objection to such phraseology as the Senator suggests, except that the Treasury and the Interior Departments have framed the bill themselves to meet the accounts in the Treasury between them and the Cherokee Indians. I would consent to any change of phraseology that I knew would not thwart the whole measure.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it read:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior out of the funds of the said tribes.

Let them expend their own money in that way if they want to do so.

Mr. DAWES. I have the message of the President on this subject, which I ask may be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Read the whole document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The document will be read.

The Chief Clerk read Senate Executive Document No. 84, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of 52th ultimo from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting, with accompanying papers, a draught of a bill, recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for the payment of money claimed under alleged existing treaty stipulations and laws by such Eastern Cherokee Indians as have removed or shall hereafter remove themselves to the Indian Territory.

The matter is presented for the consideration of Congress.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 2, 1886.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, February 25, 1886.

To the President:

I have the honor to submit herewith a draught of proposed legislation, prepared in the Office of Indian Affairs, entitled "A bill for the removal of the Eastern Cherokee Indians to the Indian Territory," for which purpose the sum of $20,000 is estimated to be appropriated thereunder.

This bill provides for the payment not only of the expenses of removal of such of the said Indians as may desire to remove West, at the rate of $53.33 each, but also for the payment of certain of the Eastern Cherokees who heretofore have so removed at their own expense, and who are entitled to reimbursement at the rate above stated for such expenses.

A copy of report of 20th instant from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, transmitting the draught of bill to this Department, which recites the various provisions of the treaties and laws bearing upon the subject, together with a copy of the letter of the Cherokee attorney mentioned therein, is also herewith.

The Commissioner recommends the appropriation. I respectfully request that the matter may be presented to Congress for such action as that body may find to be right and proper.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 20, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith a copy of a communication, dated Washington, D. C., January 20, 1886, from J. M. Bryan, attorney, inviting attention to certain claims of North Carolina Cherokees for removal and subsistence-money they are entitled to receive under the provisions of the treaties of 1835, 1836, 1846, and an act of Congress approved July 29, 1848 (9 Stats., page 264).

By the eighth article of the New Echota treaty of December 29, 1835, with the Cherokees (7 Stats., page 482), the United States agreed to remove these Indians west, the price for removal being fixed at $20 and one year's subsistence at $33.33 for each of such persons who might prefer to remove themselves.

By the third article of the supplementary treaty of March 1, 1836 (7 Stats., page 488), the sum of $600,000 was allowed to the Cherokees in lieu of all claims of every nature and description against the United States, including the expenses of their removal.

By the eleventh article of the treaty of August 6, 1846 (9 Stats., page 873), the question whether the amount expended for the one year's subsistence should be paid out of Government or Cherokee funds was submitted to the Senate for decision, as also the question if the Cherokees were to pay, whether the subsistence should be charged at a greater rate than $33.33 per head.

The fourth section of the act of July 29, 1848 (9 Stats., 264), directed the Secretary of War to ascertain the number of Indians remaining at the ratification of the New Echota treaty, May 23, 1836, and the Secretary of the Treasury to set apart a sum equal to $53.33 for each individual reported by the Secretary of War, upon which interest was to be paid at 6 per cent. per annum on such per capita.

The fifth section provided for the payment of the $55.33 for the removal and subsistence of such individual members as might thereafter desire to remove, upon their removal west, which amount was to be charged to the general Cherokee fund and reimbursed therefrom.

This fund, under the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stats., 447), was applied for the education, improvement, and civilization of these Indians, after certain specific acts and payments had been effected, and under the act of August 15, 1876 (19 Stats., 197), the balance of this fund, after certain payments therefrom, was placed to their credit upon the books of the Treasury Department, to bear interest at 5 per cent. per annum, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use annually, for agricultural implements and for educational purposes among said Indians, so much of the principal of said fund as, with the interest annually accummulating thereon, shall amount to $6,000.

In view of the fact that Congress has determined the uses to which this fund must be applied, and the Indians are without means for their removal, I am of the opinion that Congress should furnish the necessary means to enable the Department to effect their removal, as stipulated in the eighth article of their treaty of 1835.

I therefore respectfully recommend that Congress be requested to appropriate, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the cost of the removal and subsistence of those members of the tribe who have removed, as well as those who may now or hereafter desire to remove, at the rate of $53.33 per head.

I inclose herewith a draught of a bill covering the amount required to carry out the objects specified.

Very respectfully,

J. D C. ATKINS, Commissioner.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

A bill for the removal of the Eastern Cherokee Indians to the Indian Territory.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That for the amount necessary to pay for the removal and subsistence of those members of the Eastern band of Cherokees who have removed themselves, as well as those who may now or hereafter desire to remove, to the Cherokee Nation, in the Indian Territory, at the rate of $53.33 per head, being the amount specified in the eighth article of the Cherokee treaty of December 29, 1835, and the act of Congress approved July 29, 1848, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 20, 1886.

SIR: I respectfully beg leave to call your attention to a claim of North Carolina Cherokees, who removed from North Carolina to the Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory, about ten years ago.

The list of these claimants that I am representing is on file in the Indian Department, and every claim fully proven, as to number of persons and date of removal.

The claim is for their removal, and subsistence for one year.

Under Cherokee treaty of 1846, provision is made that all money due the Cherokees the United States Government agrees to pay 5 per cent. interest from the 12th of June, 1838.

Therefore we think it reasonable and just that these claimants should receive interest on the several sums due them from the date of their removal West, as it was their own funds placed in the hands of the United States Government for this special purpose, and to draw interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum.

It has been near nine years since these claims have been presented to the Government for payment.

I also submit a report from the Interior Department, dated February 10, 1885, for your information on these claims, and I respectfully ask that you will have their money appropriated and paid.

Very respectfully,

J. M. BRYAN,
For Claimants.

Hon. J. D. C. ATKINS,
Commissioner Indian Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 14, after the word "necessary," I move to insert the words "out of the balance of the general Cherokee fund;" so as to read:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of the balance of the general Cherokee fund, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator that he refer to the statute of August 15, 1876, which seems to apply to the fund that was originally intended for this purpose. By the act of March 3, 1875, the fund was applied to the education, improvement, and civilization of these Indians.

Mr. COCKRELL. The act of August 15, 1876, is the right one. That is what covers the balance.

Mr. DAWES. You would refer to that, would you not?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes. Let it read:

Out of the general Cherokee fund placed by the act of August 15, 1876, to their credit upon the books of the Treasury Department, and bearing interest at 5 per cent. per annum.

That will specify it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 14, after the word "necessary," it is proposed to insert:

Out of the balance of the general Cherokee fund placed by act of Congress of August 15, 1876, to their credit upon the books of the Treasury Department, and bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWES subsequently said: I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed Order of Business 1362, being Senate bill 1799.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was just going to make that motion myself.

Mr. DAWES. I beg the Senator's pardon. Let the bill be reconsidered and go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 1799) for the removal of the Eastern Cherokee Indians to the Indian Territory.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] now objects to the consideration of the bill, and it goes over.

WILLIAM TALBERT.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 3475) for the relief of William Talbert; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. This morning the Senate passed a bill (S. 1554) for the relief of William Talbert, and I find a bill has since passed the House of Representatives almost literally in the same language. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to have the House bill laid before the Senate by the presiding officer, and that it be considered in lieu of the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the Chair will lay the bill before the Senate.

The bill (H. R. 3475) for the relief of William Talbert was read the first time by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill at this time; is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the claim of William Talbert, of Montgomery County, Maryland, for the use by the Government of his patented improvement for marine railways, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, with authority to take jurisdiction thereof, and to award judgment thereon, according to its value to the Government during the existence of said patent, on principles of equity and justice.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move to amend the bill to make it conform strictly to the bill reported by the Senate committee by striking out the words "on principles of equity and justice" at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. LOGAN. It seems to me that under the bill, with that clause stricken out, the court would be compelled to give judgment for the claimant.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. No; the intention in striking out those words is simply to provide no new rule of trial; that it shall be tried as any other case to be tried in the court. The committee was under the impression that if the words "on the principles of equity and justice" were added to the bill, after provision for the trial, it might be held to suggest some new ground of trial, and not that it stand on its merits like any other case.

Mr. LOGAN. The court would have no power under the bill with that clause stricken out except to award a judgment against the Government in favor of the claimant. They would have no power to decide against him. They could only take jurisdiction for the purpose of awarding a judgment.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am willing that an amendment shall be made if the Senator thinks there is any doubt about it. I think the bill simply allows the court to take jurisdiction and decide the case. If the Senator prefers the language to remain in the bill as it came from the House, I really have no objection. I simply moved the amendment to make it conform to what was agreed upon by the Senate committee.

Mr. LOGAN. With that clause stricken out there is nothing in the bill except authority to the court to take jurisdiction and to award judgment against the Government. They would have no power under the bill to try the case and decide on the principles of equity as to whether the claimant is entitled to anything or not.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I ask the Senator to suggest an amendment. I am perfectly willing to agree to it.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest whether after striking out the words proposed by the Senator from Arkansas to follow the words "and award judgment thereon" by the words "for such amount as is found due, if anything," would not meet the view of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I think that would be a proper amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I suggest after "award judgment thereon" to insert the words "as the merits of the case may demand."

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I think that is right. I have no objection to that modification.

Mr. DOLPH. The bill seems to be a short one. I ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill as it will stand when amended as proposed.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the claim of William Talbert, of Montgomery County, Maryland, for the use by the Government of his patented improvement for marine railways be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, with authority to take jurisdiction thereof and to award judgment thereon, as the merits of the case may demand according to its value to the Government during the existence of such patent.

Mr. LOGAN. Strike out the words "to award judgment" and insert the amendment as I have offered it, "according to the merits or the case," because the case may have merits or it may not have. That will carry with it the right to award judgment for the amount if there is any amount to be allowed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be so modified if there be no objection.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Is there a report accompanying the Senate bill? If there is I should like to hear it read.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. There is a report.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The bill seems to authorize a suit upon a claim and the entry of judgment, as I understand it, and it does not provide for a report of the facts to Congress, as far as I see. If the report is not long I ask to have it read. Perhaps the Senator can state substantially the case and that will answer. All I want to know is what the general character of the claim is.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The claimant in this case invented a contrivance by which ships at the navy-yard here could be docked, drawing a foot or two more of water than was possible without his contrivance. He applied for a patent on it, and before the patent was obtained in the exigency of the time the Secretary of the Navy put his invention in use, and the Government has used it for a great length of time without compensation, beginning the use before the patent was obtained. That, I think, is the ground on which the Government put its refusal to pay for the use of the patent. The Secretary of the Navy and other officers recommend the adjudication of the claim and that justice be done the claimant.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Very well; that is a satisfactory explanation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 1554) for the relief of William Talbert, and that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the vote is reconsidered. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

AMENDMENT OF COPYRIGHT LAW.

The bill (S. 2496) to amend title 60, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] has charge of the bill and is absent. In his absence it is hardly worth while to read the bill and the report.

Mr. HARRISON. Let it go over. I make a formal objection.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the bill may go over without prejudice.

Mr. HARRISON. It does; it goes over till to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

BONDS OF EXECUTORS.

The bill (H. R. 7879) to amend the law relating to the bonds of executors in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that there is an amendment in manuscript which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] desires to have proposed to the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest that the bill had better go over, as neither the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] who reported the bill nor the Senator from Vermont is here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

JOHN KOUNS.

The bill (S. 897) for the relief of John Kouns was the next in order.

Mr. DOLPH. The vote indefinitely postponing the bill was reconsidered for the purpose of withdrawing the papers from the files of the Senate. I renew the motion to indefinitely postpone the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

THEODORE W. TALLMADGE.

The bill (H. R. 1905) for the relief of Theodore W. Tallmadge was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in line 9, after the words "United States," to insert the words "subject to military bounty-land warrant location;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to issue and deliver to Theodore W. Tallmadge land-scrip by which the said Theodore W. Tallmadge, or his assigns, upon the presentation thereof to the proper officers of the Land Department, shall be entitled to enter 160 acres of the surveyed public lands of the United States subject to military bounty land-warrant location, not mineral or otherwise appropriated, granted to him in lieu of bounty-land warrant numbered 69651, misappropriated by an employé of the United States land office at Stevens' Point, Wis.

Mr. LOGAN. All lands are subject to bounty-land warrant location.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SALARIES OF REGISTERS AND RECEIVERS.

The bill (S. 2401) to classify and fix the salaries of registers and receivers of United States land offices was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, line 4, after the word "moneys," to strike out the remainder of the section in the following words:

And credited to the appropriation for incidental expenses of the several land offices.

So as to make the section read:

That all fees allowed by law to registers and receivers for reducing testimony to writing and for furnishing abstracts from their records and plats or diagrams of townships shall be deposited in the Treasury as public moneys.

Mr. HARRISON. If there is any member of the Committee on Public Lands present I should like to know generally whether the bill is an increase or a decrease of the salary and compensation.

Mr. DOLPH. The bill certainly does not increase the salaries. It substitutes a salary for fees. The salary is regulated by the amount of fees in the office. I think it will probably decrease the compensation, because it will be observed, for instance, that where the earnings are less than $5,000 and more than $4,000, then the salary shall be $2,000.

Mr. LOGAN. Does the bill fix any salary?

Mr. DOLPH. No; it does not fix the salary for any given officer, but it regulates the amount of salary by the earnings of the office. Instead of allowing the officer to retain fees for compensation and a small salary, the fees are to be paid into the Treasury and the officer receives a salary to be fixed and determined by the amount of fees earned in the office.

Mr. WALTHALL. I will state to the Senator from Illinois that the Committee on Public Lands considered the matter, and the conclusion we all reached was that it would be a slight decrease in compensation.

Mr. HARRISON. That is satisfactory. I only wanted to know the general effect of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 3, after the word "Treasury," to strike out the remainder of the section, in the following words:

And be deemed an appropriation to pay for making such copies; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall be authorized to use any portion of this appropriation for piece-work, or for temporary clerk-hire by the day, month, or year, at such rate or rates as he may deem just and fair, not exceeding $1,200 a year.

So as to make the section read:

That the moneys received at the General Land Office as fees for furnishing transcripts of records and plats shall be deposited in the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALTHALL. I desire to call attention to a clerical error in the title. The title reads "to classify and fix the salaries of registers and registers of the United States land offices." It should read "registers and receivers." I propose that the title be amended by striking out the word "registers" where it occurs the second time and inserting the word "receivers."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made in the title.

ANSON RUDD.

The bill (S. 2504) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to Anson Rudd, of the State of Colorado, certain real estate in the county of Fremont, in said State, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to make, execute, and deliver all needful instruments conveying and transferring the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a certain tract of land situate in the county of Fremont, Colorado, to Anson Rudd, being the same tract which Anson Rudd and Harriet Rudd, his wife, conveyed to the United States by general warranty deed, without consideration, dated March 20, 1868.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMS AND STORES TO DAKOTA TERRITORY.

The bill (S. 2249) to authorize the Secretary of War to credit the Territory of Dakota with certain sums for ordnance and ordnance stores issued to said Territory, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BUTLER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

MARIA SYPHAX.

The bill (S. 2517) declaratory of the meaning of the act entitled "An act for the relief of Maria Syphax," was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to construe the act of June 12, 1866, entitled "An act for the relief of Maria Syphax," releasing and confirming to her, her heirs and assigns, the title to a piece of land therein described, being part of the Arlington estate, in the county of Alexandria, Virginia, to operate as a relinquishment to Maria Syphax, her heirs or devisees, of any outstanding title to the land which the United States may have acquired since the date of that act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT ADJUTANT-GENERAL.

The bill (S. 2339) to provide for one additional assistant adjutant-general with the rank of major of cavalry, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section provides that the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may appoint one additional assistant adjutant-general of the Army with the rank of major of cavalry, who shall be entitled to all the benefits of the existing laws relating to officers of that grade in said corps.

Section 2 provides that after such appointment is made the number of assistant adjutant-generals with the rank of major of cavalry shall, when the first vacancy in that grade occurs, be reduced to thirteen, as now, and the additional office of that grade hereby created shall cease.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMS AND STORES TO OREGON AND WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 2035) to authorize the Secretary of War to credit the State of Oregon with the sum of $12,398.55 for ordnance and ordnance stores to be issued to the Territory of Washington on account of said State, in payment for ordnance and ordnance stores borrowed by said State of said Territory during the Nez Percé Indian war of 1877 and 1878, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BUTLER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over under objection.

GENERAL AND LIEUTENANT-GENERAL.

The bill (S. 1964) to repeal a certain portion of section 1094 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that bill pass by until I can look at it. I have never seen the bill before and I want to look at it.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator was in the committee when the bill was agreed to, after it was discussed. It has been only a short time ago.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will look at it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

NEW WHARF AT FORTRESS MONROE.

The bill (S. 1148) providing for the construction of an iron pier at Fortress Monroe, Va., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in lines 3 and 4, after the word "dollars," to insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary;" in line 6, to strike out "an iron pier" and insert "a new wharf;" and after "Virginia," in line 8, to insert "upon plans to be approved by the Secretary of War;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of a new wharf, and improvements to the roadway leading thereto, on the Government reservation at Fortress Monroe, Va., upon plans to be approved by the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion, the title was amended so as to read:

A bill providing for the construction of a new wharf at Fortress Monroe, Va.

ROAD TO CHALMETTE NATIONAL CEMETERY.

The bill (H. R. 3440) making an appropriation to construct a macadamized road from the United States barracks in Saint Bernard Parish, Louisiana, to the national military cemetery at Chalmette, in said parish, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of constructing a macadamized road from the United States barracks in the parish of Saint Bernard, Louisiana, about 1½ miles, to the national military cemetery at Chalmette.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] has submitted an amendment.

The amendment was, in section 1, line 7, after the word "road," to insert "or wagon roadway."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EUSTIS. To make the title correspond with the body of the bill, I move to strike out the word "macadamized" from the title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that change will be made and the original title amended by striking out "macadamized."

J. M'A. WEBSTER.

The bill (S. 1773) for the relief of Lieut. J. McA. Webster, of the Twenty-second Infantry, United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment, after the word "safe," in line 10, to strike out:

And for this loss the board of review finds that the commanding officer was partially responsible, for not providing a secure place in which to deposit the funds intrusted to the care of the quartermaster and commissary.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay Lieut. J. McA. Webster, of the Twenty-second Infantry, United States Army, who was quartermaster and commissary at Fort Lyon, Colo., in January, 1883, the sum of $109.16, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse him for a like amount stolen from him out of an insecure safe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

K. G. BILLINGS.

The bill (H. R. 2242) restoring to the pension-roll the name of K. G. Billings was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to restore to the pension-roll the name of K. G. Billings, of Lancaster County, South Carolina, formerly a soldier in the Mexican war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEXICAN TREATY AWARDS.

The bill (S. 2207) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th of July, 1868," was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over. The Senator who reported it [Mr. EDMUNDS] is not here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

LEAKAGE OF DISTILLED SPIRITS.

The bill (S. 559) for the relief of George F. Roberts, administrator of the estate of William B. Thayer, deceased, surviving partner of Thayer Brothers, and others, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to George F. Roberts, administrator of the estate of William B. Thayer, deceased, surviving partner of Thayer Brothers, the sum of $10,790.32; to Silas Q. Howe, surviving partner of William T. Pate & Co., the sum of $19,662.19; to Henry W. Smith, surviving partner of F. & J. W. Gaff & Co., the sum of $14,062.50, the same being due them for taxes paid upon distilled spirits lost by leakage while stored in a United States bonded warehouse, under the control and in the custody of the collector and inspector of internal revenue for their respective districts (the fifth district of Illinois and the third and fourth districts of Indiana), from July, 1864, to December 31, 1864.

Mr. CULLOM. This seems to be a pretty large sum of money. Is there any report connected with it? If there is I should like to hear the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. ALDRICH. I object to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

R. G. HUSTON & CO.

The bill (S. 2529) for the relief of R. G. Huston & Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. DOLPH. I object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

PROPOSED CONGRESS OF AMERICAN NATIONS.

Mr. FRYE. Order of Business 1100 was passed over on my objection. On consultation with some members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I desire to withdraw the objection and ask that the bill may be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine withdraws the objection made to the consideration of Order of Business No. 1100, and asks that the bill be now considered subject to the rule. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRYE. I simply desire to say that I interposed an objection because there were two or three Senators who desired to make speeches in favor of this bill. One was the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and another the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], but the session is getting so far along that the Committee on Foreign Relations deem it inadvisable to delay the bill, provided it can be passed now, and I presume there is no objection to it. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on Foreign Relations after very careful consideration.

The bill (S. 2362) to promote the political progress and commercial prosperity of the American nations was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF JOHN WIGHTMAN.

The bill (S. 2530) for the relief of the legal representatives of John

Wightman, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The claim of the legal representatives of John Wightman, deceased, for and on account of mail service rendered by him in carrying the United States mails on route No. 3413, from Pittsburgh to Erie, Pa., a distance of 133 miles, three times a week each way, from August 1, 1859, to and including June 30, 1860, at the rate of $9,000 per annum for six times a week each way, is by the bill referred to the Court of Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some reason for that.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Committee on Claims had no trouble whatever with this case. The facts speak for themselves. The assignor of this party had a contract for the usual four years to carry the mails on the route between Erie and Pittsburgh, Pa., commencing in 1857. The contract was for six times a week each way, and the service was entered upon, running through a thickly settled portion of the country, through several shire towns. The session of Congress that ended March 4, 1859, failed to make appropriations for the postal service for the coming fiscal year. The result was that the Postmaster-General issued an order reducing the service on this route to three times a week, which raised of course a great commotion in that section of the country, as they had had a daily service for half a century before, and appeals were made to the Postmaster-General on the subject through Judge Church, I think, who came on as the representative of the people in regard to the matter. The result of the conference was this. The Postmaster-General said: "I have no money to pay you. I recognize the importance of the service; I will do this, provided the contractor is willing to take his chances, I will direct that the mails be delivered by the several postmasters along the route for six times a week service, and in that case you will perform the service and look to Congress for the pay. I have no money to pay you." He said he would do it.

In pursuance of that understanding the postmasters along the route at the different points delivered the mail to the contractor, Mr. Wightman, who was recognized as the contractor, and was the assignee of the original contractor, six times a week, and he performed the service for eleven months to the end of the contract term, but was only paid for performing the service three times a week. The Postmaster-General recommended to Congress in his annual report an appropriation to settle these matters. The appropriation has never been made, and the claimant now comes to Congress and asks to have the matter referred to the Court of Claims for the purpose of ascertaining whether he performed the service under this arrangement, and authorizing payment in case it was performed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire whether this extra service was performed at the request of the Department or was it a voluntary service?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It was approved by the Post-Office Department, and I may say authorized so far as the Department could authorize it, not having money at the time to pay for it. The Postmaster-General directed that the mail be delivered to the contractor six times a week during the term, and also recommended that Congress provide for the payment, but Congress has never done it. It is a very meritorious case in my opinion and in the opinion of every member of the committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Without knowing anything about the merits of the claim, I desire to say——

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It was not extra service, but simply carrying out the service according to the contract, but for which no appropriation was made by Congress. It was a contract made in pursuance of law for this service.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It was service supplementary and a service not authorized by the appropriation. If it is only proposed to refer it to the Court of Claims I shall not interpose any objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to add at the end of the bill:

Deducting therefrom the sum of $375, one month's extra pay received by the claimant.

When this contract was declared forfeited by the Postmaster-General under the law he paid this man one-twelfth of $4,500, a month's extra pay, and the claimant accepted that, and as a matter of course he must have that deducted from any compensation that he may receive under the contract.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Certainly; but that is already allowed in this arrangement, as I understand.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not authorized to be allowed here. There is no provision in this bill which would justify that to be allowed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill these words:

Deducting therefrom the sum of $375, one month's extra pay received by the claimant.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Of course there could not be any objection to the proposed amendment if it were necessary; but this bill, the Senator from Missouri will observe, simply provides that he shall be paid whatever he has not been paid at the contract price for six times a week.

Mr. COCKRELL. The $375 was no part of the contract price. It was a gratuity, that was paid to him in consequence of abrogating the contract, and there is nothing in this bill that would require a deduction of that. He would just make that much clear.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. If the Senator thinks that is necessary, I shall not object.

Mr. COCKRELL. Here is his receipt, and there is not a line in the bill that would authorize the court or the Treasury Department to deduct this sum.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The court would certainly hold that he received that month's pay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I once examined this claim some years ago and reported against it. That was a claim which was to be paid to Mr. Wightman, and the committee came to the conclusion that this was a voluntary service with full knowledge and consent of the Post-Office Department; but the claim then was not proposed to be sent to the Court of Claims for adjustment, but he asked that Congress pay the amount. I think I made a report adverse to that; but this bill simply asks for the privilege of going to the Court of Claims to establish a claim, if he has one, and I do not think there is much objection to that with the provision inserted on the motion of the Senator from Missouri. Therefore I approve of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ARLANTA T. TAYLOR.

A bill (H. R. 7310) granting a pension to Mrs. Arlanta T. Taylor was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that bill be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 16) for the relief of J. A. Wilson, administrator de bonis non of the estate of Gregory Jarratt, deceased;

A bill (S. 24) for the relief of Samuel B. Seat, administrator of Christian Krop, deceased;

A bill (S. 365) for the relief of Martin L. Bundy;

A bill (S. 498) for the relief of George T. Dudley;

A bill (S. 579) granting a franking privilege to Julia D. Grant;

A bill (S. 1352) granting the right of way to the Leavenworth, Northern and Southern Railway Company through the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth;

A bill (S. 2222) to authorize the Cheyenne and Northern Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Russell and Fort Laramie military reservations;

A bill (S. 2073) for the relief of the officers and crew of the light-house tender Lilly and the inspector of the fourteenth United States light-house district; and Joint resolution (S. R. 18) for the relief of the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad Company.

PUBLIC-LAND LAWS.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the preemption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ESTATE OF JOSEPH R. SHANNON.

The bill (S. 396) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Shannon, widow and administratrix of the estate of Joseph R. Shannon, deceased, and to provide for the payment of the loss of the steamboat A. W. Quarrier, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DOLPH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. DOLPH. I withdraw my objection on a statement made to me by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are some papers connected with this case which I desire to present to the Senate when it is brought up. I do not want to delay action on the case, but I want to have an opportunity of looking at the papers and hunting up an affidavit that was made by the claimant in his lifetime before another tribunal in order that I may present them. I do not think the Senate Committee on Claims has ever seen the affidavit that was made by this claimant in another suit, in which he described all the property and all the steamboats he ever owned, and left this out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MONUMENT AT STONY POINT, NEW YORK.

The joint resolution (S. R. 67) authorizing the Secretary of War to erect at Stony Point, New York, a monument was announced as next in order.

Mr. DOLPH. I object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

ASSIGNEES OF ADDISON C. FLETCHER.

The bill (S. 2560) for the relief of Hyland C. Kirk and others, assignees of Addison C. Fletcher, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to refer to the Court of Claims the assignees and owners of letters patent numbered 101604, dated April 5, 1870 (antedated October 5, 1869), for an improvement in adhesive postal and revenue stamps, issued to Addison C. Fletcher and duly assigned, together with the right of recovery and compensation for the use thereof by the United States Government in the collection of revenue on distilled spirits and malt liquors during the years 1868, 1869, 1870, 1871, and 1872.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 17, before the word "use," I move to insert "alleged;" so as to read:

With the right of recovery and compensation for the alleged use thereof by the United States Government.

Mr. HOAR. It strikes me that the better policy would be to pay for the use, the actual use, and not for the use that was alleged. I will not object, however, if the Senator prefers to pay for what the man alleges the Government used.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know that we used it at all.

Mr. HOAR. The bill as drawn by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] only provides for ascertaining what the use actually was. The Senator proposes that the man shall get pay for what he alleges it was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I find, beginning in line 32, this language:

To determine to what extent said stamp was manufactured and used by the Government, and a legal and equitable rate of compensation therefor; finally, to find the aggregate sum or sums to which the several claimants named in this act are equitably entitled as compensation for the use of said stamp, and to report their said findings to Congress.

This bill goes upon the theory that the Government used these stamps and that these parties are entitled to compensation for that use. The point I make is that I want that question determined by the court; and in order that I may have more time to look at it, I object to the further consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

MAJ. JAMES BELGER.

The bill (S. 1580) for the relief of Maj. James Belger was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that pass over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CONFINEMENT OF INEBRIATES.

The bill (S. 2545) to provide for the confinement of inebriates in the Government Hospital for the Insane was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 3, after the word "oath," to insert "of either parent, brother, sister, son, daughter, or guardian, or commissioner, or justice of the peace of the District of Columbia;" and after the word "person," at the end of line 5, to insert "actually resident;" so as to read:

That whenever by petition, under oath, of either parent, brother, sister, son, daughter, or guardian, or commissioner, or justice of the peace of the District of Columbia, any person actually resident in the District of Columbia shall be alleged to be an habitual drunkard, incapable of taking care of himself or herself, or his or her property, the supreme court of said District, in special term, shall have the power, in its discretion, on such preliminary examination or inquiry as it may think proper to make ex parte, to issue a warrant to the marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia to arrest and bring the person so charged before such court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Is that bill now on its passage?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is now open to amendment. The amendments of the committee are being considered. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, after the word "insane," in line 21, to insert:

When such petition is filed by any person other than a commissioner or justice of the peace, the court shall cause notice of the filing thereof to be given to the attorney of the United States for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to attend such hearing in the public interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That no person shall be admitted to said Hospital for the Insane under the operations of this act who shall appear to the court on such hearing to have come to or have been brought into the District for the purpose of being admitted therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I see that this bill has very humane provisions so as not to prevent wounding the self-respect of the person charged more than is necessary by allowing the proceedings to be voluntary on his part in certain cases; and in accordance with that design I move an amendment, in line 11, after the words "ex parte," to insert "to issue an order of notice to such person to appear before said court, or in its discretion;" so as to read:

On such preliminary examination or inquiry as it may think proper to make ex parte to issue an order of notice to such person to appear before said court, or in its discretion to issue a warrant to the marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia to arrest and bring the person so charged before such court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I was not in when the bill was called up. I was a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia when this bill was passed upon by that committee, and as the bill was passed upon at that time it provided for taking up anybody on the accusation of any number of people from a grandfather down to a mother-in-law, and confining him or her in what may be called a hospital, but I can not understand the distinction myself between a jail and a hospital if you are confined in it.

I opposed the bill in that committee, and I opposed it on the ground that the Constitution of the United States gives a man the right of trial by a jury of his peers before his body can be taken and confined, whether it be in a hospital or a jail.

Sir, this is a summary proceeding that I know meets a kind of ideal sentiment in the District of Columbia, to which I am at all times and under all circumstances unwilling to yield. I say, give the Constitution of the United States full application. Tell me what right you have to take up a drunkard on these streets and confine him without a trial by jury. If any Senator in this body owing somebody $20 should be summoned to appear he would possibly plead that he could not be taken out of here on civil process, but at the same time he would plead what he would call his inalienable, his constitutional right of trial by jury.

Now, sir, I have objected to it until I have gotten sick; I have objected to all these innovations upon the fundamental principles of this Government until I have gotten tired.
